Pro-life official critical of study urging legalization of abortion

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Across the globe abortion rates are similar whether the procedure is legal or not, said a new study, and its researchers stress that illegal abortions are a threat to "women's health and survival."

Deirdre McQuade, director of planning and information in the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities, was critical of the study's emphasis on the safety of legal abortion and said its "methodology was flawed."

Published in the Oct. 13 issue of a British medical journal, The Lancet, the study was conducted by researchers at the Guttmacher Institute, a nonprofit group based in New York, and the World Health Organization in Geneva.

GREENSBORO — A summer mission trip to Ecuador opened the eyes of a group of local Catholics to the needs of many.

Eleven adult and Life Teen youth parishioners from St. Paul the Apostle Church, as well as then-parochial vicar Oblate Father Paul Dechant, visited their sister parish, the Parish of the Child Jesus, in Manta, Ecuador, for nine days in July.

There, St. Paul the Apostle Church sponsors 100 schoolchildren through financial support and letters of friendship to them and their families.

CHARLOTTE — As part of the introduction to the revised diocesan guidelines for pastoral councils, two training sessions will be offered in November at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory.

The training sessions will feature two nationally noted speakers in the field of pastoral councils and will be offered to all clergy and lay members of pastoral councils.

"The role of the council is to advise the pastor on pastoral matters in dealing with the dynamics of parish life," said George Cobb, director of planning and research for the Diocese of Charlotte.

"The primary work of any pastoral council should be the

TIMELESS INSPIRATION

A statue of Mary with the baby Jesus under the title of "La Conquistadora" is seen in September in the Cathedral Basilica of St. Francis of Assisi in Santa Fe, N.M. The statue was brought from Spain in 1625 by Spanish conquistadors and Franciscans to introduce the Catholic faith to the New World.

New Mexico statue brought by conquistadors still inspires Catholics

SANTA FE, N.M. (CNS) — Little did the Spanish conquistadors and Franciscans who came to what is now New Mexico in 1625 realize that the same wooden statue of Mary they brought with them to help instill the Catholic faith would still be a symbol of love and devotion today.

Originally called the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the statue is little more than 3 feet high, made of wood and hollow in the middle — so it might fit atop a staff when displayed on horseback — but it continues to inspire the faithful as La Conquistadora.

Her history is interwoven with the Catholic faith in Santa Fe, particularly among the Spanish settlers' descendants who have lived in the area for generations.

Every year, pilgrims carry the statue in a procession from the Cathedral Basilica of St. Francis of Assisi, where it resides, to Rosario Chapel several blocks away for "Fiesta de Santa Fe."

At the end of the festivities, which include a Mass, it is returned in a procession to the cathedral.

The chapel was built on the spot where Don Diego de Vargas prayed to an image of La Conquistadora that Santa Fe be peacefully resettled following the 1680 Pueblo Indian revolt against the Spanish settlers.

"In 1692, de Vargas and his soldiers prayed to La Conquistadora that if they successfully resettled Santa Fe, he would honor her with vespers, Mass and a sermon," said Bob Martinez, assistant major-domo of Rosario Chapel.

In 1712, the city of Santa Fe issued a proclamation to officially recognize the devotion and commemorate the event with a re-enactment as well as a reading of the proclamation. The chapel was built in 1807.

Martinez, born and raised a Catholic, said his life changed for the better a year after he became part of an honorary court of men called "de Vargas and his 'cuadrilla,'" which means band or team. They re-enact the return to Santa Fe of de Vargas and his company in a ceremony.

Martinez also was taken with La Conquistadora when he participated for the first time in an honor guard called "Los Caballeros de Vargas," a group that protects the statue during celebrations.

Martinez also belongs to a local confraternity whose members care for La Conquistadora; another member is Teresita Garcia, a sacristan who dresses the statue in outfits to mark special occasions.

"It is so incredible for me to play a role as sacristan in the history represented by the mother of God. My faith has grown," she said.

"We have to realize that through her grace we come to know Father, Son and Holy Spirit," said Garcia. "How can something like this not change your life?"

"What makes it so special to me is being able to participate in the same devotion to her as my ancestors did almost 400 years ago. We are very, very fortunate," Garcia said.

Women religious form global network to combat human trafficking

ROME (CNS) — Women religious from around the world have formed a global network aimed at combating human trafficking.

More than 30 nuns from 26 nations launched the initiative called the "International Network of Religious Against Trafficking in Persons" during a conference on human trafficking Oct. 15-19 in Rome.

The U.S. Department of State funded the conference and training seminar, which were organized by the U.S. Embassy to the Vatican and the Italian Union of Major Superiors. The International Organization for Migration helped design a program for workers to assist women who are forced into prostitution flee and get off the streets.

Once upon a time, the notion of human trafficking "was a kind of global family secret," said Msgr. Pietro Parolin, Vatican undersecretary of state.

But now, he said, thanks to public awareness campaigns, more people know about this $12 billion business, which in 2005 was built on the forced labor of at least 12 million people.

However, he expressed hope that greater attention will express more decisive responses to the problem.

"The scourge of human trafficking is a critical (issue) for the Holy See," he said, giving the Vatican's full support for "the increasing numbers of consecrated persons engaged in this fight."

Sister Susan Maloney, of the Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, told participants that women religious "have committed to take on the great moral evil of human trafficking," which she said is the "great ministry of the 21st century."

Numerous anti-trafficking training programs coordinated by the Italian Union of Major Superiors, the largest conference of women religious in the world, have been held in different parts of the world since 2002.

FROM THE VATICAN

North American College in Rome experiences enrollment boost

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Pontifical North American College in Rome experienced an increase in its enrollment of seminarians as it welcomed a freshmen class of 52 students this year.

Now the total number of students enrolled in the U.S. seminary is 185, the most in the past 40 years, said Msgr. James F. Checchio, the college's rector.

While the upturn reflects U.S. national trends, the rector said enrollment also has been boosted because more dioceses are sending their men to Rome for preparation for the priesthood.

"There are 14 new dioceses that have men here that did not last year," including many dioceses from the Midwest and the South, he said.

The college also has "a pretty good number" — 74 priests, who are pursuing graduate degrees in Rome and living at its Casa Santa Maria, he said. "A few years ago (that number) had been down to 57."

Aside from boasting greater numbers, the college's higher quality students are also something he is proud of, Msgr. Checchio said. He said they are more committed to working hard, "making themselves holy and more learned about the teachings of the church."

"They want to make a difference in people's lives and how people see the church, the mission of the church in modern society," he said.

Meanwhile, this was the first year the college has ordained a priest from Australia.

Several Australians are living and studying at the college this year.

Because the Australian bishops do not have a national college in Rome and they liked the American college's reputation, the Australian bishops asked permission from the U.S. bishops a few years to enroll their seminarians, he said.

Top U.S. church officials meet pope, discuss planned visit

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Top officials of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops met privately with Pope Benedict XVI Oct. 18 for a wide-ranging discussion about the church in the United States, including the pope's planned visit to the U.S. in the spring.

Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., conference president, said the discussion about the trip was "just in general."

Beyond the announced papal stop in New York, Bishop Skylstad said he could not provide specifics about the trip because "the details have not been nailed down yet."

He did say, however, that he expected the trip to be brief, in keeping with Pope Benedict's practice.

Bishop Skylstad was joined at the meeting by Chicago Cardinal Francis E. George, conference vice president, and Msgr. David J. Malloy, general secretary of the conference. The conference officers usually meet twice a year with the heads of Vatican offices to discuss issues of common concern, and they meet the pope during their October trip.

The three U.S. bishops' conference officers had about 20 minutes alone with Pope Benedict, who is "always very affable and very gentle," Bishop Skylstad said.

The officers told the pope a little about the restructuring and downsizing of the U.S. bishops' conference, said Bishop Skylstad, and "about the political responsibility statement we are working on," a statement into which he said the bishops put a lot of time and energy in preparation for U.S. elections.

The Spokane bishop said the officers thanked Pope Benedict for including two U.S. archbishops among the 23 churchmen he named cardinals Oct. 17.

World's religious leaders explore differences, common hope for peace

NAPLES, Italy (CNS) — When 300 religious leaders gathered for a three-day meeting along the Naples' seashore, they focused on a common hope for peace while exploring some of their differences.

At the Oct. 21-23 interreligious dialogue for peace, sponsored by the Rome-based Sant'Egidio Community, they presented their own teachings, asked what the others taught and offered each other clarifications.

At an Oct. 22 discussion about sacred Scriptures, Cardinal Walter Kasper, the Vatican official in charge of dialogue with other Christians and with the world's Jewish communities, said he thought Muslims approached their sacred book, the Quran, differently from how Christians and Jews approached the Bible.

Christians and Jews, he said, believe the Bible was divinely inspired but written by humans and must be interpreted.

"Isn't the Quran considered not to be inspired but to have been dictated by God?" he asked.

Mohammad Sammak, secretary-general of the Lebanese Committee for Muslim-Christian Dialogue, told Cardinal Kasper, "We do not believe the Quran was dictated, but that it was revealed to the prophet Mohammed and was written down."

He said Muslims believe the Quran "is sacred, holy, unchanging and absolute, but understanding it is a human act and, like all human acts, the understanding can be wrong."

Sammak said problems occur "when some Muslims do not differentiate between the holy text and the unholy interpretation of the text. This leads to problems within Islam itself."

Holy Angels receives grant for horticulture therapy program

BELMONT — Holy Angels in Belmont recently received a mini-grant to help build raised garden beds, which will be accessible by those with handicaps.

Lynne Reyburn, director of donor relations for Holy Angels, accepted the $500 check from Truliant Federal Credit Union at its McAdenville office Sept. 6.

Founded by the Sisters of Mercy in 1956, Holy Angels is a nonprofit organization that provides residential services and programs to children and adults with varying degrees of mental retardation and physical disabilities.

Truliant is a nonprofit financial institution that provides affordable financial services to its member-owners.

The Truliant Community Mini-Grant Program was created to assist nonprofit agencies with overhead expenses.

More than 60 community and faith-based agencies applied for grants; Holy Angels was one of 17 local agencies to receive an award.

The mini-grant will help fund the construction of two raised garden beds for Holy Angels' horticulture therapy program.

The program provides learning opportunities and sensory experiences for participating Holy Angels residents. The raised beds with attached trellis will be built just outside the Holy Angels greenhouse. Residents will assist with growing summer and fall fruits and vegetables.

"The new beds will offer greater possibilities for the residents to participate in the growing process," said Gaye Dimmick, Holy Angels' creative arts and horticulture therapist.

"By being outdoors, the residents will have the opportunity to use different types of gardening tools for weeding and cultivating the soil. Because these beds will be elevated, the residents will be better able to reach the plants to water and care for them," said Dimmick.

Parish library dedicated in memory of faithful parishioner

CHARLOTTE — Msgr. John McSweeney, pastor of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, recently dedicated the parish library to the memory of a parishioner who helped make it a reality.

The library was dedicated Sept. 23 to the memory of Claire Cole, who passed away in March 2007 after a long illness.

Parishioners and members of Cole's family attended the dedication in recognition of her fortitude and leadership.

When Msgr. McSweeney envisioned a parish library, it was Cole who helped bring it to fruition.

Cole served as chair of the parish library committee. She gathered together a group of retired parishioners interested in library science to order items and materials for the library.

The group organized a book dedication program and solicited books from parishioners to help stock the library.

"When we have doubts or questions, we ask, 'What would Claire do?'" said Pat White, parish coordinator of volunteers and communications. "She is sorely missed."

The parish library has become a thriving part of parish life, according to White. More than 4,000 books and media items are available and 2,500 or more have been circulated. The children's section is especially popular.

"The library has become an important part of the ministry of the Word and faith formation," said White.

Scouting out faith

Office of Youth Ministry connecting with Catholic Girl Scouts

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE —There are hundreds of badges a Girl Scout can earn — from computers and canoeing to patriotism and sewing. But what many Catholic Scouts may not know is that they can also earn awards for practicing their Catholic faith.

The diocesan Office of Youth Ministry is forming a committee in connection with Catholic Girl Scouts in the Diocese of Charlotte to let them know there are religious recognition awards available.

"We want to make sure every Catholic Girl Scout knows that we are a resource for them," said Peg Ruble, assistant director for diocesan youth ministry.

The Office of Youth Ministry committee's first major task is to find Catholic Scouts. There are only a few troops based at Catholic churches in the Diocese of Charlotte, but local leaders believe there may be many Catholic Scouts who belong to troops that meet in schools, Protestant churches or other locations.

"We're inviting people to serve on this committee, hoping to represent as many of the diocese's 10 vicariates as possible," said Terri Jarina, a committee member and parishioner at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte.

"We would also like to hear from any Catholic church that has a Girl Scout troop," said Ruble.

The Catholic religious recognition program is administered by the National Catholic Committee for Girl Scouts and Camp Fire, under the direction of the National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry. Through this program, Scouts for all ages — from 5-year-old Daisies to adult leaders — can earn awards through exploring and becoming more involved in their Catholic faith.

The program is designed to complement the catechesis already taking place at Catholic churches and schools. Each award is geared to a specific age level and is designed to increase a Scout's knowledge of her Catholic faith.

In the past five years, 20 such religious recognition awards have been given out in the Diocese of Charlotte. With this new outreach effort, Ruble hopes that number will increase if more Catholic Scouts know the awards are available.

"These awards strengthen young women's faith and help them live out their faith and values," said Ruble.

Bishops' document to offer new guidance on Catholics' political role

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Rejecting a political climate based on "powerful interests, partisan attacks, sound bites and media hype," the U.S. bishops call Catholics to "a different kind of political engagement" in a document to be voted on during their fall general meeting Nov. 12-15 in Baltimore.

That engagement must be "shaped by the moral convictions of well-formed consciences and focused on the dignity of every human being, the pursuit of the common good and the protection of the weak and vulnerable," they said.

The 37-page "Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship: A Call to Political Responsibility From the Catholic Bishops of the United States" was developed by seven committees of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and must be approved by two-thirds of the USCCB membership.

The bishops also are to vote on a shortened version of the text, designed for use as a parish bulletin insert.

In the longer document, the bishops admit that "Catholics may feel politically disenfranchised, sensing that no party and too few candidates fully share the church's comprehensive commitment to the dignity of the human person."

"As Catholics, we should be guided more by our moral convictions than by our attachment to a political party or interest group," the draft document says.

"When necessary, our participation should help transform the party to which we belong; we should not let the party transform us in such a way that we neglect or deny fundamental moral truths," it says.

The draft is part of a series of documents that have been issued before every presidential election for more than 30 years.

But the 2007 version underwent a wider consultation at the committee level and is the first to come before the full body of bishops. In past years, the documents were approved by the Administrative Committee, made up of the executive officers of the USCCB, elected committee chairmen and elected regional representatives.

Weighty issues

Although the draft document outlines a wide variety of policy positions taken by the bishops on domestic and international issues, it makes clear that not all issues carry equal importance.

"There are some things we must never do, as individuals or as a society, because they are always incompatible with love of God and neighbor," the document says, citing in particular abortion, euthanasia, human cloning, stem-cell research involving the destruction of human embryos and "violations of human dignity such as racism, torture, genocide and the targeting of noncombatants in acts of terror or war."

The bishops warn against "two temptations in public life (that) can distort the church's defense of human life and dignity."

"The first is a moral equivalence that makes no ethical distinctions between different kinds of issues involving human life and dignity," they say. "The direct and intentional destruction of innocent human life is ... not just one issue among many."

But it is also wrong to misuse "these necessary moral distinctions as a way of dismissing or ignoring other serious threats to human life and dignity," the draft document says.

Although there might be "principled debate" about the best approach on issues such as health care, racism, unjust war, the death penalty and immigration, "this does not make them optional concerns or permit Catholics to dismiss or ignore church teaching on these important issues," the bishops say.

Pro-abortion politicians

The draft document does not address a topic raised during the 2004 presidential campaign — giving Communion to Catholic politicians who support keeping abortion legal.

Archbishop Raymond L. Burke of St. Louis already has said he would not give Communion to former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, a Catholic and the leading Republican candidate for president, because of Giuliani's support for abortion.

The document says that "those who knowingly, willingly and directly support public policies or legislation that undermine fundamental moral principles cooperate with evil."

"If a Catholic were to vote for a candidate who supports a policy involving intrinsic evil, such as abortion, precisely because of that position, the Catholic would be guilty of formal cooperation in evil," it adds.

"In some cases, if a Catholic who fully accepts fundamental principles such as the right to life were to vote for a candidate despite the candidate's opposing position but because of other proportionate reasons, their vote would be considered 'remote material cooperation' and can be permitted only if there are indeed proportionate reasons," it says.

All Catholics "have a responsibility to discern carefully which public policies are morally sound," the draft document says.

"Catholics may choose different ways to respond to compelling social problems, but we cannot differ on our moral obligation to help build a more just and peaceful world through morally acceptable means, so that the weak and vulnerable are protected and human rights and dignity are defended," it adds.

The draft will be presented to the bishops on behalf of seven committees — domestic policy, international policy, pro-life activities, communications, doctrine, education and migration.

Pro-life official critical of study urging legalization of abortion

According to McQuade, the researchers defined "safe abortions as those that meet legal requirements in countries with permissive laws."

"But by this unusual definition, legal abortions are safe even if they kill women as well as their unborn children," she said in an Oct. 12 statement.

"The authors then say that illegal abortions are harmful — even when women experience no medical complications — because women have to violate the law. This is a closed semantic circle into which no fact about real-life women can intrude," McQuade added.

The pro-life official was also critical of an editorial in the same issue of The Lancet that said worldwide abortion rates have increased because of the United States' Mexico City policy which does not allow federal funds to go to agencies that perform and promote abortion as a family planning method in developing countries.

She said the editorial noted that the total number of abortions decreased from 1995, when she noted that the policy was not in effect, until 2003, after it was reinstated.

According to the study, "Induced Abortion: Estimated Rates and Trends Worldwide," the number of abortions worldwide has decreased from 46 million in 1995 — the last time the Guttmacher Institute conducted a similar survey — to 42 million in 2003.

The researchers note however that the previous study did not have as much data from countries where abortion was illegal as it did in the current study.

For the study the researchers used national data from countries where abortion is legal. In regions where abortion is illegal, they used data from hospital admissions for abortion complications, interviews with local family planning officials and surveys of women.

"Rather than pitting women and their children against each other, we need to stand in solidarity with both and focus on improving the quality of global health care."

— Deirdre McQuade

The new study notes that abortions are performed in one of five pregnancies across the world and that the rate varies widely in different regions.

Although the abortion rate was high in Eastern Europe — 105 abortions per every 100 live births — the rate is dropping as better contraception becomes available, researchers said.

The study also says that 20 million abortions "considered unsafe" were performed each year and that 67,000 women worldwide die each year from abortion complications, primarily in countries where the procedure is illegal.

"Lost in the authors' ideological fog is the fact that abortion always kills; legal or illegal, it sometimes also kills women, especially when they are poor and have a terrible health care system," said McQuade, noting that promoting more abortions would not change these figures.

"Rather than pitting women and their children against each other, we need to stand in solidarity with both and focus on improving the quality of global health care," she added.

Training sessions emphasize mission of pastoral councils

building of a single community of faith," said Cobb, who provides pastoral council training in the diocese.

"That community has many faces — comprised of people with different backgrounds, charisms, experiences, ethnicities and native languages — but it is the mission of the pastor, working with the council, to bring them together as one unified body," he said.

"Members of the pastoral council are the pastor's bridge to the community, keeping the pastor informed of the concerns and events affecting his flock," said Cobb.

"The collaboration of pastor and council enables, as Pope John Paul II said in his 2001 apostolic letter 'Novo Millennio Ineunte' ('At the Beginning of the New Millennium'), the 'proclamation of Christ to reach people, mold communities and have a deep and incisive influence in bringing Gospel values to bear in society and culture,'" he said.

Cobb said the new guidelines, which soon will be promulgated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis, provide clarification on the role of parish commissions within the parish and on the parish staffs' relationship with lay councils and commissions.

The new guidelines reflect the changing role of pastoral councils in the 21st century, he said.

Each facilitator of next month's training sessions has firsthand experience in working with pastoral councils, and will therefore be able to provide valuable insights to the participants, said Cobb.

Msgr. James Gaston, a priest of the Diocese of Greensburg, Pa., will facilitate the training session for priests and deacons Nov. 15. He has served in numerous parishes and special ministries, including diocesan education administration.

Msgr. Gaston oversaw and supported the writing of "New Wine, New Wineskins," the Greensburg diocesan guidelines for parish pastoral councils published in the mid-1990s. Currently, he is collaborating with Sister Brenda Hermann, member of the Missionary Servants of the Most Blessed Trinity, on a book that addresses the foundation and focus of parish pastoral councils.

Sister Hermann will lead the session for lay members of pastoral councils Nov. 17. Sister Hermann has worked with pastoral council development in parishes and dioceses since 1986.

The revised guidelines will be available in English and Spanish at the training classes, as well as on the diocesan Web site at www.charlottediocese.org/parish.html after Nov. 17.

Mission to Ecuador benefits all involved

of their children would have no hope of attending school," said Kaitlyn Sanders, a student at Duke University in Durham, who made her second parish mission trip to Ecuador.

"For some of these kids, their only meal of the day is the one they receive from the soup kitchens we support," said Sanders.

Aid from St. Paul the Apostle Church helps the Parish of the Child Jesus run three local kitchens, where the mission group volunteered to help feed hundreds of people. They also assisted on the farm where the food for the kitchens is grown.

"The primary purpose of the kitchens ... is to serve nutritious meals to the children and the elderly in the community," said Deria Foster Moore, 80, who acquired the nickname "Abuela" (Grandmother) by the locals during the trip.

"The biggest culture shock, and consequently the most difficult to adjust to, was seeing firsthand the extreme poverty that plagues most areas of Ecuador," said Ashley Dischinger, a student at Elon University.

Manta is the fifth most populated city in this South American, predominantly Catholic country. The Parish of the Child Jesus consists of a church and 16 neighborhood chapels, served by three priests and volunteers.

St. Paul the Apostle Church established a "sister parish" relationship with the Parish of the Child Jesus in December 2001 to help provide financial and spiritual support.

While Manta has one of the most solid city economies in Ecuador, many of its residents live in cramped one- or two-room houses with limited electricity.

Some of the homes seen by St. Paul the Apostle Church members were water damaged and had only one or two beds for entire families.

"Families are considered lucky if they have running water," said Dischinger. "It is rare to find anyone who possesses a car, motorbike or any other form of transportation. Most can barely afford to feed and clothe their families."

Prior to the trip, the parish sent funds toward the construction of three two-story houses for families in need.

"In the mornings we would visit the building sites, help with the construction and visit with the families," said Marty Kelly, a parishioner of St. Paul the Apostle Church.

One family of seven lived in a two-bedroom bamboo shack, with the five children sleeping in one bed.

"It is a living situation that would make most Americans cringe; yet this is the unfortunate norm for many in Manta," said Dischinger.

"It was a very sobering experience to see the homes these families were living in," said Sanders.

"It also helped us to realize the difference we — the community at St. Paul's — are making by building these families new, sturdy, two-story cane houses with tin roofs," she said.

"For some of these kids, their only meal of the day is the one they receive from the soup kitchens we support."

— Kaitlyn Sanders

During last year's mission trip, Sanders and other Life Teen members from St. Paul the Apostle Church helped to build part of a local family's house. During this year's trip, Sanders was pleased to see the family had completed the work on the house.

"Words cannot describe how happy I was to see this deserving family in a wonderful new home that we were able to help them build," said Sanders.

Faith and spirit

Dischinger noted that although the residents of Manta lived in extreme poverty, they were also some of the happiest people she had ever met.

"In the absence of material possessions, everything is a celebration to them," she said.

"I do admire their optimism and emphasis on the importance of both family and faith. From daily meals to daily Masses, they rejoice in the company of loved ones — something many Americans could learn from their example."

During Sunday Mass, "the pews brimmed over with worshippers," said Moore.

"Whether they sang or recited the responses, they did it with great enthusiasm and spirituality," she said. "After Mass, the parishioners nearly mobbed their revered priests as they crowded around them to have their water, statues and beads blessed."

The local parishioners hosted a party for the mission group and the families supported by St. Paul the Apostle Church. Local youths performed traditional Ecuadorian dancing.

"They tried to teach us to salsa," said Kelly. "We were not very successful at it, but we all had a great time trying."

"It was easy to accept these peaceful, supportive, loving and generous families as our new friends," said Moore.

In addition to helping those in need, members of the mission trip felt they, too, were helped by the experience.

"I have gained a new appreciation for everything that I am so fortunate to have, from my health to my education," said Dischinger.

"Ultimately, it is not about feeling pity for the poor or guilt for what I do have," she said. "It is about being thankful that I have the opportunity to use what I have to give real hope to those who most deserve it."

Moore is hoping to raise funds to help renovate one of the soup kitchens.

"My secondary goal ... is for everyone to experience that peaceful, happy Ecuadorian spirit, which continues to fill my 'Abuela' heart," she said.

Authors of three books offer parenting ideas, old and new

REVIEWED BY VICKI LOPEZ-KALEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

A good book on parenting not only gives practical ideas for raising responsible kids but helps parents to find in the author an ally, a mentor and a guide in their own development as parents.

Three new books feature unique styles of parenting that may or may not fit every reader.

"The Year & Our Children: Catholic Family Celebrations for Every Season" by Mary Reed Newland is a reissue of a 1956 publication by Sophia Institute Press, a publishing company that prides itself on "restoring man's knowledge of eternal truth."

Newland believes that parents can and should take responsibility for passing on religious values and traditions to their children at home and not rely only on the parish school or school of religion.

She offers experience, resources and motivation for parents who want to explore with their children the deep meaning of the liturgical year.

Stories of the saints, details about Advent wreaths, Lent and Easter, blessings, prayers and Scriptures are presented with enthusiasm and attention to detail. For this and for her passion, the book is quite valuable.

Writing in the mid '50s, Newland is steeped in many church traditions practiced before the liturgical renewal of the Second Vatican Council.

The publishers only occasionally insert an explanation of terms we no longer use in the liturgical year but many are left to the reader for an update such as rogation days, ember days and prayers at the foot of the altar.

The wording of her prayers for the home is of an older style, although very reverent.

While Newland models compassionate and loving parenting, her frequent mention of sin, guilt and hell in conversation with her children may make some of today's parents feel uncomfortable.

If one is willing to overlook these dated aspects of the book, it offers many timeless stories, values and fun Catholic traditions for today's families.

In "The Answer: A 'Change Your Heart' Parenting Book," author Ann Marie Hassett finds herself overwhelmed by parenthood and searches prayerfully for a way out of her confusion and lack of control of her children, her house and her family life.

Without the benefit of self-help books or counsel, she turns to prayer and Scripture, quoting her favorite passages often.

In the beginning of her account she is extremely hard on herself, to the point of seeking out an appropriate penance for her mistakes as a parent.

By the end of her story the reader may come to admire her sense of responsibility and her efforts to listen to her family and to her perceptions of God's guidance which give some simple, but transforming ways to make changes.

Although all parents may not take her approach, we may also find encouragement as she relates ways to slowly transform her own prayer life, her connection to her husband, and many of the problem behaviors of her children.

As stated in the preface, this is a valuable "story of how we ask God to come into our chaotic family and how he showed us a new way to love."

In "No More Jellyfish, Chickens or Wimps: Raising Secure, Assertive Kids in a Tough World," Paul Coughlin argues that many parents, in a sincere effort to help their children, give them too much and expect too little.

Offering a new understanding of the meekness of Jesus, Coughlin blames good people of faith for teaching so much about a "kind" Jesus that we forget to teach about the "courageous" Jesus.

He urges parents to take more responsibility in giving kids a strong moral backbone and the courage to stand up for what is right.

Offering practical ways to turn around this trend for our own children, Coughlin encourages us to develop more of Jesus' strength of character.

Coughlin offers examples of moral fortitude, justice, loyalty, honor, humor and fidelity in Jesus, the letters of Paul and 20th-century role models such as former prisoner of war U.S. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Fritz Graebe, a Christian in Nazi Germany.

Tuned in to modern-day parenting, Coughlin applies courage and other virtues to the issues of TV violence, bullying, child predators and injustices that call for Christians to be proactive rather than passive in the face of unfairness of any kind.

This book offers much food for thought and discussion for mothers, fathers and church leaders who want to build strong families.

On a sultry Indian summer night we are walking the dog of an ailing friend. Ordinarily we enjoy these little nocturnal jaunts as our canine companion is altogether charming, and we are glad to get a little more exercise and a welcome opportunity to compare notes at the end of a busy day.

Tonight though, we are miserable. Not only are we tired and the air humid and hot, but recent plentiful rains have raised another bumper crop of mosquitoes. They fill the night with their predatory buzzing.

A neighbor watching from the air-conditioned comfort of their living room might wonder if we are afflicted with some rare and particularly violent nervous disorder.

Shuffling jerkily along the darkened paths of the neighborhood, we wave our hands crazily in the dark. Our heads bob and weave like addled prize fighters battling ghosts.

We slap our arms and the backs of our necks and even our faces. When we land a telling blow and slap one of these micro-vampires in mid sting, we show each other our blood-flecked hands with the grim pride of the doomed.

I hate mosquitoes, I think bitterly. At best, they're an intense irritant; at worst, vectors for yellow fever, malaria, avian flu and a host of other life-threatening plagues. What was God thinking, I wonder, between slaps and jerks of the head.

In Sunday's first reading, the writer of Wisdom praises God: "You love all things that are, and loathe nothing that you have made."

I remember the mosquitoes. I remember the human aptitude for folly and cruelty, our vulnerability to ignorance and heartbreak.

In those words of praise, I glimpse the vast difference between us and God, whose infinite capacity to see beauty and goodness in every created thing is cause for life-saving hope and heart-bursting joy.

Questions:

Where — in other people or myself — is there goodness and value and beauty that I might be overlooking? What about myself or other people do I need God's help to value?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"But you spare all things, because they are yours, O Lord and lover of souls, for your imperishable spirit is in all things!" (Wisdom 11:26-12:1)

Foundation says its pro-life ads having effect on intended audience

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Unless you're watching daytime talk shows or soap operas, late-night or late-late-night television or some of the most basic cable channels, you might not have seen commercials with a pro-life message sponsored by the Vitae Caring Foundation.

The foundation buys commercial time from local stations in selected U.S. cities for just short periods of time.

But the impact of their ads on their intended audience — women who may be facing a troubled pregnancy — has been measurable in both the upsurge in calls made to local crisis pregnancy centers and the decline in the number of abortions performed in those areas.

The ads, in both English and Spanish, are generally shot with a soft focus and feature a woman who remarks about the quality of life she received and is able to pass on, or some fact about abortion designed to make the female viewer think about the fact's ramifications in her own life.

They include an 800-number for a pregnancy resource center.

Moral theologian Pia Solenni, who has been working since early 2006 with the Atlanta-based foundation on its TV campaign, said she had seen the ads before she started collaborating on them.

"I just loved the ads. They weren't shock-jock ads. They weren't graphic in-your-face type ads. They were just very engaging ads," Solenni said.

"I knew they put a lot of money into the research that generated the ads," Solenni said, adding, "I think nonprofits could be encouraged to spend their money as carefully as possible."

One ad shows a woman firefighter at the scene of a blaze, noting how her mother saved her life when she could not have had an abortion, and now she is able to save others' lives in her job.

That ad, Solenni said, "is a little like 'What a Wonderful Life'" that raises the question of "what would life have been like if you had never been born? For a firefighter, (the question is) who would have been there to save that child?"

Because of the research conducted prior to the commercials' production, these ads really resonate with the feelings these women are having.

They call the 800 number and they get connected with a pregnancy resource center," Solenni said.

"One caller said, 'I felt just like the woman in that ad,'" she said.

Thomas Grenchik, executive director of the Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, can vouch for the ad campaign's effectiveness.

Years ago, when Grenchik was the director of the pro-life office in the Archdiocese of Washington, the Vitae Caring Foundation announced it would like to sponsor a series of ads on Washington-area TV stations.

Grenchik said pro-life officials looked at the ads that were offered and suggested two of them to use for the campaign, but the foundation "had a donor" and in the end "the donor won," and two different ads were chosen.

One, he recalled, was acceptable, but "the other was so hokey, so soap opera-y, we said that nobody would ever respond to it."

"But they had their research," Grenchik continued, "and they used that one ad. And it generated a gazillion calls."

The ad's target, he said, was African-American women who thought they might be pregnant. When it aired during the daytime soaps, "it flowed right in with the story line of the soap opera they were watching," Grenchik said.

Solenni told CNS that oftentimes "someone else sees the ads and they call and get the information and they pass it on" to a pregnant woman they know.

Solenni expressed amazement at "the long staying power of the ads. People were writing down the number when they saw it — the ad — and calling six weeks after the (ad) campaign finished."

For someone to "keep track of that piece of paper" weeks later, she said, shows "a kind of stick-to-itiveness" that "anybody who's behind this product would love."

She added the "overwhelmingly positive response" to the ads "really reinforces the fact that women who have abortions feel they have no choice. Most women don't even know they have options, resources within their own communities."

"They say we have more pregnancy resource centers now than abortion clinics," said Solenni.

Vatican Museums shows art works inspired by visions of Apocalypse

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In an unusual exhibit, the Vatican Museums has assembled 100 art works inspired by the New Testament vision of the Apocalypse.

While the paintings, statues and engravings depict some catastrophic scenes, the emphasis is on hope and the victory of good over evil.

In that sense, the exhibit takes a page from Pope Benedict XVI's audience talks last year, in which he said the Book of Revelation — also known as the Apocalypse — should not be read as a frightening warning of imminent destruction, but as an encouraging Christian vision.

The images unveiled at the Vatican Oct. 18 include ancient and modern interpretations of scenes from the Book of Revelation.

The text is believed to have been written by St. John the Apostle based on visions he received on the island of Patmos, just off the coast of Ephesus. It is full of dramatic figures and images, including a woman giving birth, the book of seven seals, the lamb, the dragon and the beast.

"It's interesting that the book of the Apocalypse has continued to inspire artists through the centuries. This show includes works dating from the fourth century right up to our own time, like Henri Matisse's design for 'The Tree of Life,'" Francesco Buranelli, director of the Vatican Museums, told Catholic News Service.

Other works depict the defeat of Satan, the Last Judgment and the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

The exhibit is on display until Dec. 7 in the Sistine Hall of the Vatican Museums.

Carrell shines as 'Dan in Real Life'

BY KEVIN E. MURRAY
EDITOR

CHARLOTTE — Steve Carrell is one of many things to like about "Dan in Real Life," an amusing and surprisingly non-offensive comedy.

Carrell, known for his comedic portrayal of clueless boss Michael Scott on NBC's "The Office," is in top form playing Dan Burns, a successful family advice columnist who is a still-grieving widower and father of three growing girls.

While attending the annual family reunion at his parents' house in Rhode Island with his two brothers, Clay (Robert Leo Butz) and womanizer Mitch (a tame Dane Cook) and their families, Dan visits the town bookstore where he encounters Marie (Juliette Binoche), an attractive and mysterious visitor with whom he shares an instant attraction. Soon Dan is sharing his life story and finding himself falling in love with her.

Back with his family, he reveals he's met the perfect woman, only to learn Marie is Mitch's girlfriend and staying at the house, too.

They keep their prior encounter a secret to spare Mitch's feelings. The remainder of the film involves Dan wrestling with his growing feelings for Marie, who seems torn between Mitch, with whom she has a physical attraction, and Dan, who seems to have captured her heart.

While the film has a leisurely pace and a few clichéd aspects — a couple meets and falls in love, but is kept apart due to circumstances such as a prior romantic entanglement — it does offer genuine laughs and realistic and likeable characters, including Dan's large, loving and chaotic family.

Another plus are the few instances of objectionable elements, which is rare for most comedies these days.

The negatives include some mild innuendo as well as a farcical scene in which, to keep their budding relationship a secret, Dan and Marie are forced into the shower together — Dan is dressed, Marie is not. But the noble Dan averts his eyes.

As one character tells Dan, "Love is not a feeling. It's an ability." After years of grieving, Dan realizes he is capable of love once again, but will he be able to express it with the woman he admires?

Finding out is part of the fun.

Students enjoy arts electives in Asheville

Students learn about graphic arts, filmmaking, acting

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — The next great artist filmmaker may come from Asheville Catholic School.

Sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders currently participating in an arts program at the school. Students chose in three semester-long electives in graphics arts, film and acting offered on play afternoons.

Next semester, new electives will be chosen by the participating students.

Steve Jamesson, who maintains the school's Web site, teaches the course in computer graphics.

In the course, titled "Applying Graphics to the Computer," Jamesson began showing ways to apply graphics computer programs with which the students are already familiar.

Students will advance to applying graphics to the Web and to printed materials.

"The Art of Walking and Talking," an introductory course to acting, is taught by David Novak, an Asheville-area actor and storyteller.

In the course, students are learning to view the world from various points of view and to transform themselves into different characters.

They will work on improvising and pantomime, and will examine scripts and stage scenes from plays.

In "Capturing the World on Film," Curt Arledge of URTV, Asheville's public access channel, is teaching students about the art and science of creating a film.

Students are learning how to use film equipment, including cameras, lights, sets and editing equipment.

They will also learn how to incorporate music and graphics to add to the completed film.

The final project will be a short film of 4 to 7 minutes in length.

In order to complete this project, students will follow a progression of training, including brainstorming and writing, camera instruction, shooting and post-production instruction.

Pray for lapsed Catholics

Spiritual growth dependent on strong devotion to Eucharist

Pray for our brothers and sisters who have become fed up with the Catholic Church and left it for one reason or another.

Many have fallen away, seizing the recent scandals as justification for their action. Anger at the incompetence of those who failed to protect our children from clerical predators is understandable, but I wonder if the price they pay is worth it.

The sinfulness of others is not a very good reason for giving up the great treasure of the Eucharist.

I am especially concerned about young people. They are living in a world fraught with danger not merely from violence in the streets but also from the spiritual danger that arises in the climate of permissiveness permeating society.

They need God's protection.

We really have to pray for young people and be patient with them even when they are not patient with us.

It has been my observation that while many young people have turned away from organized religion, they have not turned away from God. They know intuitively that something doesn't come from nothing, and that the order and harmony of the universe cries out for an explanation, a Supreme Intelligence behind it.

Many of the young know that in some way the Lord is guiding them. They understand that there is an afterlife and that we will reap what we sow.

While some of them tend to neglect their spiritual lives, paying more attention to their bodies than they do to their souls, they need to be reminded of the words of Jesus: "Seek first the kingdom of God, and all other things will be added to you."

The Lord has the same goal for all Catholics. He is telling us that there is a higher level of happiness possible for those who come to him an intimate way.

Along with the spiritual consciousness that we already have of Jesus, a higher state of intellectual enlightenment and illumination is possible. This is a state of being which makes the indescribable experience of spiritual exaltation a reality in this life as well as in the next.

Spirituality for Today

Self-respect is the minimum requirement for arriving at this plateau. The higher spiritual gifts come to those who respect themselves enough to protect themselves from evil by striving for union with God's will.

I do not know how anyone can make real progress in attaining this level of spiritual growth without a strong devotion to the blessed Eucharist. Our participation in the life of God needs to be nourished.

There are priests all over the world offering the holy sacrifice of the Mass every day, presenting the Eucharist free of charge to anyone who is rightly disposed to receive it.

Many Christians outside the Catholic community reject the Eucharist, the priesthood and the entire sacramental system. By doing so, they have deprived themselves of the greatest gift the Lord has given to his people, namely, the holy sacrament of God's love, the blessed Eucharist.

We Catholics have received the key to unlock the greatest of all mysteries, the mystery of God's presence among us. Those who treasure this gift are rewarded with a unique kind of divine intimacy.

Pray for lapsed Catholics. They know not what they have left behind. Be grateful to God for the wonderful gift of his love.

"Rejoice always and give thanks in all circumstances, for this is the will of God for you in Christ Jesus" (1 Thes 5:16-18).

From pride to humility

Pride is a sin that corrupts, distorts reality

St. Barnard, a doctor of the church, has a classic work on the subject of humility and pride. In it, he says the pursuit of truth leads to three directions and ends in three different places.

First, if we pursue the truth about God far enough, we will end up in contemplation and prayer.

Second, if we pursue the truth about our neighbor far enough, we end up in compassion and love.

Third, if we pursue the truth about ourselves far enough, we will end up in humility. Therefore, true prayer is humble and true humility is prayerful.

Prayer doesn't change God; it changes the person who prays. In the preface to the Eucharistic Prayer, we have these powerful words: "You have no need of our praise, yet our desire to thank you is itself your gift. Our prayer adds nothing to your greatness, but makes us grow in your grace."

In the Gospel of Luke, there is a story about the Pharisee and the tax collector (Luke 18:9-14). Both go to the temple to pray, but in reality one prays while the other does not.

The Pharisee only prays about himself and his impressive "resume," while the tax collector admits to being a sinner.

The Pharisee seems caught in an exercise of self-adoration. He believes that the Holy Trinity is "Me, Myself and I." His prayer is a catalog of his own good merchandise. He emphasizes that he is less than God, but more than others.

The Pharisee was condemned because he played a bad game of pride. Among the seven deadly sins, pride is like the big enchilada. The other sins — anger, avarice, envy, gluttony, lust, sloth — seem like "misdemeanors" compared to the "felony" of pride.

Guest Column

CAPUCHIN

In the parade of sins, pride leads, organizes and ends the parade. And let not forget that the original sin was a sin of pride, which generated disobedience and eventually suffering and death.

For a proud person, the world has a different spin — it spins only for him or her.

Such was true for a singer who was well-known in California. While away on a vacation with his wife and four children, he went to see a movie on a rainy day.

Walking into the theater, they saw 10 people already seated. Upon seeing the singer and his family, the audience stood and clapped. One man came over and shook the singer's hand.

"I'm just amazed that you recognize me so far away from home," said the singer. "I was never here before."

"Recognize you?" asked the man. "I haven't a clue who you are. But the theater manager said he wouldn't show the film unless six more people showed up."

That realization rained on the singer's parade of pride.

Language of the culture of death

Thank you for running the photograph of Bishop Peter J. Jugis and Father Christopher Roux praying the rosary with the faithful at the abortion clinic in Charlotte ("Bearing witness: Bishop Jugis takes part in pro-life events in Charlotte," Oct. 19). Our good bishop bears witness and hope and light to the world.

I do ask for a clarification of language as regards the term "reproductive health clinic." This contradiction can lead to confusion, especially when the language used is that of the culture of death.

Abortions kill innocent babies and savage the dignity and hope of the mothers. The abortion facility is a place of darkness; it is not reproductive or healthy, most certainly it is not a clinic.

'Floppy died': Talking to children about death

Discussion should be adapted to meet age-appropriate needs and thinking abilities

"Well, how's your new pet rabbit?" a member of the extended family asked a 3-year-old at a recent gathering.

Imitating a grown-up's serious face, the preschooler paused for a moment to solemnly announce, "Floppy died," and then was off to play with her cousins.

"It's pretty clear," her mom said, "she doesn't get what death really means."

But then, who does? We don't really get it. Not this side of heaven.

New parents fumble for an answer to "Why death?" because all humans fumble with that question.

Knowing the theology (through humans sin entered the world; Christ redeemed us and death no longer reigns) doesn't mean we understand what happens. Or how it happens.

Or, in satisfying detail, what comes next.

That's not to say children, even youngsters, shouldn't consider death. Many of us at our mother's knee learned to ask of Mary, "Pray for us sinners now and at the hour of our death. Amen."

Over time, those words sink in. They take on meaning. They bring comfort.

And many of us fortunate enough to be raised in the church grew up with a day set aside for all saints (Nov. 1), and a day set aside for all souls (Nov. 2), for the departed, including our own family and friends, not yet in heaven.

How to talk to your children about death?

As with other topics (such as nutrition or safety or honesty), the discussion has to be adapted to meet age-appropriate needs and thinking abilities.

Here, for example, are two basic questions and suggested answers for younger children from Bill Dodds' "Your Grieving Child" (Our Sunday Visitor):

"Why did she have to die?"

Answer: Death is a part of life. It's the end of life on earth. Some people die when they're very young and some die when they're very old.

Sometimes a person's body just wears out after a long, long time, and sometimes a person's body gets sick or gets hurt or has something wrong with it and it just can't keep going.

We never know how long someone will live but when she does die, we feel very sad. It's like she went on a trip and she left us behind. We love her very much and so we miss her very much.

Your Family

BILL AND MONICA DODDS

We wish it didn't have to be this way. We wish she could still be with us. But we know it is this way. And that's hard.

"Where is she now? What comes after death?"

Answer: Each of us — including you — is made up of a body and a soul.

We can see our bodies. We can feel them. But we can't see our souls. We can't feel them. When we die, our souls leave our bodies. Our bodies stay here and our souls go to God.

Her body is here. We can still see it. But her soul has gone. Now it can see God face to face or it's still getting ready to see God face to face.

Her soul must be pretty excited and happy. She gets to see the one who created her!

Parishioners who model Christ are most effective teachers, says pope

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Clergy, lay catechists and parishioners who model their lives according to Christ represent the most effective tools for teaching the word of God, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"Whoever teaches the faith cannot risk appearing like a sort of clown who just performs a role for one's job," the pope said Oct. 24 at his weekly general audience in St. Peter's Square.

The catechist should not go through the motions, but "must be like the beloved disciple who rests his head on the heart of his Master" to hear and learn how to think, speak and act, he said.

Continuing a series of audience talks about early church theologians, Pope Benedict focused his remarks on St. Ambrose, a fourth-century bishop of Milan, Italy, and a doctor of the church.

St. Ambrose was a model catechist, he said, as his teaching was inseparable from how he prayed and lived.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In our catechesis on the teachers of the ancient church, we now turn to St. Ambrose of Milan.

Born into a Christian family in the middle of the fourth century, Ambrose was educated in Rome and sent as governor to Milan, where, although a catechumen, he was soon acclaimed as bishop.

He set about mastering the Scriptures, guided by the writings of Origen and the practice of "lectio divina," a form of prayerful meditation on the word of God. It was Ambrose who introduced this practice to the West, and it deeply permeated his life and preaching.

St. Augustine, who was converted in Milan and baptized by Ambrose, relates the profound impression which Ambrose's engagement with the word of God left upon him.

Ambrose, contrary to the custom of the time, did not read the Scriptures aloud, which Augustine interpreted as a sign of how deeply the inspired word had penetrated the holy bishop's mind and heart.

This image can serve as an "icon" of Ambrose as a catechist: his teaching was inseparable from his prayer and his entire life.

For Ambrose, Christ was everything — Omnia Christus est nobis! — and so it must be for every catechist and indeed for every one of the Lord's disciples.

State-sanctioned killing diminishes us all

Conference underscores church teaching on the death penalty

In October the Connecticut Catholic Conference underscored the need for Catholics to see the moral challenge society faces when considering the use of the death penalty.

It did this by co-sponsoring with the Connecticut Network to Abolish the Death Penalty a special program offered to all the parishes in Connecticut's three dioceses.

It was called "A Weekend of Faith in Action on the Death Penalty," to be held in parishes throughout the state Oct. 20 and 21.

Deacon David Reynolds, acting executive director of the conference, said the purpose of the weekend was to promote awareness of what the church teaches about the death penalty, emphasizing that the U.S. bishops have called for "common action in the Catholic community to bring about an end to the use of the death penalty in our land."

Specifically, the bishops have said that "state-sanctioned killing in our names diminishes all of us."

"Its application is deeply flawed and can be irreversibly wrong, is prone to errors and is biased by factors such as race, the quality of legal representation and where the crime was committed. We have other ways to punish criminals and protect society."

Because I have worked in my state of Connecticut for many years with both the conference and the Connecticut Network to Abolish the Death Penalty, I was interviewed on this action by a prominent Catholic radio station known by its call letters "JMJ."

Father Stephen Sidorak, the executive director of the Christian Conference of Connecticut who interviewed me, is known for his anti-death penalty position.

Anyone who has read my columns or my book, "Choosing Mercy, A Mother of Murder Victims Pleads to End the Death Penalty," knows where my family and I stand on the death penalty.

We had to deal with the loss of my son John and his wife Nancy when an 18-year-old murdered them. We've always been against the death penalty, but following this tragedy we had to look into our souls, on our knees and ask God to help us remain pro-life people.

Father Sidorak, however, asked me a question I didn't expect. It concerned the governor of Connecticut, Jodi Rell, also a mother, who lives in the same town as I do.

Rell is in a difficult position because recently horrendous murders occurred in the state, leaving a mother and two teen daughters dead. Many people are clamoring for a death sentence for the two killers involved.

So Father Sidorak asked me what I would say to my neighbor the governor,

The Bottom Line

who is on record as a pro-death penalty believer.

I quoted my own daughter Mary:

"Every time the state kills a person, human society moves in the direction of its lowest, most base urges. ... Our lawmakers have the capacity to help us abolish the death penalty and along with it the fantasy that it will make the pain go away."

I would also ask the governor to consider whether taking a life for a life is ever justified, even as I acknowledge how difficult it would be for her at this time politically to change her position and oppose the death penalty.

As for Catholics, we must join the Catholic campaign to end the use of the death penalty, saying, with our bishops, "We look forward to the day when our society chooses not to answer violence with violence."

Indian reservation's church destroyed in California wildfires

BY CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SAN DIEGO — A Catholic church on an Indian reservation was one of the casualties of the ongoing wildfires that have hit Southern California.

St. Bartholomew Church, a mission church on the Rincon Reservation, and several homes on the reservation were destroyed in one of the fires, according to Bo Mazzetti, a councilman for the Luiseno tribe on the reservation.

He said the loss of the church was a spiritual blow to the tribe.

"That's something we've all attended, that church. It's devastating to see that," Mazzetti said.

The St. Bartholomew Church property is owned by the Luiseno tribe, not by the Diocese of San Diego, although a deacon or priest from a nearby parish regularly ministers to reservation residents.

The same is true of two other mission churches on reservations close to the Rincon Reservation, both of which were feared destroyed in the blazes.

A representative of Catholic Mutual, the San Diego Diocese's insurance company, said Oct. 24 no harm had come to any diocese-owned church properties.

However, some diocesan churches, such as San Rafael Church in San Diego, had been evacuated until further notice as of Oct. 23.

"Catholic Charities is providing support with hot meals, staffing and technical resources to those located at Qualcomm Stadium," a football stadium in San Diego doubling as a shelter, said Catholic Charities USA spokeswoman Shelly Boryszewicz in an Oct. 24 statement.

Priests were being recruited to go to the stadium and minister to those taking refuge there.

the next day, albeit at about 60 percent strength as employees were tending to fire-related situations in their homes.

The Catholic-run University of San Diego announced Oct. 23 it was canceling classes for the remainder of the week.

"Dining services staff and student volunteers have provided desperately needed food and supplies to evacuees at Qualcomm Stadium," said the university's president, Mary Long, in an Oct. 23 statement.

The university's Center for Community Service Learning was coordinating volunteer opportunities for students and staff.

The university's Web site notified parents that, while the school was not in any physical danger from the fires, it was compiling a list of homes willing to take in students on a temporary basis.

"Parents and their students are encouraged to consider their options and make the decision best for them," the Web site said. "Many USD faculty and staff have been affected by the fires and we are very understanding of these decisions."

At Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles, it was business nearly as usual.

"The closest fire to the campus is over 20 miles away in Malibu, and all of the other fires are much farther away. None of the active fires pose any risk to the campus," the school's Web site said.

Should an evacuation be necessary, it added, the university has made arrangements with another college to temporarily shelter students.

St. Patrick Church in Carlsbad, in the San Diego Diocese, opened its doors Oct. 23 as a shelter, saying it could accommodate up to 200 people.

As of Oct. 23, more than 900,000 people had been evacuated from their homes, and an estimated 1,500 houses had been lost to the flames.

Fourteen different wildfires affecting nearly 330,000 acres have hit separate parts of Southern California stretching along the coast from Val Verde to San Diego and into northernmost Mexico as well as some inland areas.

Only two fires covering a total of 979 acres had been completely contained, according to the National Interagency Fire Center's Web site.

The Santa Ana winds that had been feeding the flames were believed to have peaked Oct. 23, although dry and windy conditions were expected to continue.

Temperatures, which had reached highs in the high 80s and low 90s in many parts of the fire-stricken areas, were also expected to cool somewhat.

President George W. Bush Oct. 23 declared a state of emergency in Southern California and ordered federal officials to help local officials bring aid to the region.

The next day, he signed a major disaster declaration for Southern California. The declaration will speed federal dollars to people whose property losses aren't covered by insurance and will help local and state agencies pay for the emergency response.

BLESSINGS FOR BETTER DRIVING

Father Joe Townsend blesses teenage drivers at St. Benedict Church in Broken Arrow, Okla., in October. The pastor has been blessing new drivers and their cars for about six years. After the blessing, each teen received a small cross of St. James, which is often given to travelers and pilgrims on spiritual journeys.

Twice a year, priest blesses teenage drivers and their cars

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. (CNS) — About six years ago, the mother of a teenage driver asked her parish priest what he thought parents prayed about most.

The answer was their children's safety, especially when driving, and Father Joe Townsend, pastor of St. Benedict Church in Broken Arrow, knew immediately he would join in those prayers.

"For me, it's good to pray for what my people are praying for. It's like I'm saying, 'I hear you,'" he said.

So that year he held a special blessing for young drivers and their cars. Now the blessing usually occurs twice a year, at the beginning of the new year and at the beginning of the school year.

The priest figures he has blessed about 250 teenagers.

"When I started doing this, I heard a loud, heartfelt thank you from the parents," he said.

The most recent blessing was Oct. 14 when Father Townsend blessed 43 new drivers at the parish.

Blessing young drivers makes a lot of sense. According for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, car crashes are the leading cause of death for U.S. teenagers, accounting for 36 percent of all deaths in the 16-19 age group.

Statistics also show that teens are four times more likely than any other age group to have an automobile accident.

The prayers and blessings are seen as ways to help lower the odds and give peace of mind to teens and parents.

Parishioner Kate Eastaway prays a lot for her twin daughters, Nikki and Claire, 16, when they are on the road, and she is doubly thankful for the pastoral help.

"This is a great idea for two reasons. First of all, we don't know where they are when they're out but God does, and he will watch over them. And second, they're not alone. Their guardian angels are with them," she said.

Jacob Osborn, 17, who has been driving for less than a year, agreed.

"Some people are not the best drivers in the world," he said. "It's good that God and the angels are there with me."

Jacob knows about potential driving dangers from firsthand experience.

He recently was forced off the road and hit a curb when another driver pulled out in front of him.

Each new driver was given a gift of a St. James cross. The cross is an ancient design of Spanish origin commonly carried by Christian pilgrims on spiritual journeys.

Father Townsend described the cross as an image of faith that the teens can take with them.

Jacob said he plans to pin his cross to the sun visor in his car.

Traditional Anglicans ask for full communion with Catholics

DUBLIN, Ireland (CNS) — Parishioners from three Church of Ireland parishes have joined traditional Anglicans from 12 other countries in requesting that the Catholic Church receive them into full communion.

If approved by the Vatican, the move would allow 400,000 traditional Anglicans worldwide to be admitted into the Catholic Church.

The decision to petition for the move "seeking full, corporate, sacramental union" was made during an early October plenary meeting of the Traditional Anglican Communion, the umbrella organization for traditional Anglicans, in Portsmouth, England.

The move, requested in a letter to the Vatican, would see the entire parish communities received into the Catholic Church.

It is extremely rare for entire Anglican communities to seek corporate communion with the Catholic Church whereby every member of the parish becomes Catholic and the parish effectively becomes part of the Catholic Church.

While the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity is the Vatican's lead office for official unity talks with the Anglican Communion, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith deals with the situation of former Anglican priests who want to become Catholic priests and with groups of former Anglicans who want to become Catholics together.

The situation of individual Anglicans wanting to become Catholics is considered a matter of conscience and not primarily an issue in the ecumenical dialogue.

Pope Benedict XVI and top Vatican officials have expressed their hope that the Anglican Communion would find a structure able to keep Anglicans united while strengthening the faith and doctrinal heritage they share with the Roman Catholic Church in order to continue moving Roman Catholics and Anglicans toward full unity.

FROM THE VATICAN

Trade initiatives must not punish Africa's poor, Vatican official says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — New trade initiatives aimed at boosting Africa's economy must not penalize the continent's already impoverished people, a Vatican official told the United Nations.

Archbishop Celestino Migliore, the Vatican's representative to the United Nations in New York, made the comments in an address to the U.N. General Assembly Oct. 19, during a review of progress and challenges in Africa.

The archbishop noted that not all the news from Africa was bad. For example, he said, last year's economic growth on the continent was the highest in 30 years.

Nevertheless, Archbishop Migliore said, Africa continues to endure situations of conflict and extreme forms of poverty difficult to uproot.

Aggravating the economic suffering is a brain drain throughout Africa, as many of the most educated and skilled people, especially in the health sector, leave the continent for better economic opportunities elsewhere, he said.

"Africa's integration into the international trading system should help it build its capacity to compete without reducing its ability to safeguard (its) citizens from the undesirable consequences of structural adjustments and trade liberalization," Archbishop Migliore said.

"The international community is called to assist African countries develop policies that promote a culture of solidarity, so that their economic development may go hand in hand with integral human development," he said.

For its part, Africa must demonstrate good governance, anti-corruption measures and the correct use of international aid, if such assistance is to bear fruit, he said.

Archbishop Migliore renewed the Vatican's support for a global approach to the prevention, management and resolution of conflicts in Africa.

Vatican official says Iranian nuclear program is OK if peaceful

ROME (CNS) — A leading Vatican official expressed support for the development of a nuclear energy program in Iran, as long as it serves peaceful purposes.

"Nuclear energy is something that can do good for humanity" — a principle that "is certainly valid for Iran, too," said Cardinal Renato Martino, president of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace.

Cardinal Martino spoke Oct. 23 at an interreligious gathering in Naples, Italy. His remarks came as Iranian and European officials met in Rome to try and resolve growing tensions over Iran's nuclear capability.

Cardinal Martino defended the right to develop a peaceful nuclear energy program, and said any risks of improper use of nuclear technology "depend on the intentions of those who manage the program."

"Anything is possible, in the sense that I can use a knife to cut bread but also to kill someone," he said.

In dealing with such questions at a global level, the cardinal said, the international community must balance the need for peace and security with the necessary development of populations.

The key figures at the Rome meeting were European Union envoy Javier Solana and Iran's new nuclear negotiator, Saeed Jalili. Solana called the meeting constructive, and Jalili reportedly pledged Iran's commitment to dialogue with the West.

The Iranian government, however, has not changed its basic position: that it will proceed with a uranium enrichment program for what it says are strictly civilian uses. The United States and other countries suspect Iran is using the technology to develop nuclear weapons, and have called for tougher international sanctions against Iran.

Pope Benedict XVI, marking the 50th anniversary of the International Atomic Energy Agency last July, said the Vatican fully approves the agency's efforts to promote the elimination of nuclear weapons and encourage "the peaceful and safe use of nuclear technology for authentic development."

Vatican official: Law can't be abandoned for terrorists

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The rule of law cannot be abandoned when dealing with terrorists, a Vatican official told the United Nations.

Although terrorists may have no respect for legal systems, states risk compromising their legitimacy if they bend the rule of law in confronting terrorism, Archbishop Celestino Migliore, the Vatican's observer to the United Nations, told one of the general assembly's main committees Oct. 26.

"The struggle against terrorism is necessary, but at the same time it must be established through the drafting, adoption, and effective enforcement of juridical instruments designed to tackle this violent menace with right reason," said Archbishop Migliore.

"The rule of law at times is difficult to apply to terrorists who have little or no respect for it.

However, states must not engage in measures antithetical to the very principles that give them legitimacy through the rule of law," he said.

Archbishop Migliore said the rule of law was the basis of international cooperation. He pointed to a recent expansion of cooperative efforts in international criminal justice, which has brought to trial people accused of crimes against humanity.

He said U.N. member states were more willing today to take decisive collective action through the Security Council to prevent such crimes, when peaceful means are inadequate and when national authorities are failing to protect these populations.

A church for all the world

Priests serving in Peru visit Charlotte parish

CHARLOTTE — Two priests serving in the Apostolic Vicariate of Pucallpa, Peru, recently visited St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte.

Father Gregory Chisolm and Father Miguel Angel Bombilla visited the parish as part of World Mission Sunday Oct. 21, this year themed "All the Churches for All the World."

In August 2006, Father Mark Lawlor, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Church, made a mission trip to Peru, where he established an outreach program between his parish and St. Martin de Porres Church, a small church in the town of Aguaytia in the Apostolic Vicariate of Pucallpa.

"In many places in Latin America, there are dedicated clergy, religious and laity serving in vibrant parishes, but their material resources are usually very limited," said Father Lawlor.

Peru is a nation of some 25 million people, most of whom are Catholics. A significant percentage of adults earn about $2 per day, said Father Lawlor.

This year, Father Lawlor invited Father Chisolm, a native of Nova Scotia, Canada, who has served in Peru for 30 years; and Father Bombilla, a recently ordained priest now charged with the pastoral care of more than 50 Peruvian communities, to speak at Masses at St. Vincent de Paul Church.

The priests explained the challenges of serving an area of 55,000 square kilometers comprised of hundreds of communities, and served by only 21 priests and 36 women religious, many of whom are foreign missionaries.

St. Vincent de Paul Church took up a special second collection to help the vicariate construct a new chapel in Neshuya, a small town experiencing a population increase.

The collection also will partially fund programs for children and the poor, catechetical and liturgical materials, and furnishings for pastoral centers.

In his World Mission Sunday message, Pope Benedict XVI said the primary task of every Catholic is to bring the Gospel message to a world debased by poverty, violence and human rights abuses.

Addressing this year's theme, the pope focused on the need for every local church to breathe new life into its missionary mandate.

Bringing Christ's saving power to all people "truly involves everyone," he said.

Individual Catholics must see themselves not as simple "collaborators" in the church's evangelizing mission, but as being "protagonists" jointly responsible for carrying it out, the pope said.

He said every local diocese on every continent needs to be aware of the "urgent need to relaunch missionary activity to meet the many serious challenges of our time."

Charlotte parishioner wins Caribbean cruise at Eucharistic Congress

CHARLOTTE — The Te Deum Foundation has announced the winner of a free Caribbean cruise.

Gina Parsons, a parishioner of St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte and an employee with the Diocese of Charlotte's accounting office, was picked as the winner of the eight-day Carnival cruise during the Diocese of Charlotte's third annual Eucharistic Congress at the Charlotte Convention Center Sept. 21-22.

Parsons' winning ticket was picked during the Te Deum Foundation's inaugural cruise raffle drawing at the congress.

"I was thrilled and a bit surprised," said Parsons. "The ticket was purchased for me, in gratitude for helping organize the Eucharistic Congress. I didn't even know I had a ticket until I had won."

Parsons and a guest will join Father Herbert Burke, pastor of Immaculate Conception Church in Forest City, and other Catholics on Carnival Liberty to Panama, Costa Rica and Cozumel, Mexico, in January 2008.

Tickets for the cruise were sold by the Te Deum Foundation, a nonprofit

A second All Clergy Build is already being planned for the fall of 2008.

Construction on the future home of Congolese immigrants Faustin Kalonfi, Ngalula Mwady and their children began in early September and the dedication will take place Nov. 18.

A typical Habitat for Humanity house takes 13 weeks to complete.

Habitat for Humanity is a nonprofit, nondenominational Christian housing organization. Since 1976, Habitat has built more than 225,000 houses, providing shelter for more than 1 million people. Now at work in 100 countries, Habitat builds a house every 26 minutes.

Homeowner families are chosen according to their need, their ability to repay the mortgage and their willingness to work in partnership with Habitat. The organization does not discriminate according to race, religion or ethnic group.

decking, insulation, drywall, exterior siding and paint. Professional subcontractors are hired to complete heating, air conditioning and electrical work; to pour concrete; and to lay floor covering.

Sister Inkrott spent Oct. 25 working at the house alongside Father Patrick Cahill, parochial vicar at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte; and Daren Bitter, a candidate for the permanent diaconate.

For Sister Inkrott, working on the house brought back memories of her childhood, "hammering things together in my dad's shop on the farm."

"Working with clergy of many different denominations was a real bonus to the day," said Bitter. "I could see the head, heart and hands of the body of Christ at work — it was truly Trinitarian," said Bitter.

Oct. 25 was Bitter's first day on-site and he hopes to return for one more workday and again for the dedication ceremony.

"While this was my first 'new construction' experience, I have completed more home improvement projects than I care to admit," he said.

"Msgr. John McSweeney (pastor of St. Matthew Church) has encouraged us as a faith community to get involved in the community at large and Habitat for Humanity is a wonderful way to do that," said Father Cahill.

"The 'All Clergy Build' idea is great because it pulls many different faiths together for a common goal of building a home for a family in need," he said.

St. Matthew Church honored for its Holy Land support

Parishioners Michael and Jane Balbirnie accepted the award on behalf of Msgr. John McSweeney, pastor of St. Matthew Church.

The award is given annually to honor people and institutions that have shown extraordinary commitment to solidarity with the Christians of the Holy Land.

The term "living stones" refers to the Christian people (as distinguished from the Christian buildings) of the Holy Land. Most of the Holy Land's Christians are believed to be descendants of Jesus' apostles.

HCEF's programs help provide moral, spiritual and financial support to Christians of all denominations in Palestine, Israel and Jordan.

"Under the leadership of Msgr. J. McSweeney ... the parish has contributed significantly to the well-being of the 'living stones' through both parish-wide programs and individual efforts," said a press release by HCEF.

The parish sponsored two "Holy Land Days," during which more than $30,000 worth of handicrafts made by Palestinian Christian artisans were sold. In addition, more than 400 families and individuals at St. Matthew Church provided funds to support the education of more than 400 children in Christian schools in the Holy Land.

Peace Program, during which the parish hosted five eighth-grade Palestinian students and their teacher for six weeks.

The visiting students lived with parish families and attended Holy Trinity Middle School with their host families' children.

"This program is a cultural exchange for peace, for it promotes awareness and understanding between American and Palestinian Christians," said Rateb Rabie, HCEF president.

"The children who come from the Holy Land are both delightful and effective ambassadors of the Mother Church," he said.

In the fall of 2006, Coadjutor Archbishop Fouad Twal of the Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem visited St. Matthew Church, which has given significant moral and financial support to the Patriarchate. Archbishop Twal has since been designated the next patriarch of Jerusalem.

Time, talent, treasure

Parish holds successful stewardship fair

CONCORD — Stewardship was recently on the minds of many Concord Catholics.

More than 50 parish ministries participated in the annual stewardship fair held in the parish hall of St. James the Greater Church in Concord Oct. 27-28.

The event, organized by members of the parish stewardship committee, was preceded by homilies incorporating the concept of stewardship at Masses the previous two weekends.

During the weekend of the stewardship fair, parishioner Jeff Ireland spoke on the topic of "Time, Talent and Treasure" at all Masses.

During the fair, parishioners of all ages visited the ministries' various displays and inquired about their work. Community programs such as Habitat for Humanity and the Community Free Clinic were represented also.

Many parishioners signed up to help with ministries they found of interest.

At Masses Nov. 3-4, parishioners will return their personal pledges of giving their time, talent and treasure.

Catholics, Jews discuss religion, issues in Rome

Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews.

The conference's 75 participants included Cardinal William H. Keeler, retired archbishop of Baltimore; rabbis; and Catholic and Jewish lay leaders from the United States. They networked and listened to experts in Catholic-Jewish dialogue, Vatican officials and each other.

"It has been an unbelievable success," said Gunther Lawrence, the IIC head who organized the conference.

"There has been great enthusiasm to expand this kind of dialogue," one focused not on official Catholic and Jewish representatives, but on local parishes and synagogues, he said.

The participants also had a chance Oct. 22 to question Jerzy Kluger, the man who gained fame as Pope John Paul II's childhood Jewish friend.

"The friendship they had as real people is indicative of how Pope John Paul approached relations with Jews around the world," said Arthur Urbano,

"There has been a lot of progress and we do not want to leave it behind."

— Arthur Urbano

a theology teacher at the Dominican-run Providence College in Rhode Island who attended the conference as a representative of the Providence Diocese.

Conference participants spent a lot of time "discussing the progress in Catholic-Jewish relations under John Paul and the hope that it will continue," he said.

It was Pope John Paul's visit to a synagogue in Rome — the first time a pope had entered a Jewish place of worship — that had opened a dialogue between Catholics and Jews and made Rome the ideal location for the conference.

In his keynote remarks at the Pontifical North American College in Rome, Cardinal Keeler, who served as moderator for Jewish-Catholic affairs for the U.S. bishops, described the Holocaust as having the same level of importance to Jews as the sacraments do for Catholics.

On the subject of anti-Semitism, he reiterated the words of John Paul II: "Anti-Semitism is gravely sinful."

Missal misconceptions

The conference wasn't all handshakes and smiles. Many Jews in attendance wanted to talk about Pope Benedict XVI's July 7 apostolic letter on the wider use of the Tridentine Mass.

A Good Friday prayer from the 1962 Roman Missal used for the Tridentine rite calls "for the conversion of the Jews," asking that God "take the veil from their hearts" and free them from "blindness" and that they "be delivered from the darkness."

Bishop Brian Farrell, vice president of the Pontifical Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews, answered questions about the concerns by admitting the Vatican was unaware of the prayer's offensive nature when approving the 1962 Roman Missal.

Bishop Farrell said that a decision, most likely to remove the offending prayers, would be announced before Holy Week 2008.

Cardinal Keeler said "Nostra Aetate," the Second Vatican Council document calling for an end to anti-Semitism, "trumps all else" and would prohibit the language of the 1962 Roman Missal.

The conference also featured the rededication of a large, six-candle menorah on the grounds of the Pontifical North American College.

The menorah's candles sit on a Star of David that has been rendered nearly in two. It symbolizes the death of six million Jews during the Holocaust.

A smaller version of the menorah was presented to Pope Benedict by conference participants during the pope's general audience in St. Peter's Square Oct. 24.

Urbano said that, while Pope Benedict XVI is continuing to promote the dialogue, he worries that new generations of Catholics and Jews do not see it as something necessary.

"There has been a lot of progress and we do not want to leave it behind," said Urbano.

Day of reflection and fellowship

Seniors reflect on faith, prayer at annual event

CORRESPONDENT

ARDEN — Senior citizens across the Diocese of Charlotte have been sharing faith and fellowship.

Approximately 200 people from 16 parishes have already attended the Fall Days of Reflection, which are being held at five locations around the diocese this year from September to November.

The annual event, sponsored by Catholic Social Service's Elder Ministry, promotes both spiritual and physical well-being for senior citizens.

"It is a day that celebrates the lives and gifts of senior adults while challenging them in their spiritual journeys," said Sandra Breakfield, Elder Ministry director.

"The Fall Day of Reflection promotes and encourages participants to continue growing in their relationship with God, while strengthening their relationships with other seniors from parishes around the diocese," she said.

Each event features a guest speaker and Mass.

"Each Fall Day of Reflection has been encouraging, challenging and inspirational. We have been truly blessed with the speakers this year," said Breakfield.

"Each presenter has brought his own style, knowledge, wisdom, understanding and humor to the topic that he has presented," she said.

Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin spoke about the importance of prayer at the Fall Day of Reflection held at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro Sept. 13.

Jesuit Father Joseph Koterski, philosophy professor at Fordham University, spoke on tools for prayer at St. James Church in Hamlet Oct. 11.

Benedictine Father Kieran Neilson, recently retired chaplain of Belmont Abbey College, was the speaker at St. Barnabas Church in Arden Oct. 9.

Back by popular demand, Father Neilson, who has spoken at previous Fall Days of Reflection in the Asheville and Charlotte areas, punctuated his talk on prayer and being positive with jokes and humorous anecdotes.

"We don't typically schedule the same speaker each year, but Asheville-area participants keep requesting Father Neilson, said Breakfield.

"The important qualities to nurture are a love of God and a sense of humor," Father Neilson told his audience.

"As we advance in age, we advance in wisdom and we should also advance in prayer," he said.

He told his audience not to let others judge how they pray, or their prayers' effectiveness.

"I won't tell you how to pray, but I do recommend praying five decades of the rosary daily," he said.

Prayer is not a matter of feeling, but a matter of communicating with God and accepting that he knows what is best for us, said Father Neilson.

"We know that if we trust in God, it is for the best," he said, encouraging all to pray for the grace to trust God.

Father Neilson stressed that God's love for his people never changes.

"God is not wishy-washy or lukewarm, even though we are," said Father Neilson.

In addition to prayer, he encouraged older Catholics to maintain a positive attitude about life. Many seniors become negative because they do not go out of their way to help others, he said.

Elderly persons with positive attitudes can be emissaries of God to others, said Father Neilson.

They can volunteer as caregivers; visit shut-ins and those in nursing homes and hospitals; and be there for those who need someone to talk to, he said.

"We each have a story," he said, and encouraged his audience to be there for those who are suffering.

"God will give us the grace to bring other souls to Christ by simple ways," he said.

CSS's Elder Ministry provides leadership and guidance to parishes and older adults within the Diocese of Charlotte, to enhance their well-being and to promote the development of programs.

Annual events such as the Fall Day of Reflection and the Spring Fling provide opportunities for elders to gather from throughout the diocese.

opportunity for the Catholic Church in the Diocese of Charlotte to gather with couples who are celebrating the important milestones of 25 and 50 years of marriage," said Gerard Carter, director of the diocesan Catholic Social Services' Family Life Office, which organizes the annual celebration.

According to the Family Life Office, 57 couples are celebrating 50 years and 84 couples are celebrating 25 years of marriage this year. One couple, Joe and Martha Ybarra of Our Lady of the Assumption Church in Charlotte, are celebrating 60 years of marriage.

"In addition to guiding engaged couples in preparing for marriage, it has also been an important ministry of this diocese to join with those couples celebrating such milestone years of marriage," Carter said.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated the Mass, with Father Christopher Roux, priest secretary to Bishop Jugis, serving as master of ceremonies and Deacon Mark Nash, permanent deacon at St. Thomas Aquinas Church, assisting.

"The Lord's faithfulness has sustained you in good times and bad," Bishop Jugis said in his homily. "The fact that you are here today is a sign of God's presence in your lives."

Following Bishop Jugis' homily, the anniversary couples were invited to renew their wedding vows, sealing

"As any married couple certainly knows, it is not without effort and dedication that marriage perseveres through the good times and bad; and in sickness and health," Carter said. "Seeing these anniversary couples gathered together is truly a moving experience."

"Through their dedication to sustaining marriage, these couples are a true testament to the commitment to Christian marriage," he said.

"Christ depends on you to be ambassadors of his love," said Bishop Jugis.

After the Mass, the anniversary couples and their families joined Bishop Jugis for a reception in the parish hall.

Enough, already! Vatican official says Templars book nothing new

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — It was billed as the Vatican's effort to "come clean" and reveal secret documents about the mysterious Knights Templar, the medieval crusading order that has inspired ancient legends and modern novels.

But after seeing exaggerated press reports for two weeks, Bishop Sergio Pagano apparently had had enough.

"I've read in the papers that this is about discoveries. In no way can one talk about discoveries — every one of these texts was already known," he said Oct. 25.

You could almost feel the air going out of the balloon in the packed Vatican conference room, where journalists had assembled for the unveiling of a collector's edition of Vatican Secret Archives documents on the Templar order.

Since early October, international media had pumped the story, saying parchment records uncovered in the archives would exonerate and rehabilitate the Templars, erasing the charges of heresy that led to the order's dissolution in 1312.

The idea was that the Vatican was finally divulging information it had long hidden — a notion that tied in vaguely with Dan Brown's novel, "The Da Vinci Code," which gave the Templars a role in an ongoing church conspiracy.

But Bishop Pagano, prefect of the Vatican archives, was having none of this.

The new Vatican book is "not a scoop, not something extraordinary, does not reveal or remove penalties that were in fact never imposed, or bring to light hidden things," he said.

The Vatican wasn't doing this to celebrate or rehabilitate the Knights Templar, he said. The intent was simply to make scholarly material available in a format of high artistic quality, he said.

Many media reported that the elaborate collector's edition, titled "The Trial Against the Templars," would include a previously secret document called the Chinon parchment, supposedly discovered in 2001 after being misplaced in a Vatican archives drawer.

The Chinon parchment details a 1308 investigation of the Knights Templar ordered by Pope Clement V, noteworthy because it shows he absolved the Knights of heresy and wanted at that point to reform the order rather than suppress it.

Bishop Pagano, however, said the Chinon document was not a recent discovery. It was "described perfectly" in a 1912 Vatican archives catalogue and was available to researchers — but researchers didn't notice until 2001, he said.

What seemed to bother Bishop Pagano most was the hype over a scholarly volume. "All this noise is not our style," he said.

"We are still proudly convinced — and perhaps we are in a minority on this — that books should be published, read and studied, not 'presented.' Today, books are presented and not even read afterward," he said.

Bishop Pagano's blunt words suggested a divergence between scholarship and marketing at the Vatican, an impression that was reinforced when the bishop stood up and left halfway through the press conference.

Scrinium, the company publishing the new volume as part of a series of facsimile documents from the Vatican archives, sang a different tune.

"The whole world is talking" about the new work, it crowed in a statement.

The reason people are attracted to these publications, it said, is that there is huge interest in "the legends, myths and pages of history" that are documented in the Vatican's files.

The Vatican Secret Archives holds too much to classify systematically, and this surfeit of texts and artifacts may yield "new treasures" in the future, it said.

Ferdinando Santoro, president of Scrinium, told Catholic News Service that some media had indeed overly hyped the Templars volume. He acknowledged, however, that the publicity had helped sales of the book.

Although the book's price tag is 5,900 euros (about $8,400), orders have already been taken for most of the 799 copies printed, he said.

Vatican scholars say Pope Clement's suppression of the Knights Templar was dictated by a combination of political events and ecclesial pressures.

Beginning in 1307, King Philip IV of France arrested and tortured many knights, extracting false confessions of heresy and ordering assets seized.

Pope Clement wanted to end abuses in the order and reorganize it, but eventually he bowed to the king's pressure and formally dissolved the Knights Templar, because he feared a schism of the church in France.

Justice may require suffering as Jesus did

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

I spent an hour walking through a war museum in Hanoi last summer. Some of the place names and battles depicted were familiar.

It was interesting to read the descriptions of the American war from a Vietnamese perspective more than three decades later.

Typical of a war museum, the displays showed struggle, death and heroism as well as cities and landscapes ravaged by firepower. But a room at the far end of the building silently "spoke" of something lasting.

Filled with photographs, the walls told the story of "the women of the war." There were pictures of a few women who had served as spies or functioned in direct battle operations.

However, most of the photos were of those who had lost husbands and children in the war.

As I went from picture to picture the effect became palpable. "Her husband, father and six brothers were killed," read an interpretive sign in old-fashioned type. "She is shown with her daughters — all of her sons died in the fighting," explained another.

"She gave her husband and 14 sons in the war." My mind could not accommodate the thought. Examining this woman's strained face, I could only guess that she survived on the hope of resurrection.

That's all some people have. I've known a few, and it seems they endure their days clinging to that thread. While others of us may have an easier time of it, we really ought to pay attention to these persons' reality — because ours is connected to it.

The hope and truth of resurrection is the message of this weekend's readings.

The story in Maccabees is of a woman and her seven sons who were tortured by their oppressors. They endured the suffering in the belief that they would be raised up "to live again forever."

This Scripture speaks on behalf of countless victims of injustice throughout human history, and in the Gospel Jesus confirms that their hope in the resurrection will indeed be realized.

Justice is the key. Jesus suffered and died as a victim of injustice and was resurrected "to live again forever" in the reign of love, peace and justice.

If we wish to participate in the resurrection with Jesus and all who lived and suffered for the sake of justice, we also must embrace the reality of that life.

Questions:

Who is someone I have witnessed suffering for the sake of justice? How is my hope of resurrection tied to that of others, past and present?

Still too taboo

Hollywood said to treat abortion themes with 'trepidation' in films

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The treatment of abortion themes in movies may seem to be skewed against a pro-life viewpoint — if they're presented at all — but the issue is much rarer in films than many might think.

Forty years ago "the Production Code forbade touching abortion in Hollywood movies," said Henry Herx, retired director of the U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting.

Also known as the Hays Code and put in place in 1930, it regulated all manner of content.

"It's all changed since 1968 with the dropping of the Production Code," he said, and the institution of a ratings system by the Motion Picture Association of America that didn't evaluate content until after it was committed to celluloid.

But even so, the abortion issue is still approached "with great trepidation" by filmmakers, said Harry Forbes, the current director of the film and broadcasting office. "For all of the liberalness of Hollywood, when it comes to depicting that sort of thing on screen, the filmmakers are very, very careful not to offend."

Noting, as did Herx, there was a taboo about presenting abortion for the 40 years the self-imposed Production Code was in effect, Forbes added:

"I almost can't think of an instance where a character has had an abortion in the film and the script has let her get off lightly for whatever reason. So I think it's still somewhat taboo, and, hopefully, will remain so."

"It's almost universally (that) things are presented from the view of 'the woman's right,' 'not such a big deal,'" said Susan Wills, assistant director for program development in the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

"There's no portrayal of the reality of the abortion aftermath," she added. "Men who impregnate these women are portrayed as uncaring boors."

"In recent times," Forbes said, "probably the benchmark for abortion movies was 'Vera Drake,' which was about a middle-class English housewife who performs abortions on the side unbeknownst to her family, and she believes she's doing these girls who are 'in trouble' a good turn."

"What was interesting about the film was you could walk away from it feeling — feeling rightly — that what she was doing was very wrong," he said.

Thomas Grenchik, executive director of the pro-life secretariat, spoke about the new movie "Bella," in which a pregnant woman contemplates an abortion but ultimately decides against it.

"It's not a happy, made-up ending ... but more of a real-life ending," said Grenchik.

In "Bella," which opened Oct. 26, an unwed restaurant waitress gets fired from her job the morning she confirms she's pregnant, only to have the restaurant's best cook abandon his duties and hang out with her throughout the day in a subtle attempt to persuade her to not have an abortion.

Despite being "sometimes dramatically slack and implausible, and rather overly pat in its plot resolutions," "Bella" has "an affirmative pro-life message, along with themes of self-forgiveness, reconciliation and redemption that should resonate deeply with Catholic viewers," Forbes said in his review.

He gave "Bella" a classification of A-II — adults and adolescents. On the other hand, the 2004 film "Vera Drake" received an L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling.

It did, however, get nominated for three Oscars and won a slew of awards in Britain, where the picture was set.

Another film with abortion as a central theme, 1999's "The Cider House Rules," won two Oscars.

"Given the unfortunate prevalence of abortion in real life, I think filmmakers still treat it with great trepidation. I don't think abortion is ever shown to be a good thing or even a casual thing," Forbes said. "I don't think filmmakers give abortion a pass."

Pope calls Beethoven's 'Ninth' masterful expression of optimism

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — After listening to a performance of Ludwig van Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," Pope Benedict XVI called the work a masterful expression of optimism in the face of suffering.

The pope listened to the performance by the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra and Chorus at the Vatican Oct. 28. Afterward, he gave a talk that reflected his interest in music and his familiarity with Beethoven's work.

Beethoven's "Ninth" is one of the best-known compositions of Western music and was written when the composer was almost completely deaf. Its finale, "Ode to Joy," uses soloists, chorus and orchestra.

The pope said he was increasingly amazed at the work, which was Beethoven's last complete symphony, written after years of self-isolation.

"Beethoven had to fight internal and external problems that brought him depression and deep bitterness and threatened to suffocate his artistic creativity," the pope said.

Then, in 1824, Beethoven surprised the public with "a composition that broke the traditional form of the symphony" and elevated it to an expression of joy and optimism, he said.

The pope said the careful listener can follow this drama in the music itself, as it progresses from the dark tones and famous "empty fifths" of the strings at the beginning of the overture to an explosion of jubilation at the end. The sense of joy that emerges from the music is "not something light and superficial, but a sentiment acquired through much work, overcoming the emptiness of someone who had been pushed into isolation by deafness," the pope said.

He said the musical composition reminded him of a passage from the prophet Isaiah: "On that day the deaf shall hear the words of a book; and out of gloom and darkness the eyes of the blind shall see." He said the reference is to the gift of perception received by those who are liberated from struggles through God's grace.

Fun and faith

Middle school students learn about prayer at youth rally

KERNERSVILLE — Middle school students recently learned about the importance of prayer and having a relationship with Jesus.

More than 100 youths took part in "Let Us Pray," the middle school youth rally held at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville Oct. 20. The event was sponsored by the diocesan Office of Youth Ministry.

The rally included music, skits, talks and eucharistic adoration, led by Deacon Vincent Shaw, permanent deacon at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro.

Lay members of the Oblate Apostles of the Two Hearts, also known as the O.A.T.H. Brothers, were the rally's presenters. They gave talks and performed skits that emphasized a life of prayer and avoiding sin.

"They spoke about the real issues that kids face, such as peer pressure and temptation," said Peg Ruble, associate director of diocesan youth ministry.

The O.A.T.H. Brothers, based in Dover, Del., take vows of poverty, obedience and chastity. They spoke about their devotion to the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, and about how their response to Christ is performed through their ministry.

"They engaged the youths in very interactive, fun activities that emphasized their knowledge and understanding of the faith," said Ruble.

"The kids warmly accepted them — the brothers were genuine people who had a genuine message about Christ, and they made Christ's message real and one that they could all embrace and follow," she said.

The O.A.T.H. Brothers told the youths about four ways to have a relationship with Christ: through prayer, reconciliation, the Eucharist and the rosary. They gave all the youths rosaries to take home.

"They were very engaging and had a profound impact on the kids," said Ruble.

Saints in the making

Children dressed as saints and biblical characters mingle in the parish hall after Mass at the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville as part of a parish All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day celebration Oct. 27.

The parish's youth ministry sponsored the annual celebration, which included decorating the hall, setting up for dinner and running the games. While the children played, the adults enjoyed a meal.

All Saints' Day, celebrated Nov. 1, is a holy day of obligation and commemorates all those in heaven. All Souls' Day is celebrated Nov. 2.

In his homily at a Mass on All Saints' Day 2006, Pope Benedict XVI said the feasts of All Saints and All Souls "help us meditate on the final goal of our earthly pilgrimage."

The saints of the Catholic Church, the pope said, are a source of inspiration, encouraging the faithful to follow in their footsteps and experience true happiness found with God's love.

Students honor long-time staff members at school, parish

GREENSBORO — Two long-time staff members of Our Lady of Grace Church and School are moving on.

Maureen Cavanaugh, parish nurse, and Patty Jennings, administrative assistant to the pastor, were honored for their service to the parish, school and community during the school's weekly Mass Oct. 17.

They are leaving their respective positions to pursue other opportunities.

Maureen Cavanaugh served as parish nurse for nearly eight years. Among her many responsibilities with the parish health ministry, Cavanaugh assisted with the school's family life curriculum and led workshops on medical issues that teachers may encounter in the classroom.

Patty Jennings has served as the pastor's administrative assistant for 13 years. Jennings often worked with the school's faculty and students on community service projects, including Thanksgiving baskets and food collections.

In addition, students would assist Jennings with parish-related tasks, such as replacing worn missals and cleaning the pews.

As a sign of gratitude, the students prepared spiritual bouquets filled with cards, prayers and good wishes for Cavanaugh and Jennings. After Mass, representatives of each class presented the gifts.

The school also gave Cavanaugh and Jennings each a gold cross necklace as a remembrance of their ministries at Our Lady of Grace Church and School.

Perspectives

A collection of columns, editorials and viewpoints

Dear Friends in Christ,

The struggles of living in poverty affect 37 million Americans, who labor on a daily basis to meet the ordinary needs of their families. Thirteen million of these impoverished Americans are children — that is one in every six of America's youngest.

Our faith calls us to work for an end to the injustice of poverty, to help the most vulnerable among us to find resources to improve their lives.

The Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) stands with poor and low-income people, helping them create permanent solutions to poverty in their communities. Real, sustainable change by the CCHD is made possible through the generous support of parishioners across the country.

The CCHD's efforts are funded almost entirely through an annual parish collection. This year's appeal will take place on Nov. 17 and 18, 2007. The donations are used by the CCHD national office to support anti-poverty projects across the country as well as here in the Diocese of Charlotte, where they fund initiatives to benefit those who are poor and vulnerable.

These grassroots efforts — national and local — are providing tangible resources to help poor people help themselves.

Although the Campaign for Human Development is committed to helping people find permanent solutions to the problem of poverty, its goals cannot be accomplished without your help. Please join this effort in solidarity to help put an end to poverty in our nation.

Many God bless you for your generosity.

Sincerely,

Rev. Msgr. Mauricio W. West

Investments in the future and present CCHD campaign a chance to better lives of many

You don't have to look very hard to see that poverty is as prevalent in the Diocese of Charlotte as it is in areas that get more publicity, but we are also blessed to have the effective, compassionate efforts of the Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) to help people here break the cycle of poverty.

Since its founding by the U.S. bishops in 1970, CCHD's mission has been to eliminate poverty and injustice in this country. Working toward that goal, CCHD has funded programs that build strong communities through the development of low-income leaders and through a focus on the root causes of poverty.

Moreover, CCHD is one of the largest funders of community-controlled self-help groups in our nation.

CCHD uses funds raised nationally in a once-a-year collection in Catholic parishes to fund innovative, grassroots projects all over the country. Each diocese uses a portion of the collection raised by its parishes to provide regional grants of up to $5,000.

Last year, within the Diocese of Charlotte, 22 organizations were awarded grants through the diocesan CCHD program totaling $46,827.

Because of these grants, previously homeless people are accessing resources and computer knowledge in seven Appalachian counties served by the Homeless Life Skills Project. In Charlotte, Seigel Avenue Partners operates a literacy-based summer camp for low-income children.

Does God have a cell phone?

Talking to God instead of our 'circle of friends' a better use of minutes

I recently took a continuing education course in a classroom full of real estate agents. I was annoyed by the cacophony of cell phones that kept interrupting the teacher, even after she reminded us to silence our phones before the class started.

Cell phones are a great invention and I thank God for the convenience of having one. However, I can't help but to reflect on the fact that, even as recently as 10 years ago, most people didn't have one, and we weren't as available as we all seem to be these days.

Then I asked myself: Is it really essential for us to answer our phone every time it rings, even when we are clearly not available? Or worse yet, why do we leave our phones on when we are in church?

There is nothing wrong with voice mail — it exists for a reason. And I think it's sad that we can't even give God a whole hour of our undivided attention because we have to be on the look out in case an "important" call pops up.

It's amazing that almost every Sunday a ring tone goes off right in the middle of the Eucharistic Prayer. The usual culprits are the same people who get to Mass in the middle of the first reading and leave church right after Communion.

The next questions I asked myself were: Does God have a cell phone? And if he does, does he turn it off when we pray to him?

Maybe he puts it on vibrate, in case the Virgin Mary has a last-minute request, or if St. Joseph calls when somebody is about to die. Of course the answer would be no — God would turn off his cell phone when we address him.

God is not rude, or inconsiderate, or as self-important as we have become with our collective cellular madness that compels us to leave our cells on always "just in case."

I propose that the world would be a much better place to live in if we all turned off our phones for just 15 minutes a day to try to listen to the voice of God. Let's call it the Divine Plan. The minutes are free and we can't afford not to talk to our Father.

Next time you're stuck in traffic and you're tempted to pick up the phone, just try talking to God instead. God has you in his "circle of friends" and might be trying to call you.

But, ironically, the best way to hear the Father's whisper is to welcome silence. You'll be amazed what 15 minutes of quiet time can do for your soul, and you might save some cell phone minutes, too!

Oops, my phone just rang. I'm out of time. So put your heart and mind in the silent mode, and call our Father now.

Rico DeSilva is a parishioner of St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte.

In rural Asheboro, Montagnard refugees are learning to use modern farming equipment and techniques. Low-income children in the Waynesville area get homework assistance, tutoring and computer lab skills at the Pigeon Community Development Center.

And in Monroe, low-income families get transportation to recreational activities thanks to FAIR Play.

In addition to the 22 local CCHD grants, other grants from the CCHD national office totaling $110,000 went to four groups within the Diocese of Charlotte last year. This money supports such efforts as advocating for a fair wage for North Carolina's migrant farm workers and working for decent low-income housing.

We are fortunate to have strong, local CCHD-funded groups working with the poor in this diocese. They do a tremendous job with the funding we provide, but they could all use more support.

The annual CCHD collection is unique in that it offers Catholics a chance to make a significant difference in the lives of low-income people in a very tangible way. With our donations we can impact these and other funded groups tremendously.

We can make it possible for them to continue offering resources where before there were none, to intervene early to help children succeed in school, to offer alternatives to homelessness and opportunities for family breadwinners to upgrade their skills and job opportunities.

We have the power to make a significant impact on poverty. Please think about the least among us when the CCHD collection takes place in your church Nov. 17 and 18 this year. You're making an investment in the future but, just as important, you're making an investment in the present!

You can affect someone's life for the better — please be as generous as you can when you do.

Mary Jane Bruton is diocesan director of the CCHD.

Six million reasons — and counting — to give back

Stewardship Awareness Sunday a reminder to share God's gifts

On Sunday, Nov. 11, we celebrate Stewardship Awareness Sunday here in the Diocese of Charlotte.

In preparation for the big event, I went to the Internet and googled "steward and stewardship." Much to my surprise, in less than 0.17 seconds I was given 6,880,000 Web sites that were considered a match.

What a plethora of information!

The first Web site gave me the Wikipedia definition of stewardship: "Personal responsibility for taking care of another person's property or financial affairs." In other words, stewardship is the "responsibility to take care of something one does not own."

Many of the remaining 6,879,999 Web sites proceeded to tell me all the things that I did not own. I found references to Southern Appalachian Mountain Stewards, Carolina Farm Stewards, Union Stewards, Whitetail Deer Stewards, Stewards of the Reef, Gowanus Oyster Garden Stewards and millions of organizations reminding me of what I do not own.

With numbers like that, I'd be hard-pressed to find something I did own!

I began reflecting on my own life and the things that I thought I owned or didn't own. I own my "stuff," such as my house, car, clothes, furniture and knickknacks.

It's easy to make the assumption that I somehow earned these things of my own accord. After all, I bought them with my paycheck. But I would not have any of these things if it weren't for the gifts and talents given to me by a generous and loving God.

My thoughts turned to the relationships I have nurtured in my life, such as my children, family, friends, neighbors and co-workers — all blessings from God.

In fact, I couldn't think of a single thing for which I could take full and complete credit. I didn't need more than 6 million Web sites to remind me that everything I have, everything I am, and everything I will become, all are gifts from God.

However, one word did jump off the screen from my Google search — that was "responsibility," as in the "responsibility to take care of something one does not own."

I was reminded of my responsibility to take care of the world I live in, including the Appalachian Mountains, the coral reefs, the whitetail deer, and so on. Indeed, these are all good causes. In fact, every time I read the U.S. bishops' 1992 pastoral letter, "Stewardship: A Disciple's Response," I am reminded of my call to be a good steward of all creation.

But it doesn't stop there! I have a responsibility to take care of my relationships, vocation, job, resources, faith and church. This calls for action on my part — prayer, work and sacrifice.

One of my job responsibilities is to help Catholic churches throughout the diocese promote Stewardship Awareness Sunday. I send them stewardship bulletins as well as lots of ideas for celebrating stewardship and encouraging their parishioners to embrace it as a way of life.

But to be honest, the person it helps the most is me! It gives me an opportunity to re-evaluate my own stewardship of God's gifts.

I take a look at the amount of time I spend in prayer each day, the way I use my God-given talents in service to others and the amount of my treasure that I give to the church and charity.

It gives me a chance to take a step and move forward on my own faith journey, to increase my prayer time, to nurture a new talent, to increase my giving of treasure.

I really don't need 6,880,000 Web sites to remind me that everything really belongs to God. After all, it's right there in the Bible: "For everything is from you, and we only give you what we have received from you" (1 Chronicles 29:14-16).

Christians must live as good citizens, pope says at audience

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICANCITY(CNS)—Christians are obliged to live as good citizens, paying their taxes, sharing with the poor and working for political policies that promote justice and peace, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"A profound relationship between the obligations of a Christian and those of a citizen" exists, the pope said Oct. 31 at his weekly general audience.

Focusing on the teaching of St. Maximus, who became bishop of Turin, Italy, in 398, Pope Benedict explained how barbarian invasions often forced early Christian leaders to become civic leaders as well as spiritual leaders when social structures had fallen into ruin.

While times have changed, he said, "the obligations of the believer toward his city (and) his nation remain valid. The connection between the honest citizen and that of the good Christian has not been surpassed."

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In our catechesis on the fathers of the early church, we now turn from St. Eusebius of Vercelli and St. Ambrose of Milan to another great bishop of northern Italy, St. Maximus of Turin.

We meet Maximus as bishop of Turin in 398, a year after the death of Ambrose. It was a time of growing civil unrest, when Turin had become a centre of refuge for those fleeing before the barbarian invaders.

His homilies reflect a growing awareness of the responsibility of Christians to promote a just social order grounded in solidarity with the poor. Addressed specifically to the wealthy, the homilies inculcate concern for those in need, readiness to sacrifice for the common good and commitment to public service.

Like many other bishops of the time, Maximus found himself called upon to take on greater civic authority and responsibility.

His example and teaching remind us that, whatever the age in which they live, Christian believers are called upon to carry out faithfully their duties as citizens, working to imbue temporal society with the spirit of the Gospel, and striving to achieve a vital synthesis between their duties as citizens of the earthly city and their commitment to work for the coming of God's Kingdom of holiness, justice and peace.

Compassion personified

Memories of Cardinal Joseph Bernardin

Editor's note: Cardinal Joseph Bernardin died 11 years ago this November.

As I walked through the galleries of the National Portrait Gallery in Washington, there before me was a larger-than-life painting of Chicago's Cardinal Joseph Bernardin.

On the inscription next to it, onlookers read that Cardinal Bernardin was well-liked and especially known for his consistent moral ethics.

He taught that good Catholics must not only be against abortion, but also against euthanasia, racism, capital punishment and everything that lowers human dignity.

As I pondered our friendship when he was alive, I could hear a video in the background explaining that portraits make us stop and wonder what prominent people and their times were like.

My thoughts went back to the 1990s at a time when I had a very difficult decision to make. I called Cardinal Bernardin for advice and was told by the sister attending him that he was in great pain due to his pancreatic cancer.

I told her to forget my call and hung up. An hour later I received a call, "Happy Valentine's Day, Gene, what can I do for you?" It was Joe Bernardin returning my call from his deathbed.

No doubt, his many writings and talks have inspired Catholics in Chicago and around the world. What especially made him beloved was the way he reached out to people and attended to their needs.

He was compassion personified.

He also was a unifier. He knew how to work the backroom and coax people into agreeing. He practiced the old proverb, "You can get more bees with honey than vinegar."

My thoughts went further back to the early 1980s when Cardinal Bernardin had his most successful years in directing the church. Entrepreneurial is the best word to describe those years. There was a new project every year.

One year was the year of catechesis, the next the year of the family or the year of youth ministry. Then came Cardinal Bernardin's famous war and peace pastoral letter, which became one of the most-read commentaries on war and possible total annihilation.

During those times, the best of minds came together seeking creative ways to respond to the mounting challenges of a new and unpredictable era. Exciting ideas and possibilities filled the air.

As I exited the National Portrait Gallery, I felt sad. Not only did the portrait of Cardinal Bernardin remind me of the loss of a dear friend, but it reminded me that much of the entrepreneurial spirit of the past is gone, as is the brand of leadership that once existed.

I was consoled, however, in knowing that thousands of people will view Cardinal Bernardin's portrait. Perhaps, just perhaps, one or two of them will be inspired to follow in his footsteps and create a new and more vibrant church.

A 'Diocese Without Borders'

BY J.D. LONG-GARCIA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NOGALES, Mexico — The teens and young adults who filed off buses for Mass along the U.S.-Mexico border Oct. 21 confronted the wall that separates the two countries. While others see division, they saw unity.

The 100 or so young Catholics, who came together in Nogales for an educational retreat Oct. 19-21 at Casa Misericordia, saw artists' renderings of hope and fear painted on the border barrier.

One mural depicted an immigrant caught by a Border Patrol agent while illegally crossing the border. Above the image, written in Spanish, was, "Live to be free. Die to stop being a slave."

Other metallic images hung from the wall: caricatures of hands, coyotes, skulls and dollar signs.

The teens and young adults, from the Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., dioceses and the Archdiocese of Hermosillo, saw these images in a different light after they spent time together.

The weekend experience, which grew out of a partnership between the three dioceses and Catholic Relief Services called "Diocese Without Borders," helped Catholics from the United States and Mexico get to know each other.

"You could feel the excitement. You could tell they wanted to be there," said Jose Robles, director of Hispanic ministry for the Diocese of Phoenix.

"They were showing a lot of respect for each other," he said.

This is the second stage of an ongoing project that the Phoenix diocesan Office of Peace and Justice began in 2005. The first stage was a series of three immersion experiences with youths in each diocese.

While many of the participants were bilingual, others communicated in broken English or Spanish.

Groups from each diocese took turns presenting an aspect of the complex immigration issue, from causes to possible solutions.

On the morning of Oct. 20, the group watched "Dying to Live," a documentary about why immigrants leave their native land and what hardships they suffer on their journey.

The young Catholics then examined newspapers and magazines for other "borders," or social divisions. The group then discussed what values they had in common and where they differed.

Erica Dahl-Bredine from CRS, the U.S. bishops' overseas relief and development agency, spoke about the economics of immigration, explaining that the structures in place in the U.S. and Mexico predate the current immigration situation.

"The U.S. has to play an important part in the economic growth of both countries," said Ignacio Rodriguez, associate director of the Office of Ethnic Ministries for the Phoenix Diocese.

The weekend was an eye-opener for Gerardo Ramos, a teen from San Felipe de Jesus Parish in Nogales, Ariz.

"I didn't know some of the things immigrants have to struggle with to get here," he said, referring to those who cross into the United States illegally. "A lot of them don't make it."

Liz Vasquez, a young Catholic from Agua Prieta in Mexico, spoke about Centro de Atencion al Migrante Exodus, a center at her home parish. The center feeds those who will or have already tried to cross the border.

"If you bring people to centers like that, they'll stop having their stereotypes," she said. "An experience like that will help them understand."

CRS' Marcos Martinez said, "We need to get to know our brothers and sisters on either side of the border. The youth are more open to it."

By listening to each other's stories, "we realize that we are one human family," Martinez said.

Drew Eppehimer, a student at Brophy College Preparatory, a Phoenix Catholic school, said meeting others helped him understand the different perspectives.

"People in the U.S. are quick to criticize people crossing the border," he said. "But what they'd realize is that if the roles were reversed, they'd be doing the same thing."

The "Diocese Without Borders" partnership began in 2002 when bishops of the three dioceses signed "Call to Commitment," a pledge of solidarity. The dioceses then began sharing ministries, materials and exchanging popular and cultural customs.

Bishop Thomas J. Olmsted added his name to the document after he became head of the Phoenix Diocese in 2003.

"The present immigrant problem is one little sign of why this ongoing relationship of the three dioceses in two countries is important. We want to show the unity of the church and the catholicity of the church," the bishop said.

"For us the national borders should not be seen as barriers to keep us apart, but as a responsibility to be good citizens of our particular country and at the same time, true brothers and sisters of Christ to all," he added.

PARTY OF FIVE

The Brooks quintuplets Owen (foreground), Jesse, Emily, Ruth and Helen are pictured in their home in Olathe, Kan., Oct. 7. The quintuplets of Kate and David Brooks were born Oct. 10, 2006. The Kansas couple said learning they were the parents of quintuplets was shocking, numbing and exciting all at once.

Quintuplets bring Catholic couple joy, teach lesson in patience

OLATHE, Kan. (CNS) — It takes a village to raise a child.

When Kate and David Brooks found out they were expecting for the second time, they had no idea how true those words would become for their family.

Shortly thereafter, the couple found out that Kate was carrying not one, but five babies. Quintuplets.

"It was shocking, numbing, and exciting all at once," said Kate Brooks. "The first two weeks after we found out about the pregnancy were overwhelming. I kept thinking, 'What am I going to do?'"

The options given to the Brookses, who were already parents to 1-year-old Mallory, were to reduce the pregnancy to two or three babies, terminate the entire pregnancy or carry the pregnancy as it was to term.

The doctors gave them a few weeks to make a decision. The answer came to them during Mass.

"This is what I'm supposed to do. I'm supposed to be a mom of six kids. This is my mission," she said.

The quintuplets were born Oct. 10, 2006. Emily, Owen, Jesse, Ruth and Helen all made their appearance into the world — in that order — each weighing around 2 pounds, 8 ounces. As premature babies, they required some extra care and time in hospitals — each for different problems.

Owen was the first one released to go home, Dec. 20, 2006; the rest followed. The last to arrive home was Helen, on April 4.

"The past year has been a blur," admitted Kate Brooks. "It's all about them. Having them has taught me a lot of patience. I have to let the little things go and just enjoy these babies."

Having five infants at once required a few more sets of hands than just Mom and Dad, so the Brooks family has relied on a steady parade of volunteers from the day the first baby came home.

Volunteers have come largely from St. Agnes Church in Roeland Park, the family's parish at the time of the babies' births, and now also from Prince of Peace Church, where the Brookses moved last spring.

Kate Brooks estimates 30 individuals are in the family's home on a weekly basis, ranging from teenagers to grandparents.

Kay Osborn was the Brooks family's first volunteer and has come to be such a part of their life that she is referred to as "Grandma Kay."

"With all things, the more you give, the more you receive," Osborn said. "This family has given me back so much; they are a wonderful blessing to me."

Congress urged to consider global warming measures' impact on poor

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The chairman of the U.S. bishops' international policy committee and other religious leaders said Oct. 31 that, as Congress begins to consider measures to address global warming, lawmakers must protect "those often missing from the debate — the vulnerable and often voiceless people at home and around the world."

"We are convinced the real 'inconvenient truth' about climate change is that those who contribute least to the problem are likely to suffer the most," said Bishop Thomas G. Wenski of Orlando, Fla.

He made the comments during a teleconference with reporters. Other religious leaders who participated included Rev. Richard Cizik, vice president for governmental affairs for the National Association of Evangelicals, and Rev. Michael Livingston, president of the National Council of Churches.

"For us, the moral measure of legislation is how it protects 'the least among us' ... in our nation and on the planet we share," Bishop Wenski said.

On Nov. 1 a subcommittee of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee voted 4-3 to send a bill — called America's Climate Security Act — to cap greenhouse gas emissions to the full committee. Among other things, the bill aims to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by as much as 19 percent from 2005 levels by 2020 and by as much as 63 percent by 2050.

"We are grateful that overdue and essential legislative deliberations are now moving forward and we appreciate the good faith and encouraging efforts under way to address these priorities by the leaders of this important effort," Bishop Wenski said.

He added, "The church's voice and advocacy will focus primarily on reducing the unfair burdens and protecting the lives and dignity of those often missing from the debate, vulnerable and often voiceless people."

FROM THE VATICAN

Vatican document calls for an end to discrimination against Gypsies

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Stereotypes, racism and discrimination against Gypsies must be overcome, said a new Vatican document.

Both people of Gypsy origin and non-Gypsies "are involved in acts of racism; race must not separate us; instead efforts must be made to favor unity in diversity," it said.

The document, distributed to journalists Nov. 5, outlines conclusions and recommendations made during the first world meeting of Gypsy priests, deacons and religious.

The meeting, held in late September at the Vatican, was sponsored by the Pontifical Council for Migrants and Travelers, and was inspired by the council's 2006 "Guidelines for the Pastoral Care of Gypsies."

Seeing Gypsies "only as poor people to be helped" must be abandoned, the new document said.

It added that Catholics must come to see that they too are "poor and in need of accepting the human and spiritual riches the Gypsies bring."

The document said consecrated Gypsies could help build understanding between cultures.

It said men and women religious of Gypsy origin — like all consecrated people — are "ambassadors of Christ" and can help encourage "reconciliation and communion between" Gypsies and non-Gypsies.

"Contemporary Gypsy culture is in a stage of change because of technological development, the influence of the mass media and literacy," the six-page document said.

Not only has this helped Gypsies become more aware of their own dignity and take pride in their culture, but it also "offers new possibilities for evangelization," the text said.

Participants: More knowledge of embryo's origin, development needed

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A better scientific understanding of the origin and development of the human embryo can help answer many of today's hot-button bioethical issues, said participants in a Vatican-sponsored project.

Participants in the project, "Science, Technology and the Ontological Quest," were to hold an international conference in Rome Nov. 15-17. It was to bring together medical doctors, scientists, jurists, philosophers and theologians to discuss the genesis of human life.

Open, honest and accurate study and debate can help contribute to "an authentic sense of mankind," said Archbishop Gianfranco Ravasi, president of the Pontifical Council for Culture, which coordinates the project.

Titled "Ontogeny and Human Life," the conference will try to promote dialogue between experts and scholars from different schools of thought, and prompt them to work together "for the quest for truth," said Pietro Ramellini, professor at the Pontifical Regina Apostolorum Athenaeum.

The concept of genesis should have a greater place in today's studies of biology, he said, because the "question of the identity and status of the human embryo" has raised "numerous and hot bioethical debates that have had important social and political repercussions for many nations."

Father Rafael Pascual, dean of the philosophy department at Regina Apostolorum, said that understanding the origin of life is key to protecting people's innate and inviolable dignity and rights.

In today's world, where society must confront bioethical issues such as artificial reproduction, cloning, genetic manipulation and embryonic stem-cell research, "the study of human life from the point of view of its individual origin takes on a particular concern," he said.

Participants also will seek to elaborate on issues that emerged during a conference Regina Apostolorum organized five years ago on evolution, he said.

In fact, the next "Science, Technology and the Ontological Quest" project will be a conference on evolution in 2009, the 150th anniversary of the publication of Charles Darwin's "The Origin of Species."

Exchanging gifts and ideas

Saudi Arabia's King Abdullah Aziz presents a gift to Pope Benedict XVI during their meeting at the Vatican Nov. 6. Interreligious dialogue, peace in the Middle East and the life of Christians living in Saudi Arabia were on the agenda the 30-minute meeting behind closed doors.

In keeping with normal protocol, Pope Benedict and King Abdullah exchanged gifts. The pope gave the king a large etching of the Vatican made in 1550 and a gold medal. The king gave the pope a small silver and gold sculpture of a camel rider under a palm tree and a long gold sword with a gem-encrusted handle.

Bush to nominate Glendon as ambassador to Vatican

WASHINGTON (CNS) — President George W. Bush will nominate Mary Ann Glendon, a U.S. law professor and president of the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences, as the new U.S. ambassador to the Vatican.

The White House made the announcement late Nov. 5. The nomination is official when Bush sends it to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which will hold a hearing before sending the nomination to the full Senate for confirmation. As of Nov. 6, no hearing had been scheduled.

Glendon, a Catholic, said in a Nov. 6 statement that she hoped that her "background in international legal studies, together with my familiarity with Catholic social thought, will aid me in continuing the fruitful dialogue that presently exists between the United States and the Holy See" on a variety of issues.

Those issues include human rights, religious freedom, human trafficking, development and "the fight against hunger, disease and poverty," she said.

'Like angels singing'

ASHEVILLE — Heavenly voices recently filled the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville.

The choral artistry of Glorie Dei Cantores was presented at the basilica Sept. 27.

The sold-out performance was sponsored by the basilica, Trinity Episcopal Church and the Western Carolina Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Andrew Davis, music director at the basilica, and Sharon Boone, music director at Trinity Episcopal, were instrumental in bringing the internationally renowned 40-voice choir to Asheville for the second time.

In addition to Gregorian chants and European, Russian and American masterpieces from the Renaissance to contemporary times, the concert featured instrumental pieces with trumpets, French horns and trombones.

"It felt like angels singing," said Frances Proctor of Asheville.

The choir "gave me goose bumps," said Barbara Buffington of Arden.

Gloriae Dei Cantores (Singers to the Glory of God) has performed in 23 countries in Europe, Asia and North America. The choir — comprised of singers from 17 to 70 years of age — sings in 18 languages and has a discography of more than 30 recordings.

"It was such a blessing to have seen God through the eyes of so many people throughout the world," Elizabeth Patterson, choir director, told the audience.

Catholic radio struggles, seeks help in Charlotte

6-9 a.m. Sunday morning broadcast would serve as a springboard to a more ambitious project — operating the first full-time Catholic radio station in the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte.

Despite offering a variety of Catholic programming, the show is struggling to find an audience, according to Brion Blais, Sacred Heart president.

The broadcasts feature devotionals such as recitation of the rosary; prayers by Father John Putnam, pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury; classic recordings by Mother Angelica, founder of the Eternal Word Television Network in Alabama; and "The Doctor Is In" program, during which two Catholic psychologists offer advice.

"It gives us the opportunity to teach about the faith and to offer practical solutions to everyday problems," said Blais.

The volunteers at Sacred Heart have speculated on the broadcast's low number of listeners.

Part of the problem may be WDTY's signal. The station's power was recently increased to 25,000 watts, but dead spots in the coverage area may make it difficult to hear the broadcast.

Also, the station's transmission tower is in Gastonia, where FCC regulations prohibit the station from operating at full power until sunrise — this means potential audience members in the Charlotte area are unable to pick up the signal in the winter months until after 7 a.m.

Finally, the programming has a lot of on-air competition. To draw listeners, Blais said Sacred Heart is reaching out to Catholics through church bulletin announcements.

In addition to more listeners, Sacred Heart — which operates independently of the Diocese of Charlotte and receives all of its financial support from donors — is seeking volunteers.

Blais said Sacred Heart is searching for potential board members who "have the business acumen and interest to take us to the next level, which would include a capital campaign, purchase of a station and its set up."

Specifically, he said, Sacred Heart needs a treasurer, an accountant and an attorney who is familiar with business law.

Blais, like the other volunteers on Sacred Heart's board, said he feels their efforts are guided by the Holy Spirit. With prayer and perseverance, he said, they will achieve their goals.

Knights announce student essay contest winners

HENDERSONVILLE — The Knights of Columbus recently announced the winners of a student essay contest.

Knights of Columbus Council 7184 awarded the winners of its annual contest during a school assembly at Immaculata School in Hendersonville Oct. 31.

First place winner was sixth-grader Hannah Krowka; second place winner was seventh-grader Elizabeth Lackey; and third place winner was eighth-grader Claire O'Leary.

The contest, sponsored by Council 7184 since 2002, commemorates the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, by challenging sixth-through-eighth-grade students at Immaculata School to write up to 500 words on a patriotic theme chosen by the Knights and school staff.

This year's theme was "What can we do today to improve our environment for tomorrow?"

The essays were judged by a three-member panel from the Knights and the winners were announced during a school assembly. The winners each received a commemorative medal and cash award.

Army addresses gaps in care for injured troops returning to U.S.

Catholic couple works to help heal fellow soldiers

BY THERESA LAURENCE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Wounded veterans of the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq are about to get more adequate support while they recover at new warrior transition units across the country.

"These soldiers deserve the best for giving their all," and until now they had not been receiving it, said Army Sgt. Maj. David Allard, battalion leader for the new unit at Fort Campbell, an Army base on the Kentucky-Tennessee border.

The new units will include physicians, nurses, squad leaders, platoon sergeants and mental health professionals responsible for the soldiers' health care needs.

With a new staff and recently completed barracks to house 187 recovering soldiers, Fort Campbell's warrior transition unit is one of the largest in the country.

It has been a slow start for Allard and his staff, who are still shifting around office space and realizing changes that need to be made to the barracks to make them fully compliant with the federal Americans With Disabilities Act.

"It's been a challenge, but worth it," according to Christy Allard, David's wife and a member of the Army National Guard who works on the post with the unit.

David and Christy Allard, both Catholics, are, as Christy joked, members of the "universal church," since they go to Mass at Fort Campbell and at churches in Clarksville, Nashville and Hopkinsville, Ky.

They attend daily Mass. Rosary beads dangle from the rearview mirror in the family minivan.

They belong to the Cathedral Veterans Prayer Group, which meets monthly at the Cathedral of the Incarnation in Nashville, and are also members of the U.S. Army Sgt. Maj. David Allard, a Catholic, is the battalion leader for the newly established warrior transition unit at Fort Campbell in Kentucky. He is pictured at Fort Campbell Oct. 30.

Passionist Partners.

Partners formally commit to the charism of the founder of the Passionist congregation, St. Paul of the Cross, through a contemplative prayer life.

When Christy Allard told the cathedral prayer group about the new transition units, the World War II and Vietnam-era veterans said they "really wished they could have had a program like this," she said.

The existing Army support services were adequate before the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, "but once injured soldiers started returning from Afghanistan and Iraq, these small units were overwhelmed," David Allard said.

The Army is now dedicating more resources and hiring many new military and civilian staff members for the warrior transition units, with a priority on lowering the ratio of support personnel to soldiers.

Each squad leader has a maximum of 12 soldiers to care for, whereas in the past he or she could have as many as 50.

Wounded soldiers are generally admitted to Fort Campbell's warrior transition unit if they need six months or more of medical care and rehabilitation.

"Their sole purpose while they're here is to heal," David Allard said.

In addition to a squad leader, soldiers are also assigned a primary care manager, who conducts their medical evaluation and establishes their "road map to recovery," and a case manager who keeps up with their appointments.

The Army also is setting up soldier family assistance centers to provide administrative and social work services for family members staying.

"The warrior transition unit is not only about the soldier, but also about the families," said Christy Allard.

Soldiers' families need support too, and can help squad leaders identify if a soldier is suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder or traumatic brain injury, which she described as the "signature wounds from Iraq."

When soldiers are nearing the end of their healing process at Fort Campbell, they are evaluated to determine if they can return to active duty, should return to a different job, or need help transitioning out of the military and into civilian life.

Army Brig. Gen. Michael Tucker, deputy commanding general of the North Atlantic Regional Medical Command, has emphasized the importance of providing complete care to returning soldiers and making sure they are set for the future.

During an Army medical action-plan conference this summer in San Antonio he stressed the need to help injured soldiers learn and hone skills they could use if they decide to leave the military.

"We want to allow these soldiers to be everything they want to be in life, and not allow them just to focus on the 'bad leg,' so to speak, but let's focus on them going back out into the civilian world and being a productive citizen in society," he said.

Cathedral serves as refuge for flood evacuees in Mexico

up outside the arched door, waiting packets of food and water.

The elegant cathedral in the Tabasco state capital of Villahermosa has transformed into one of the principal centers for evacuees fleeing floods that devastated southeastern Mexico in late October, leaving at least 10 dead and hundreds of thousands homeless, turning sections of this city into a hazardous swamp.

More arrive daily to take shelter every corner of the cathedral and throughout its patio and gardens.

Each one brings a story of personal tragedy: how filthy waters enveloped their homes; how they fled from rooftops onto boats and helicopters moving over the riverlike streets; how they lost sight of their loved ones in the chaos.

But amid the suffering, the evacuees are calm and orderly, taking turns to sweep and wash the church aisles and waiting patiently in long lines for the relief packages, even when they have not had food or drink for days.

"We are not going to fight over the food. Everybody here has suffered the same," said Maria del Carmen Arias, 48, sitting in the doorway of the crowded church with a sleeping granddaughter in her lap.

Arias said her family of eight escaped through waist-deep water after the river suddenly gushed into their home, taking everything they owned.

Like many of the disaster victims, she is from a poor background, living in a neighborhood of tin and cinderblock houses on low ground. She comes from a family of peasants who moved to the city looking for a better life, and she said now she might head back to the countryside and stay with relatives.

Graciela Cruz, 25, slept in the church by night while desperately trying to find her mother during the day. She had not seen her since the floods overtook their house four days earlier.

"I have been to every center and there is no sign of her," Cruz said. "I am here praying she has not been hurt."

Father Manuel de la Cruz Ordonez Hernandez, cathedral rector, said he is unconcerned about the church being damaged while thousands of evacuees live and sleep in every corner of it.

"We are not worried at all. We can repaint the cathedral, rebuild it. Why would we want a beautiful church if the people are suffering?" Father Ordonez asked, talking amid a flurry of requests: an evacuee needs medical help; a new truck of relief supplies has arrived; the electricity lighting up the courtyard has gone out.

Most of the cathedral's Masses have been canceled, but one is celebrated nightly in front of the thousands of evacuees and others who come to join them.

"We are happy that people have a space. God is happy they can hear his word," Father Ordonez said. "The people are desperate and resigned, but they are also patient."

In other parts of the city, residents were more frantic.

Desperate for help

An angry crowd blocked a road on the outskirts of Villahermosa, shouting they had not had food and water for days. Their neighborhood had not been flooded, but it had been cut off by water from three sides, and there were no supplies arriving.

As in most of the city, all the shops were boarded up, their shelves stripped bare by panic buying and lack of new shipments. Eventually, a truck of federal police drove up and handed out relief packages.

"You don't get anything unless you fight for it," said Reyes Bernal, who had blocked the road to demand the help.

In some parts of the city, people did not wait for the trucks, but broke into stores and warehouses to pull out food and drink. A few also helped themselves to other goods, including clothes and TV sets.

Military and police officials said they arrested more than 40 people for looting.

"We will not tolerate looting. Help is arriving," said Mexican President Felipe Calderon, who visited the city three times in the last week.

Government agencies and church charities from across Mexico and the United States and Europe were sending relief after images of the tragedy were beamed across the world.

"We are seeing one of the worst natural catastrophes in the history of the country, not only because of the size of the area affected, but because of the number of people affected," Calderon said.

The swampy oil state of Tabasco has a history of flooding, but has never seen anything of this magnitude. After a week of heavy rain, two large rivers that snake through Villahermosa burst over the city dams Oct. 31, inundating whole neighborhoods with filthy black water.

The rain continued in the following days until most of the city was under water. Since the first weekend in November, the water levels have started to recede, but only slowly.

Widespread devastation

The scale of the devastation is seen most clearly from the air.

Large swaths of the city appear like a huge lagoon, from which peek the tops of houses. The vast inland sea continues over smaller towns and villages into the Gulf of Mexico. Small neighborhoods on higher ground form little islands, cut off on all sides.

Emergency helicopters and boats continued to rescue people Nov. 5, ferrying some needing urgent medical help.

In a sports stadium being used as the headquarters for rescue and relief operations, helicopters were touching down and rushing people out on stretchers and into ambulances.

Medical help is made more difficult by the fact that many hospitals have been flooded and evacuated.

The filthy water full of dead animals and garbage also raises fears of disease, and crews have been vaccinating and testing, worried about outbreaks of cholera, hepatitis and dengue fever.

Thousands have abandoned the city completely, leaving in lines of cars or taking free bus rides to emergency shelters in other Mexican states.

Restaurant owner Catlixco Perez, 56, headed out with his family on the long road to Mexico City, their treasured items crammed into their car.

"The most important thing is that we are all OK," Perez said. "There are people out there who don't know where their loved ones are."

Some preferred to stay in their houses, fearing they could be robbed or just not wanting to abandon their homes. Even in heavily flooded areas, families continued to take refuge on the second floor and refuse offers of evacuation.

Relief crews on boats gave water, food and medicine to those choosing to stay.

Domingo Bautista, 52, and his wife stayed on their top floor in a flooded street for five days, but eventually decided to leave on a boat.

"We needed to get more food," he said, wading out of a boat into a street that had become a makeshift dock. "Hopefully we will be back home soon."

Bishop visits migrant farmworkers in diocese

The Migrant Farmworker Apostolate coordinates and develops pastoral outreach to the 3 to 5 million migrant and seasonal agricultural laborers in the United States. The apostolate is overseen by the U.S. bishops' Office of Migration and Refugee Services, which serves and advocates for immigrants, refugees, migrants and other people "on the move."

Also visiting the diocese was Sister Myrna Tordillo, a Missionary Sister of St. Charles Borromeo, who works as the coordinator for People on the Move Ministries. A ministry of the Office of Migration and Refugee Services, People on the Move provide pastoral outreach to migrant farmworkers; race car drivers; circus and carnival workers; Gypsies and Irish Travelers; and people who work and travel by land, air and sea.

Bishop Manz and Sister Tordillo met with Bishop Peter J. Jugis and Hispanic vicariate coordinators for the Diocese of Charlotte at the diocesan Pastoral Center in Charlotte Oct. 26. The following day, Bishop Manz and Sister Tordillo visited a Christmas tree farm in Newland, N.C., one of many farms in the diocese employing migrant workers.

He speaks fluent Spanish, which he learned while working as a parish priest with Mexican communities in the Chicago area.

Bishop Manz makes similar visits to farmworkers in different states each year, evaluating the living and working conditions, as well the pastoral care, of migrant workers. The visits, which began in 1991, enable Bishop Manz and the other bishops who have served as episcopal liaisons to the farmworker industry to bring back to the national body of bishops firsthand experience.

Some workers live in Spartan conditions, in mobile trailers with no furniture or 24 men sleeping in bunk beds in a steel barn, said Franciscan Sister Andrea Inkrott, director of Hispanic ministry for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Many work 12 hours a day, seven days a week during the harvest season.

"All migrant workers are people who need work and without whom farmers could not bring in their harvest," said Sister Inkrott.

Many Protestant churches send ministers to farms to preach the Gospel and evangelize migrant workers, a practice most Catholic churches have not yet adopted, Sister Inkrott said.

"Catholics need to recognize that migrants are here and need our

Missionaries of Charity give life, love with adoptions in India

BY ANTO AKKARA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Editor's note: November is National Adoption Month.

CALCUTTA, India — Life changed for Sonali and Sanjib Dutta after the Hindu couple adopted a girl with the help of the Missionaries of Charity after 12 years of marriage without a child.

Dutta, a pharmaceutical salesman in Calcutta, said his wife “spends all her time looking after our daughter, and life is so cheerful now.”

Two of his friends also adopted baby girls from the Missionaries of Charity, he told Catholic News Service in mid September. The Duttas adopted their daughter in 2006.

“It is a crime to abort a child. They do not know the craving the childless people have,” Dutta said.

Pointing to the children running around the “Sishu Bhavan,” or Children’s Home, run by the Missionaries of Charity in Calcutta, Sister Marian said the children “are fruits of the Mother’s (Mother Teresa’s) crusade against abortion.”

Sister Marian is the coordinator of adoption services for the Missionaries of Charity, the order founded by Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

Since the first Sishu Bhavan was set up by Mother Teresa in 1955, the Missionaries of Charity have helped with more than 6,500 adoptions.

Living up to her pledge to support women with unwanted pregnancies, Mother Teresa opened Missionaries of Charity homes in India and abroad to unwed mothers, giving them a place to stay and give birth.

Sister Marian said an overwhelming majority of the children in the Sishu Bhavans are from mothers who stay at these homes.

Of the 245 Missionaries of Charity homes in India, 19 hold government registration for adoptions and the three Sishu Bhavans in Calcutta, Delhi and Mumbai facilitate international adoptions.

Sister Marian related the dream of one 16-year-old who stayed at a Missionaries of Charity home. The young mother said the night before her aunt had arranged for her to have an abortion, she dreamed that her unborn child pleaded not to be killed and begged to see sunshine and the world.

All the children adopted “have brought cheers and sunshine to the couples without children,” the nun said.

Sister Marian, who coordinates the adoption service of the Missionaries of Charity, plays with orphan children at the “Sishu Bhavan,” or Children’s Home, near the Missionaries of Charity Mother House in Calcutta, India, in early September.

When unwed mothers leave the Missionaries of Charity home after giving birth, Sister Marian said they sign paperwork permitting an adoption. The nuns wait months before initiating the process, Sister Marian said, so a few mothers come back wanting their baby.

Sister Marian said that lately, in a country where prejudice against girls is widespread, many Indian couples have opted for adopting baby girls. According to UNICEF, 7,000 fewer girls are born in India every day than the global average because of female feticide due to social prejudice.

“Many couples now insist on a girl child and do not want a boy,” she said. “We are really happy about it.”

life as a new family when the Kings arrived at home in Akron Dec. 25, 2006. It was a Christmas Day unlike any other.

"We now have these three amazing boys who send me laughing everyday," said James King.

The Kings, parishioners of St. Hilary Church in Fairlawn, Ohio, originally did not intend to adopt three children.

Married for 15 years and with Eastern European backgrounds, they considered the option of adopting a Russian infant and contacted Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte, N.C., a licensed child-placement agency providing domestic and international adoption services in Russia and China.

The Kings soon learned that siblings and older children were less likely to be adopted.

"Bert and I realized we had enough love to give more than one child," said James King, principal of St. Martin of Tours School in Maple Heights, Ohio.

Within two days of filing an application to adopt in Russia, the Kings were notified by the Russian government that they needed to be in Moscow within two weeks.

CSS helped arrange the Kings' trip to Moscow, providing them with a Russian team including a driver and translator.

James and Roberta King of Akron, Ohio are pictured with Alexi, 6, Nikita, 4, and Misha, 2, during a family wedding in Cleveland, Ohio, June 30, 2007. The Kings adopted the three brothers from Russian orphanages in 2006 through Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte.

After visiting the orphanages and meeting the brothers, the Kings returned home eager to file the paperwork to adopt all three boys.

The adoption process went smoothly and the new family was soon on their way to the United States.

Once together in Akron, Alexi and his brothers bonded quickly. Alexi's health has improved, and he and his brothers are learning English with the help of the Russian language the Kings studied prior to adopting.

"They would never have known each other (in Russia). Now they are inseparable," said James King. "They are phenomenal kids who would not have had a chance."

Uniting families

Since founding its international adoption program in 1994, CSS in the Diocese of Charlotte has placed more than 600 Russian children in homes throughout the United States. CSS currently places between 80 and 100 children each year with couples who have been married at least two years and with single women.

All approved persons and families are carefully screened and prepared to welcome their children.

"The mission of our international adoption program is to bring together children in need with loving families who can care for them," said Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of CSS of the Diocese of Charlotte.

CSS of the Diocese of Charlotte is the only Catholic agency in the United States with a direct-placement program in Russia. This means CSS deals directly with Russian authorities in placing children in U.S. homes, usually making the adoption process faster and less expensive than an agency without direct placement capability.

"CSS' support, know-how and professionalism — and their team in Russia — were outstanding," said James King. "Whenever we had questions, they were there."

The CSS international adoption program emphasizes support, preparation and education.

"All children in orphanages should be considered special-needs children," said Thurbee.

They tend to miss the experience of close relationships and personal attention, and they lack many opportunities for proper growth, she said. Children in orphanages who are not adopted may be more likely to struggle as adults.

"Most often with special attention, lots of love and encouragement, and opportunities to grow, these children thrive," said Thurbee.

Thurbee and others from CSS visited Russian orphanages twice a year between 1994 and 2000. Since that time, Russia has restricted orphanage visits to adoptive families.

Thurbee reported that many facilities housed rooms filled with cribs and sparsely furnished playrooms. Too few caregivers could not respond to children when they cried.

"Infants learn not to cry because no one is available when they need them," said Thurbee.

Toddlers often do not get the exercise needed to develop their muscles and coordination.

"Many adoptive parents comment that in the first months after placement, their toddler's motor skills improved dramatically," said Thurbee.

Thurbee noted that a growing Russian economy and humanitarian aid from adoption agencies are helping to improve the care of children remaining in the orphanages.

CSS currently places children from several regions in Russia.

"Catholic social teaching directs our mission to be part of the solution when there are children in great need," said Thurbee.

For the Kings, their solution was to keep Alexi, Nikita and Misha together.

"When the boys are in bed at night, we look at them and at each other," said King. "What can we say? There aren't words. It is amazing. Life is good."

ICEL completes draft translation of book of prayers for Mass

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The International Commission on English in the Liturgy announced it has completed draft translations of the 2002 Roman Missal, the book of prayers used for Mass.

In a Nov. 1 statement, Bishop Arthur Roche of Leeds, England, said the commission had sent English-speaking bishops the draft translation of the final section of the Missal.

"Thus, the draft phase of the commission's work of translating the Missal has been brought to completion, some five years after the publication of the original," the statement said.

Members of the 11 bishops' conferences sponsoring ICEL are asked to review the draft translation, make comments or suggestions, and return those to ICEL by March 2008.

The bishops' suggestions and those of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, which established the Vox Clara Committee to help it review English translations, are used by ICEL to prepare a final proposed translation.

The individual bishops' conferences vote on the translation, with or without local adaptations, and submit it to the Congregation for Divine Worship and Sacraments for final approval.

While ICEL has completed the first drafts of all the Mass prayers, it expected to continue working until the end of 2008 preparing the final proposed translations for the bishops' conferences.

The 11 conferences cover Australia, Canada, England and Wales, India, Ireland, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Scotland, South Africa and the United States.

The last section of the Missal to be translated into English consisted of material listed in the appendix of the original Latin-language missal.

According to the statement, the bishops are getting their first look at prayers for blessing and sprinkling holy water; the rite for commissioning a minister to distribute Communion; and 11 sets of sample formulas for the "universal prayer" or prayers of the faithful for specific times of year or specific circumstances.

Also included in the new draft are translations of a variety of prayers priests can use in their personal preparation for celebrating Mass and for giving thanks after having celebrated the liturgy.

The Latin-language missal's original appendix also included eucharistic prayers for Masses with children and eucharistic prayers for reconciliation and for various other needs. Draft translations of those prayers were sent to the bishops for comment earlier, ICEL said.

Vatican publishes copy of 1962 Roman Missal as part of study series

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — As part of a collection of studies on ancient liturgical texts, the Vatican publishing house has published a copy of the 1962 Roman Missal, the book of Mass prayers used for the Tridentine Mass.

Published Oct. 19, the book is basically a scholarly commentary on the old Mass, but it includes in the back a copy of the missal the Vatican had issued 45 years ago, said Carmelite Father Edmondo Caruana, secretary of the publishing house.

"It is in the form of a small altar missal so it could be used for the liturgy," Father Caruana said.

However, he said, it would be inaccurate to say the Vatican has republished the missal for liturgical use. Missals and other books of prayers and rituals designed exclusively for liturgical use have a special cover and binding and do not include commentary.

The Vatican publishing house has received many inquiries about buying liturgical copies of the 1962 Missal, and those calls are directed to the Pontifical Commission "Ecclesia Dei," which is responsible for matters concerning the implementation of Pope Benedict XVI's July decree authorizing wider use of the old Mass.

Never grow weary of doing what's right

BY JEFF HENSLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

This week's readings have a great deal to say about the second coming of the Lord and the rather terrifying events and persecutions of Christians leading up to that event, as well as the glory of the coming kingdom when God will be praised and worshipped — joyfully by all.

The reading from the Second Letter to the Thessalonians comes toward the end of this little Epistle in which Paul addressed a community of which too many members were overly concerned about these events and anticipated their approach by sitting around idle and getting into each others' business.

This is where Paul's famous phrase "anyone who would not work would not eat" comes into sacred Scripture.

Decades ago when I was a poor college student, my wife and I lived next door to a fearful (but well-dressed and socially prominent) widow of advanced years.

She spent much of her time looking out the window of her home, peeking through the blinds, fearful of any unexplained cars parked on our busy street.

Somehow I was influenced by her behavior, very narrowly missing one opportunity to help someone whose car trouble had caused him to come to a halt in front of our house.

Never before or since have I allowed myself to be infected by this fear of harm or loss of my possessions, but I did for a time allow a bit of paranoia to enter my life through this lady's influence.

Perhaps I, like the busybodies Paul refers to, had too much time on my hands.

Likewise, I think some Christian communities generate fear to one another over anticipation of the second coming of our Lord, taking their attention away from the call on each of us to proclaim and live in the kingdom of God right now and draw others to the love of Jesus and the service of his church, our communities and the poor.

Just after the close of the passage from the Second Letter to the Thessalonians, Paul summarizes the response that community should have been striving for when, in verse 13, he writes, "You must never grow weary of doing what is right." And neither should we.

Questions:

Is fear of the future keeping you from serving the needs of others? How might you start living in God's kingdom in the present moment, showing his love to others?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"But for you who fear my name, there will arise the sun of justice with its healing rays" (Malachi 3:20a).

A broken 'Golden Compass'

Author of book behind fantasy novels criticized as anti-Christian

BY DENIS GRASSKA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SAN DIEGO — To all of those Christian critics who have denounced the "Harry Potter" series as a subversive effort to lure unsuspecting children into the occult, Baylor University professor Perry Glanzer warns: Quit crying wolf.

In a commentary appearing in early August in the Austin American-Statesman newspaper, Glanzer noted that while social critics have blasted J.K. Rowling's tales of Harry Potter at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, they have uttered nary a word about British writer Philip Pullman's "His Dark Materials," which Glanzer and others say is an overtly anti-Christian trilogy of fantasy novels for young adults.

The trilogy includes "The Golden Compass," "The Subtle Knife" and "The Amber Spyglass."

"I think that as long as people are agitated about whether Harry Potter makes you into a satanist, they're not going to be very bothered with me," Pullman said in an interview with Amazon.com. "So, I'm happy to (take) shelter under the great umbrella of Harry Potter."

A film adaptation of "The Golden Compass," starring Nicole Kidman and Daniel Craig, is set to debut in theaters Dec. 7. The Aug. 24 issue of Entertainment Weekly reported that the film will make no direct references to the Catholic Church.

The article also quoted Kidman, who recently reconnected with her Catholic faith, as saying, "I wouldn't be able to do this film if I thought it were at all anti-Catholic." The Academy Award-winning actress also said that the material "has been watered down a little" in the transition from page to screen.

Critics of Pullman include the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, which said its position is not "that the movie will strike Christian parents as troubling," noting that it is based "on the least offensive of the three books."

But, the league said in an Oct. 9 statement, viewers of the film "may very well find it engaging and then buy Pullman's books for Christmas. That's the problem."

Glanzer also pointed out that Pullman told The Washington Post that through his work, "I'm trying to undermine the basis of Christian belief."

But those who praise his work say he is not attacking Christianity itself, but criticizing dogmatism and how religion is used to oppress people.

"His Dark Materials" recounts the adventures of Lyra Belacqua, a 12-year-old girl in an alternate universe that resembles our own. With the assistance of several other characters, she sets out to overthrow the Authority. The novels depict him as a weak, false god and, in the final book in the trilogy, he actually dies.

Also, an angel informs one of the main characters that "God, the Creator, the Lord, Yahweh, El, Adonai, the King, the Father, the Almighty" are really all just names the first angel gave himself in an attempt to set himself up as a divine being.

The novels also take a harsh view of the church, which is called the Magisterium and is depicted as an oppressive institution that appears to have fallen for the Authority's ruse.

The church's minions are the books' principal villains, who are obsessed with a substance called Dust, which is connected to original sin. They are not above kidnapping and performing experiments on innocent children.

One character states that, since its beginning, the church has "tried to suppress and control every natural impulse," and that all churches share the same fundamental goals: to "control, destroy, obliterate every good feeling."

"His Dark Materials" has amassed a collection of prestigious awards. Yet British columnist Peter Hitchens has dubbed Pullman "the most dangerous author in Britain."

"In his worlds, the church is wicked, cruel and child-hating; priests are sinister, murderous or drunk," Hitchens wrote for the Daily Mail newspaper in January 2002.

In an interview with Third Way Magazine, a Christian publication, Pullman said he agreed with his character Mary Malone, who states in "The Amber Spyglass" that Christianity is "a very powerful and convincing mistake," and he rejected the "ugly vision" presented by C.S. Lewis' "The Chronicles of Narnia," a popular Christian fantasy series.

Middle school students in costumes at Our Lady of Mercy School in Winston-Salem teach younger students during "Visual Vocabulary Day" on Halloween Oct. 31. The older students dressed up as vocabulary words and taught mini-lessons (using their costumes as visual components) to help students learn new words, such as "doughboy" and "monochromatic." Lessons included definitions, origins and examples of various words.

The concept was inspired by the book, "Miss Alainus: A Vocabulary Disaster," in which a character thinks the word "miscellaneous" is a person. The event was organized by sixth-grade teacher Susan Gavin.

Students learn much in 'Saint Museum'

BY KATHLEEN HEALY SCHMIEDER
CORRESPONDENT

HENDERSONVILLE — All Saints' Day became a unique learning experience for students at Immaculata School in Hendersonville.

Teacher Maria Ashbrook brought various saints to life through her "Saint Museum," a project researched and developed by her seventh-grade class.

Her students each chose a saint to represent, learned about that saint's life and then presented the saint's biography to the school on All Saints' Day, Nov. 1.

"Saints are very important as role models," Ashbrook said. "They were not extraordinary. They made a firm commitment to do what they did for Jesus."

"I want the students to know that saints come in all sizes, colors and ages. Some are holy all their lives; others, like the good thief, 'steal heaven,'" said Ashbrook, who teaches Spanish to the school and religion to the middle school classes.

A classroom was converted into the Saint Museum, where students dressed as saints stood as statues on chairs. When a "button" was pushed at a particular desk, that "saint" came to life and told a story about how he or she lived for Jesus.

"I got the idea on a trip to New York when I went into a museum there," Ashbrook said.

The seventh-graders had a month to prepare — they chose a saint, made costumes and wrote up their speeches. Several eighth-graders portrayed angels for the day.

The Saint Museum classroom was decorated with stars hanging from the ceiling and candle lamps positioned around the room to create an atmosphere of solemnity.

"I want to thank (teacher's assistant) Joy Eyer, who helped with all the decorations. I couldn't have done it without her," said Ashbrook.

The final result was a unique experience for the students.

"There was a lot of enthusiasm from them (the students)," said Ashbrook. "This class is very artistic and they took it and ran."

"We had a lot of fun and enjoyed it," said Monique Laborde, who portrayed St. Cecilia. "I learned a lot."

In addition to the stories of the saints, the students were able to view a display of dioramas created by Ashbrook's sixth-grade students.

"We worked very hard and we're happy everything was put together," said Lydia Congdon, who portrayed St. Lydia.

As students exited the Saint Museum, they passed by a mirror, on which was written, "You too are called to be a saint."

"I won't do this every year, because it would grow old, but it was a good project and worked out really well, so I will probably do it again," said Ashbrook.

For now she will continue to prepare her classes to be witnesses in the world.

"I want them to have an intense love for God, know that Jesus is their friend and to develop a personal relationship with Him," she said.

Bathed in Christ's light

Encouragement from Pope Benedict XVI

Here are some of my favorite quotes from Pope Benedict XVI:

"I would like to show them (the young people) how beautiful it is to be Christian, because there is a widespread idea which continues to exist, namely, that Christianity is composed of laws and bans which one has to keep and, hence, is something toilsome and burdensome" (Cologne, Germany, 2004, at a Youth Rally).

On July 24, 2007, Pope Benedict met with a group of Italian priests and invited questions. He gave these spontaneous answers in Italian; they were later translated in the Aug. 8/15 edition of L'Osservatore Romano.

Q: We live in a mixed society. How do you reconcile the need to proclaim the Gospel with the need to have respectful dialogue with those of other faith traditions?

A: The first duty is to recognize them as your neighbor, thus living love of neighbor as an expression of your faith. If this happens we will be able more easily to present the source of our behavior, namely that our genuine love of neighbor is an expression of our faith.

Our dialogue cannot move on suddenly to the great mysteries of our faith. We have to lay the foundation.

Q: Then how are we to proclaim the Gospel, so that this God, who all too often appears hazy to many, shines forth anew in our homes?

A: We must not always be in the loftiest clouds of mystery. We must have our feet firmly planted on the ground, and together live the joy of being a great family, the great family of the universal church.

... We are all different. I would say that this joy of catholicity with its many different hues is also the joy of beauty.

... The truth is expressed in beauty, and we must be grateful for this beauty and seek to do our utmost to ensure that it is ever present, that it develops and continues to grow. In this way I believe that God will be very concretely present in our midst.

Q: Those of us who trained during the years of the [Second Vatican] Council saw our dreams fail, and we feel somewhat sad.

A: It seems to me very important that our eyes are now open, and can see all that is positive which developed from the Council. I think we have to rediscover the Council's great legacy.

We must combine the great humility of the Crucified One, and the joy of the Risen One, so that we can go ahead joyously and full of hope.

Q: My spiritual director at the seminary told me that I prefer playing football to eucharistic adoration. He implied that this was not good for my vocation.

I feel that sports are an important, even indispensable part of my human life as a priest.

A: Yes. We cannot live in exalted mediation all the time. Perhaps a saint on the last step of his earthly pilgrimage could reach this point, but we normally live with our feet on the ground and our eyes turned toward heaven.

The Lord gives both spiritual and human joys to us. Therefore loving the human things of this earth is not only very human but also very Christian and truly Catholic.

... We should not only love the earth and the beautiful things here that the Lord has given us, but also be grateful because God's light shines on the earth and bathes everything in splendor and beauty.

Discovering the body's world

Exhibit reveals truth about dignity of human life

"Respect life" moments are all around us and sometimes they present themselves in the most unexpected places.

Such was the case at my recent trip to see Gunther von Hagen's Body Worlds, called "The Original Exhibition of Real Human Bodies," displayed at Discovery Place in Charlotte.

Even with my love of science and interest in medicine, I had hesitated to make the visit. Because real human bodies, organs and fetuses were on display, I was concerned whether it was going to be done respectfully or not. The deceased men, women and children were, after all, part of the human family — someone's mother, father, sibling or child.

Upon the urging of my daughter, who is pursuing a medical career, and the strong recommendation from a friend, we took the trip.

Due to the preservation technique of plastination, and the artist's clear appreciation for life, the exhibits tastefully told the story of how various people chose to live. The exhibit showed diseased organs next to healthy ones, a black lung of a smoker next to a nonsmoker's lung.

Displayed were examples of clogged arteries, ulcers, blood clots and much more. We can lecture about healthy lifestyles but no spoken word could have the impact of seeing the actual destruction from bad choices and the positive results of healthy decisions.

There was also the sense of awe of how beautifully we are made. The intricate way the blood vessels and nerves are distributed in the body was revealed in a way that would bring a non-believer to his or her Creator.

The bodies were displayed playing basketball, chess and other activities so one could see the way the muscles moved. There was a fullness of life expressed in their "movement," an invitation for us to live each moment with a purpose — because evidence of our own mortality was also shown.

For me the most difficult part of the trip — yet the most profound pro-life message — came from part of the exhibit with the unborn babies. Having lost three children through miscarriage, my eyes filled with tears as I passed by the perfectly-preserved unborn children of 6, 8 and 12 weeks, who all died through natural causes.

I recalled one woman saying aloud as if making a discovery for the first time, "This is not a blob of tissue."

I walked through the area near a group of college students and a young man was marveling at the tiny fingers and toes belonging to one of the tiny human beings on display. He was standing before the undeniable truth about the dignity of human life and may be forever changed by this revelation.

When I got my composure back, I was drawn to a young woman in her late 20s. Distressed and fighting back emotion, she looked trapped, unable to process what was before her but unable to leave. I went over to her and asked, "This is difficult, isn't it?"

Her tears erupted but she managed to say a quiet, "Yes."

Between sobs, the young woman shared the loss of her pre-born sibling and how her death had impacted that of her own life and her family. It was such an unlikely place for this young woman to proclaim a gospel of life, love and loss.

It became clear that both young and old were walking away from the exhibit with a greater appreciation for the gift of life.

A season for giving and receiving

As the end of the year approaches, the spirit of thankfulness and generosity abounds as we celebrate Thanksgiving and the birth of Christ at Christmas. During this time, we make a special effort to be with loved ones and demonstrate our love with gifts to family and friends.

Many in the Diocese of Charlotte also show their love for the Catholic Church at this time with gifts that support their churches, a Catholic school or Catholic agency, the Diocese of Charlotte or the diocesan foundation.

Giving at year end may provide financial benefits too. As you think about your plans for giving, remember that tax laws feature strong incentives to encourage charitable giving.

Those who are 70-and-a-half years or older and required to make minimum distributions from their IRAs (individual retirement account) can take advantage of the Pension Protection Act of 2006 again this year. Contributions from your regular IRA or Roth IRA made directly to the church are tax free.

The distribution generates neither taxable income nor a tax deduction. So even if you do not itemize your tax return, you receive the benefit.

Distributions can be made in any amount up to $100,000 and must be completed by Dec 31. Contact your IRA trustee for specific rules and allow three to four weeks to complete the transaction. Other charitable gifts made before Dec. 31 also may bring you savings at tax time.

Gifts of appreciated assets such as stocks can bring tax savings if you have owned the stock for at least 12 months. An income tax deduction for the current value of the asset becomes available at the time the gift is made and capital gains tax will not be due on the increase in value.

A regular review of estate plans at the end of the year is a good way to include a charitable dimension that will provide future benefits to Catholic causes important to you and your family.

As you plan for the gift-giving season, remember that including charitable gifts can be an extraordinary and heartwarming experience. Gifts to your church, a Catholic school, a Catholic agency, the Diocese of Charlotte or the diocesan foundation strengthen and

Memo from a paradise on fire

Working together, we can conquer the flames of evil

Sunday began in its usual way in our town of Malibu, Calif., along the Pacific Ocean — except oddly there was no power. High winds this time of year in Southern California often knock down power lines, and this proved to be the case again.

What was not expected was that the loose power line would dangerously arc and trigger a massive fire in Malibu Canyon. Within minutes the fire was racing toward the ocean, as if in defiant challenge of the sustaining sea itself.

I relish quiet Sunday mornings. Because I was teaching adult catechism later in the day, it was not surprising for me to think of the battle between fire and water raging outside in religious terms.

The furious passion of sin taking on the cleansing and cooling water of baptism, I speculated.

Satan, it seemed, had come to paradise again.

Standing in the way on one side of the canyon road he had chosen was one of the most expensive mansions in the community, perhaps in all the nation — literally built in the style of a castle upon a majestic hillside.

As man's creations go, it seemed an impenetrable fortification. It would be lost in minutes.

Next up for the devilish fire lay Pepperdine University, a Christian university situated upon close to a thousand steeply sloping acres overlooking the Pacific. Many students are attracted to Pepperdine by brochures that make higher education in this setting seem more aligned with surfing and leisure than Socrates and serious intellectual effort.

The brochures aptly reflect Pepperdine's campus beauty, but they understate its inner goodness.

I think the wretched old deceiver himself has been fooled. Little did the malevolent blaze realize that just the day before the canyon fire, the university community had turned out in great number to consider the social justice of Nobel laureate Muhammad Yunus, founder of the Grameen Bank of Bangladesh, whose creative microlending helped bring hope to small shopkeepers and craftspeople creating, as the university nicely put it, "the spark of personal initiative and enterprise necessary to pull themselves out of poverty."

As with most universities, of course, students come to Pepperdine for many reasons — a highly personal curriculum in the undergraduate school is structured around the great books, placing students in conversation with the authors of the finest literature and learning.

The law school where I am privileged to teach has a top-ranked dispute resolution program that strives to remind a culturally litigious society that it is better to forgive and resolve than further stoke dispute.

There are many excellent teachers at the university, but this challenging Sunday, the faculty of greater note would be wearing yellow slickers and helmets and heavy boots. These "visiting faculty" came on red trucks and often from great distances.

But they came with only one lesson plan: "Love thy neighbor."

Miraculously, the firefighters steered the blaze away from thousands of much-relieved students, and thousands more anxious parents watching frightening news reports at a distance. Of course, like the devil himself, wildfire seldom rests in one place very long.

Monday afternoon, as this is written, the fire is now three miles south of the university on the ridge line above our house. Your columnist is taking a short break from joining his neighbors on rooftops spraying water at an inferno from a garden hose.

A humorous sight? Perhaps. An inconsequential gesture? Hardly.

This devil of a fire is no match for neighbors in mutual aid of one another. Oh yes, it may take one or more of our houses, but in the Latin, "Omnia vincit amor" ("Love conquers all").

Translated in an e-mail I just received from a colleague who has lost his home, "Our home is a total loss. But God is more than good and we shall rebuild."

Or as Pope John Paul II reminded us, "In the end, love will be victorious! Let everyone be committed to hastening this victory."

So, excuse me now, I have a place on the hose line.

Pope says public opinion gets old, but word of God stays true forever

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Public opinion gets old fast, but the word of God stays true forever, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"The word of God transcends time" and represents the word of eternal life, he said Nov. 7 at his weekly general audience.

The pope focused his catechesis on the life and work of St. Jerome, a fourth-century theologian who translated the original books of the Bible into Latin, giving birth to the Vulgate Bible.

"Human opinion comes and goes. What is extremely up-to-date today becomes very passe tomorrow," he told more than 20,000 pilgrims gathered in St. Peter's Square.

St. Jerome asked that Christians "seek to learn on earth those truths which will remain ever valid in heaven and eternity," the pope said.

Listening to God's word is one way to capture those eternal truths, he said.

The pope said the saint teaches today's Christians that it is important to love God's word and that "to ignore sacred Scripture is to ignore God."

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In our catechesis on the teachers of the early church, we now turn to St. Jerome, who was responsible for the Latin version of the Bible known as the Vulgate.

Jerome made the Scriptures the centre of his life, translating the inspired word of God, commenting upon its teaching and, above all, striving to live his life in accordance with its precepts.

Born in Dalmatia in the middle of the fourth century and educated in Rome, he embraced the ascetic life and devoted himself to the study of Hebrew and Greek. After a sojourn in the East, he returned to Rome as secretary to Pope Damasus, who encouraged him in his work of translation.

He then retired to the Holy Land, where he founded monasteries and a hospice for pilgrims in Bethlehem.

Jerome's entire life, his vast erudition and the spiritual wisdom born of his ascetic lifestyle were devoted to the service of God's word, the refutation of heresy and the encouragement of Christian culture.

Let us take to heart the words which this great master of the spiritual life once addressed to St. Paulinus of Nola, and "seek to learn on earth those truths which will remain ever valid in heaven."

Balancing hope and despair

Accepting both suffering and glory is way to follow Christ

After the Oct. 9 Republican debate in Michigan, some analysts felt the tone of the presidential contenders was split between painting rosy pictures and being very realistic.

On the overly realistic side were those contenders who had serious concerns about issues like rising costs and their impact on Medicare, social security and employment.

On the overly optimistic side were those who saw a brighter future with lower taxes and higher employment, among other things.

Interestingly, one analyst felt that the overly realistic contenders looked more serious than the optimistic contenders. He intimated that the best way to win American hearts is to be overly positive rather than too realistic.

It is true that life looked at realistically is frightening. Who wants to hear that present wars may never end, our health system is near collapse, our ecological problems are astronomical and disasters await millions of people?

It is equally true that the line between being overly hopeful and overly realistic is very thin.

When does too much optimism cloud real issues, and when does too much realism spawn despair?

Where might we look for our answer?

The life of Christ is a beautiful example of how to blend realism and optimism. Throughout his life, Christ gave his apostles reality checks.

"Remember," he told them, "I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven."

In other words, don't become overly optimistic and confident.

"You want to be my follower?" Jesus asks his followers. "Then you must leave everything and expect to have nowhere to place your heads at night. Those people you will serve can be like wolves waiting to devour you."

On the other hand, Jesus teaches his apostles that just as he was raised up by his Father, so too will they be raised up. He fills their minds with beautiful, optimistic images: the good shepherd, the poor and hungry lifted up in a new world of justice and goodness.

In balancing reality with images of a bright future, Christ teaches us how to walk the fine line between hope and

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK

oftentimes brutal reality.

As Jesus embraced the cross in his life, so must we. Jesus taught us to imitate him in order to cross over to a better life.

Christ's life is God's way of telling us that harsh reality and heavenly hopes are meant to complement each other when seen through the glory of the cross.

Suffering and glory go together.

How we might wish presidential hopefuls would embrace this biblical concept as their platform. But then, they wouldn't be politically correct having God as their guide, would they?

And yet, the great foundations of American tradition are based on the decisions of our founding fathers who made God guiding light.

In the aftermath

Months after Peruvian quake, cities see little progress in rebuilding

PISCO, Peru (CNS) — At first glance, Freddy Sanchez appears to be one of the lucky ones.

When a magnitude 8 earthquake struck this fishing port, his house remained standing while many of his neighbors' homes and the church across the street collapsed.

But his luck may be running out.

Government officials have said that the soil in the beachfront neighborhood where he lives is unstable, and they might prohibit rebuilding there. Officials have not talked with residents, however, and rumors are rampant.

"This is where my great-grandparents, my grandparents and my parents lived," he said. "I have title to this land, and they can't force me to move."

Sanchez's neighborhood has no running water, and the sewers have backed up, creating a foul-smelling puddle at the end of the street that draws flies and mosquitoes.

"Unfortunately, little progress is being made in housing. There hasn't been a single house, not even half a house, built in Chincha, Pisco or Ica," said Bishop Guido Brena Lopez of Ica, whose diocese includes those three towns located closest to the quake's epicenter.

"For people to have to live in a tent when they have small children is a calamity," he said.

Some tiny prefabricated houses have been set up on empty lots, but "they are temporary and precarious," he said.

Residents are still trying to rebuild their lives months after the Aug. 15 earthquake killed more than 500 people, injured more than 1,000 and damaged or destroyed about 100,000 homes.

Thousands of people still live in tents, either in camps set up by the government or near the places where their houses once stood, where they can keep an eye on the little they have left and ensure that no one takes over their land.

San Clemente Church, tents also serve as makeshift telephone and Internet booths. Scattered shops around town have reopened, and people sell soft drinks and sundries outside temporary shelters.

"There is a lack of housing, but there is no way of rebuilding the housing until the water and sewer problems are solved," said Father Alfonso Berrade, pastor of San Clemente Parish and director of the Pisco office of Caritas, the local affiliate of Caritas Internationalis, an umbrella group of Catholic humanitarian aid and development agencies.

Officials are doing a soil survey in Pisco, Father Berrade said. Based on the results, they will decide where to rebuild.

Shortly after the earthquake, there was talk of shifting the main part of the city to more solid ground, but that appears to be impractical, he said.

Many are worried that they might lose their land rights because they do not have formal title to their lots.

Meanwhile, residents who are going ahead with repairs or erecting makeshift shelters are dismayed by the inflated prices of building materials.

Julio Favre, head of FORSUR, the reconstruction agency set up by the government, has estimated that reconstruction will take two years and cost about $530 million, about $330 million of which would be for grants to people who lost their houses.

FORSUR currently has about $60 million from government funds, loans and international donations, with another $107 million worth of donations pledged.

Post-earthquake cleanup is going slowly. While some buildings have been demolished, there are still piles of rubble in empty lots and on some streets.

Increasing violence in Somalia traps residents, blocks aid

MOGADISHU, Somalia (CNS) — Increasing violence in Somalia's capital has trapped residents as Catholic and other aid agencies call for an end to the humanitarian catastrophe.

Doctors Without Borders told IRIN, the U.N. news agency, that many residents in Mogadishu have no safe place to go as the conflict between Islamic insurgents and allied Ethiopian-Somali government troops escalates.

The international medical organization said Nov. 7 it was struggling to help residents, but that "some have bled to death as it was too dangerous to move them to hospitals," IRIN reported.

"But Mogadishu's residents need more than medical care — they need safety," Doctors Without Borders said.

Doctors Without Borders "calls upon all warring factions to refrain from indiscriminate attacks on civilians and to respect international humanitarian law," IRIN noted.

News of increased tension came after Catholic and other international aid agencies said in a late-October statement that they "cannot respond effectively to the crisis because access and security are deteriorating dramatically at a time when needs are increasing."

Among the signatories of the statement were the Catholic Agency for Overseas Development, the aid agency of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of England and Wales; Caritas Somalia, the local affiliate of the Catholic umbrella organization Caritas Internationalis; and Trocaire, the aid agency of the Catholic Church in Ireland.

"There is an unfolding humanitarian catastrophe in south-central Somalia," the agencies said.

"Tens of thousands of people are currently fleeing violence in Mogadishu, adding to the up to 335,000 people already needing immediate lifesaving assistance in Mogadishu and the Shabeelle regions," they said.

The agencies said they were "struggling to deliver assistance through Somali partners in IDP (internally displaced persons) settlement areas," but were constrained by "harassment, intimidation, roadside bombs and land mines," as well as security checkpoints.

Somalia has not had an effective government in more than 15 years. Internal violence compounded by famine, disease and poverty has devastated the African country.

In June 2006, the fundamentalist Union of Islamic Courts, which runs a parallel government to the Somali transitional government, gained control of Mogadishu and parts of southern Somalia.

Since then, conflicts involving Somali government forces, Islamic insurgents and international peacekeeping forces have intensified.

Religious leaders sign document urging compassion to animals

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Religious leaders gathered in Washington Nov. 7 to sign a document urging people of faith to make compassion to animals an integral part of their religious teachings.

The document, "A Religious Proclamation for Animal Compassion," says in part that animals "have intrinsic value as part of God's creation and are entitled to live lives free of cruelty and exploitation."

The gathering took place in a caucus room on Capitol Hill and was hosted by Best Friends Animal Society, a Utah-based organization that runs one of the nation's largest sanctuaries for abused and abandoned animals.

The document was signed by members of at least 20 faith traditions, including Catholic, Baptist, Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, Pentecostal, Lutheran, Presbyterian and Quaker representatives.

They called on people of faith to stop wearing fur, reduce meat consumption and buy only from farms that use humane methods, as opposed to practices such as confining chickens in small cages and raising livestock in factory farms.

"Like all of God's creation, animals are held to be sacred living creatures that should be cared for," said Father Larry Evans, a Catholic priest who was among the signers.

"Catholics are called to follow the example of St. Francis of Assisi, the church's patron of animals and the environment, who a millennium ago set the high standard for animal compassion," said Father Evans, parochial vicar of Our Lady of Mercy Church in Jersey City, N.J.

Officials of the Best Friends Animal Society said they plan to recruit volunteers to take that message across the country.

A statement from the organization said it was prompted to convene the religious leaders by the results of a poll it commissioned in 2006 that showed 89 percent of Americans feel "we have a moral obligation to protect the animals in our care."

FROM THE VATICAN

Cardinal says Israeli restrictions on visas remain problem for church

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Israeli visa restrictions and other controls on church workers are still a serious problem for the church in the Holy Land, said a top Vatican official.

Cardinal Walter Kasper, head of the Pontifical Commission for Religious Relations With the Jews, said Palestinian and some foreign "clergy, religious women and seminarians have to submit to ironclad rules in order to visit relatives and friends" in the Palestinian territories, to which Israel controls entry.

After an Oct. 27-Nov. 2 trip to Israel and the West Bank, the cardinal told the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, there is some sense that change might be on the horizon, though "nobody knows the real solutions."

"But the hour has come to ease the restrictions. The visa problems remain serious," he said in the interview published in the paper's Nov. 9 edition.

The Campaign for the Right of Entry/Re-entry to the Occupied Palestinian Territories recently claimed that "Israel's regulation of entry into the occupied (Palestinian) territories by foreign nationals remains arbitrary, abusive and internationally unlawful. Even clergymen are not immune."

Some Catholic bishops and religious have lamented the lack of freedom of movement caused by permit and visa issues.

Cardinal Kasper said he visited with Israeli President Shimon Peres and other Israeli and Jewish authorities. He said they have "taken to heart finding a solution" to this problem quickly.

The cardinal said his meeting with Peres was "very positive" and that the president told him "Christians are welcome" in Israel.

Pope to visit New York, Washington in April, papal nuncio confirms

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI will visit Washington and New York April 15-20.

Archbishop Pietro Sambi, apostolic nuncio to the United States, confirmed the dates of the papal trip and announced the pope's itinerary in remarks Nov. 12 at the annual fall meeting of the U.S. bishops in Baltimore.

The official title of the upcoming papal trip is "Apostolic Visit to the United States of America and to the Seat of the United Nations."

According to the archbishop, the pope will arrive in Washington April 15 and will receive an official welcome at the White House April 16. That afternoon, coincidentally his 81st birthday, he will address the U.S. bishops.

The following day he will celebrate Mass at the new Washington Nationals baseball stadium in Washington. Later that day he will meet with directors of Catholic universities and colleges and diocesan educational leaders at

The Catholic University of America in Washington and then he is to attend an interreligious meeting at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center.

On April 18, the pope will be in New York to address the United Nations in the morning and attend an ecumenical meeting in the afternoon. The following day, the third anniversary of his election as pope, he will concelebrate Mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral in the morning and meet with youths and seminarians in the afternoon.

While in New York the pope will visit ground zero on the morning of April 20. In the afternoon, he will celebrate Mass at Yankee Stadium, which will be the final event of his U.S. trip.

Archbishop Sambi likened Pope Benedict's visit to the United States next year to "a sign that the spirit of the Lord is with its church"; he also said he hoped the visit would provide a "new spring" and "new Pentecost" for the Catholic Church in this country.

Hispanic Catholics carry the Mexican flag and an Our Lady of Guadalupe image into St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte Nov. 29, 2004, as part of the "Antorcha Guadalupeana" torch run.

International torch run comes from Mexico to diocese this month

CHARLOTTE — Runners will soon be carrying a symbol of unity through the Diocese of Charlotte.

For the sixth consecutive year, a group of young people from New York City has organized the "Antorcha Guadalupeana." This international torch run is meant to unite families who have been divided by the U.S.-Mexico border through their Catholic faith and their love for Our Lady of Guadalupe.

The torch run began in Mexico City at the Shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe in October and will culminate in New York City Dec. 12, the feast of Our Lady of Guadalupe.

The group has carried the torch from city to city, participating in Masses in honor of Our Lady and sharing with the community the concerns of immigrants in the United States.

The torch will visit four churches in the Diocese of Charlotte: Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Charlotte, Nov. 26; St. Joseph Church in Newton, Nov. 27; St. Francis of Assisi Church in Mocksville, Nov. 28; and Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point, Nov. 29.

Each visit begins with the reception of the torch around 6 p.m., followed by Mass and a presentation. The following morning, runners from the community accompany the core group to the next stop. The torch visits are open to the public and the presentations are bilingual.

Eighth-graders raise the U.S. flag outside St. Michael School in Gastonia during a moment of silence as part of a Veterans Day celebration Nov. 12. Veterans Day, observed as a holiday this year Nov. 12, is celebrated Nov. 11 of every year to honor all those who have served in the armed forces. During the school gathering, pre-kindergarten through eighth-grade students joined in prayer, recited the Pledge of Allegiance and sang the national anthem. Principal Joseph Puceta spoke to the students about the holiday's history, as well as the sacrifice and dedication of U.S. veterans.

Room at the Inn nurtures mothers and children

"At first, it was humbling to be living in a group home," Leah said for Room at the Inn of the Carolinas' annual report. "But it was a real home for me, a new family."

With assistance from Room at the Inn of the Carolinas, Leah returned to school and she graduated with honors from Bennett College in May 2006. Today, Leah and her son reside in Bluffton, S.C., where she is the house manager at Room at the Inn of the Lowcountry and is pursuing a dual master's degree at Savannah State College.

Leah's story is one of many that could have ended in heartbreak, and instead has a happy ending. Children — 143 to be exact — whose lives could have been tragically cut short by abortion have been born to loving mothers with bright futures.

Several of these stories were shared at the eighth annual benefit banquet for Room at the Inn of the Carolinas, held in Greensboro Nov. 8. About 400 people attended the fundraiser, one of the organizations two major fundraisers held each year.

"The mothers are scared, without a friend in the world," said Marlene DuBose, a member of the board of directors. "Room at the Inn fills these women with hope."

Since May 2001, Room at the Inn of the Carolinas has served a total of 401 clients, including 151 in-house pregnant clients; 143 infants; and approximately 65 pregnant women who had special service needs, said Elizabeth Hedgecock, associate director.

Room at the Inn of the Carolinas is three years into a five-year plan to receive national accreditation from the Council on Accreditation, said O. Albert Hodges, chief executive officer.

When Room at the Inn of the Carolinas receives accreditation, it will be the only nationally accredited Christian maternity home in the United States, he said.

Case management and counseling are provided onsite for clients, who are required to participate in an extensive life-skills educational program. Childcare is available for clients attending educational and vocational programs; transportation to medical and social service appointments is also provided.

About 20 percent of clients have other children when they apply for assistance. Residents with one or two children, if both are under the age of 6, are eligible for housing.

Approximately half of the clients who come to Room at the Inn of the Carolinas have had at least one previous pregnancy aborted.

"The realization of the life that they lost and the sorrow that they suffered because of the abortion is one of the reasons that these women have chosen to give life to the current pregnancy," said Hedgecock.

Although all residents are required to undergo adoption counseling, about two out of every 12 women choose adoption, Hedgecock said. Room at the Inn of the Carolinas provides not only shelter for mothers and their children, but also hope for their futures.

Of those clients who have completed high school, approximately 50 percent go on to complete technical training or to work on their college degrees, Hedgecock said.

Minors generally return to their families and complete their GEDs or return to high school, depending on whether they chose parenting or an adoption plan.

Eighty-one percent of mothers increase their income and approximately 80 percent have full-time jobs capable of supporting their families. Every one of the maternity home graduates last year transitioned to permanent housing.

"Considering that most of our clients are homeless when they come to us, this is a great achievement," said Hedgecock.

"As proud as I am of my son and my college degree, I think my biggest accomplishment is realizing that God has a plan for Gabriel and me," Leah said.

"Sometimes the future can seem bleak, but Room at the Inn allowed me to see Christ's love for me in ways I never dreamed of. There is a God, and I know he loves me," she said.

Retired multicultural worker made honorary Cherokee

CHEROKEE — Mary Herr, retired Native American multicultural worker for the diocese, has been made an honorary member of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians.

Herr received her honorary membership during the tribal council meeting in Cherokee Oct. 8.

During the meeting, Herr was given Cherokee name — “Meli utseli,” “Mary, she is here” — as well as a Pendleton blanket with Cherokee symbols.

“It was a great surprise and honor that I greatly appreciated,” said Herr.

Herr, 65, retired June 30 as regional faith formation consultant and Native American multicultural worker for the diocese’s Smoky Mountain Vicariate.

She began work as a community educator and paralegal supervisor on the Qualla Boundary, the Cherokee Indian reservation, in 1978. She later continued her community-educator work as a staff member of Our Lady of Guadalupe Church on the Boundary from 1981 to 1991.

Her paralegal experience allowed her to become the Qualla Boundary’s first Guardian ad litem, a children’s advocate. She later assumed the position of Native American multicultural worker while assisting with administrative work at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church and St. Joseph Church in Bryson City.

In 2000, she added another part-time position as regional faith formation consultant for the vicariate.

During her service, she tried to help people learn more about Native American culture, and helped develop the “Catholics and Cherokees” conference, held for three years in the Smoky Mountain Vicariate to allow the two groups learn more about each other.

Although retired, she continues her work with organizations on the Qualla Boundary.

Catechists study tools for better faith formation

MORGANTON — Faith formation teachers in the Diocese of Charlotte are learning how to “assess for success.”

Diana Dudoit Raiche of the National Catholic Educational Association led a seminar titled “Assess for Success: Using IFG to Plan Adult Faith Formation Programs” at St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton Nov. 8.

The seminar was sponsored by the diocesan Office of Faith Formation.

IFG, or Information for Growth, is an assessment tool that surveys adult faith literacy and spiritual growth. It helps parish catechetical leaders plan for or improve adult faith formation programs according to identified strengths and challenges of a particular group of adults.

“IFG is scientific instrument that delves deep into the literacy, background and understanding of a select group — for example, catechists or a pastoral council,” said Dr. Cris Villapando, director of faith formation programs for the Diocese of Charlotte.

“It helps identify real needs instead of planning faith formation programs using hypothetical ideas or the likes, dislikes or preferences of the group,” he said.

Raiche, executive director of the National Catholic Educational Association’s Department of Religious Education, is a frequent presenter for catechetical and liturgical conferences, diocesan workshops and parish adult enrichment events.

years as a Benedictine, that Father Michael Buttner made the transition to ministry as a full-time diocesan priest.

“Bishop Curlin incardinated me and immediately made me pastor of St. Francis of Assisi Church in Lenior,” Father Buttner said. “He believed in me before I believed in myself.”

In 2001, Bishop Curlin asked Father Buttner to assume the leadership of Holy Family Church in Clemmons, a rapidly growing parish. Today, 1,600 families make up the parish registry.

The request came with one very long string: Father Buttner was instructed to build a new church. He accepted both of Bishop Curlin’s mandates and set to work.

More than four years later, the task was accomplished. Bishop Peter J. Jugis dedicated the new 1,250-seat church Nov. 27, 2005, with Bishop Curlin presiding.

With the construction of the new church, the original building was put into service as a faith formation center named the Bishop William G. Curlin Faith Formation Center.

After nearly two years of patient fundraising and waiting, the brass lettering for the center’s façade finally arrived this past summer and the name of the center is now on display for all passers-by to see.

Bishop Curlin got a chance to see the lettering, as well as a dedication plaque and his portrait hanging in the center, during a recent visit to Holy Family Church.

Bishop Curlin celebrated two Masses Nov. 11 to help with the parish’s Priests Retirement and Benefits Collection, a trip he makes each year.

“Here is an 80-year-old man who could be at home relaxing, and he comes 75 miles to serve two Masses,” said Father Buttner. “Best of all, we went over our parish goal.”

Following the initial Priests Retirement and Benefits Collection taken up Sept. 8-9, Holy Family Church fell short of its assessed goal.

But after the second appeal weekend the total collection was $39,610, well above the parish’s $35,000 assessment.

St. Therese Church members assist many in Peru community almost 8,000 feet above sea level. Many residents have fled to Alto Cayma from rough mountain conditions.

With few employable skills, many survive by performing manual labor, earning a few dollars a day.

But the work is uncertain and job competition is fierce. Finding daily food is a primary goal for most residents. Children are often left alone while their parents work.

The Edelens were met in Peru by James and Gloria Hintz of Huntersville, who are part-time residents of Alto Cayma, and by Father Alex Busuttil, a priest in Alto Cayma.

Father Busuttil, a native of Malta and member of the Missionary Society of St. Paul, started mission work in Alto Cayma more than 10 years ago to address the population's needs for steady work, childcare and places of worship.

He was inspired by his work with Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta to serve the poor and, with the help of donations from St. Therese Church and other organizations, he has accomplished much in the last several years.

The community now has a medical clinic, which in June served its 10,000th patient; as well as a pharmacy, childcare center and a new church — Blessed Teresa of Calcutta Church, where Mass is celebrated seven times each weekend.

The donated items the Edelens brought from St. Therese Church were delivered to the church and then distributed as needed.

Another aspect of the Edelens' visit was to see how prior contributions from St. Therese Church were being utilized.

The couple visited 32 of the 34 homes to which donations had been dispersed.

The relationship between Father Busuttil and St. Therese Church began in 2000.

After meeting Father Busuttil during a Rotary Club visit to Alto Cayma in April 2000 — part of a tour of Peruvian cities in search of potential service projects — James and Gloria Hintz became dedicated to helping the priest in his work.

They raised awareness and funds for people in Alto Cayma, as well as helped found Alto Cayma's Cardmaking Vocational Center, a unique work ministry that now employs 24 women.

The Hintzes shared their ministry with their physician, Dr. Michelle Ong of Mooresville, also a parishioner of St. Therese Church, who spread word about the needs in Alto Cayma.

Parishioners from St. Therese Church regularly visit Alto Cayma, bringing supplies, donations and letters to sponsored families.

During their visit, the Edelens toured the Hintzes' Cardmaking Vocational Center, where the women earn decent wages as compared to other jobs in the city.

The Edelens also participated in a "food run," during which containers of soup and rice were taken to distribution points and individual homes.

They also visited a local police station, where the police were in the process of assembling a shrine to St. Rose of Lima, the patron of police and military.

The Edelens donated the funds to finish the task.

Contributing to this story was Nickell Ceraldi and Catholic News Service.

Peruvian Catholic university shares designs to strengthen adobe homes

PACHACUTEC, Peru (CNS) — Higinia Rupay remembers her terror as the ground began to heave and bricks from the neighbor's wall crashed through the flimsy roof of her home.

She rushed into the street, fearing that her simple adobe house would not withstand the magnitude 8 earthquake that struck Peru's southern coast Aug. 15.

By the time the tremors stopped, many houses in this tiny farming community, about 150 miles south of Lima, had been reduced to rubble. Hers showed no damage.

The secret to the house's strength is hidden in the walls, where researchers from the Pontifical Catholic University of Peru are testing a system that uses wire mesh to reinforce the corners of the building, typically the weakest part of an adobe house.

More than 80,000 homes were destroyed and more than 40,000 were damaged seriously in the earthquake, according to Peru's National Civil Defense Institute. Most were made of adobe.

Wider use of wire mesh reinforcement might have saved more of the structures, and engineers from the university hope that people can be encouraged to rebuild using an even sturdier design to protect houses the next time an earthquake strikes.

"In Peru, as in many countries, a large percentage of people live in mud-brick houses because they have no alternative," engineer Marcial Blondet, dean of the School of Graduate Studies at the university, said.

"But if the mud has not been baked, it is very weak. It breaks without warning, and often those fractures lead to complete collapse," said Blondet. The place where people should feel most secure becomes a death trap, he said.

Adobe houses are often poorly constructed, and walls are likely to separate at the corners, according to engineering professor Daniel Quiun. So in 1998 and 1999, when the researchers began testing reinforcement methods, they looked for houses with design flaws.

Researchers trained a local brick mason to attach wire mesh panels to the adobe walls at the corners and around doorways of a particular house. That house and another about 15 miles away withstood a smaller quake in 2003 as well as the one in August, although neighboring houses were reduced to rubble.

"We were sorry to see so much destruction, but happy that the design worked," Quiun said.

While the reinforcement does not necessarily mean the house will withstand a strong earthquake, the mesh is designed to keep the walls from collapsing, giving the occupants 20-30 seconds to get out of the building. The researchers also have found ways to build adobe houses that are even more earthquake resistant.

Some of those designs have been tested in the university's engineering laboratory, where small test models of adobe houses are placed on a platform that is shaken to simulate earthquakes of different magnitudes.

In one of the strongest models, the bricks are formed around a lattice of bamboo-like cane.

Another involves virtually wrapping the house with a plastic mesh that is tied in place with cords laid across the bricks as the walls are built. The researchers have designed a simple instruction manual illustrating the technique and hope government officials encourage people to use that design.

The plastic mesh is more expensive than wire, but Peruvian President Alan Garcia has promised $2,000 to every family whose home was destroyed in the earthquake. That would be enough to build a simple, four-room, reinforced house measuring about 540 square feet.

Offering a foolproof design is only half the battle. The challenge is to get the information into people's hands and convince them to use it.

The university is teaming up with the international humanitarian aid agency CARE to introduce the new design, and the researchers hope the national and local governments will support the effort.

"Earthquakes are going to keep happening" in Peru, Quiun said. "We have to be prepared."

U.S. bishops issue statement on Iraq, urge new directions

Nov. 13 by the conference president, Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., reiterates the bishops' insistence that the transition of U.S. forces out of Iraq should take into account moral issues, such as minimizing the loss of human life, addressing the humanitarian crisis in Iraq, the situation of refugees and the protection of human rights, especially religious freedom.

The bishops agreed to have Bishop Skylstad issue a statement on their behalf, a common approach for the conference when dealing with urgent issues.

A statement from the conference as a whole would have required a more formal amendment and approval process not suited to quick turnaround during the annual fall meeting.

The statement bemoans the "political and partisan stalemate in Washington" that it described as a parallel to the "dangerous political stalemate" that blocks reconciliation in Iraq.

It also includes a question-and-answer supplement that describes in greater detail the USCCB positions on action in Iraq, on withdrawal of troops, on fighting terrorism and on the treatment of religious minorities in Iraq, refugees and U.S. military personnel and their families.

"As pastors, we have called for bipartisan action for almost two years," it said. "Our country needs a new direction to reduce the war's deadly toll and to bring our people together to deal with the conflict's moral and human dimensions."

While not suggesting specific political, economic or military strategies or particular tactics, the bishops said in the statement that they wish to share the church's moral tradition to help inform policy choices. Church teaching on war and peace "offers hard questions, not easy answers," it said. "Our nation must now focus more on the ethics of exit than on the ethics of intervention."

Among the moral questions it raises are: "How can we minimize the further loss of human lives?"; "What actions will do the most good and least harm?"; "What elements of a responsible transition are attainable?"; "What are the financial costs and global consequences of continued war and occupation?"; "How can our nation effectively counter the perversion of religion and ideologies that support terrorism?"

It mentions Iraq's neighbors, saying collaboration with Syria and Iran is "critically important for bringing some measure of stability to Iraq."

Resolving other conflicts, such as that between Israel and Palestine, also is critical to stability in the region, it said.

Another section touches on "a neglected policy priority ... the dire situation of refugees outside the country, internally displaced persons within Iraq, Christians and other vulnerable minorities."

It notes that "a staggering 2 million refugees have fled Iraq; another 2 million Iraqis are internally displaced. The U.S. should immediately make more substantial commitments to Iraqi refugees by expanding missions, eliminating roadblocks to resettlement, and supporting countries in the region burdened with war-related refugee populations."

It said extensive aid should be provided to internally displaced persons and that the protection and promotion of human rights, especially religious freedom, remain critically important.

The statement also touched on military actions, in which "ethical norms require protecting civilians, using proportionate and discriminate force, rejecting torture and fighting terrorism with nonmilitary means and the legitimate use of force when necessary."

That is "morally essential," especially in the fight against terrorism, it said.

The effects of continued occupation of Iraq on military personnel, their families and the nation also should be considered as a moral issue, the statement said. The human, medical, mental health and social costs of military action carry a moral obligation, as does the need to provide for conscientious objection, it said.

All Catholics and others were urged to pray for peace and those most affected by the war.

"All of us must struggle with these moral questions, but in a particular way our conference and individual bishops will continue to engage policymakers on the moral and human dimensions of this conflict," it said.

"We pray and hope that policymakers will begin to work together on a bipartisan basis to bring an end to this war and occupation at the earliest opportunity consistent with the limited goal of a responsible transition and the protection of human lives — Iraqi and American," the statement concluded.

At a Nov. 11 workshop on Iraq, Bishop Thomas G. Wenski of Orlando, Fla., chairman of the bishops' international policy committee, told bishops that the U.S. church's goals for transition in that country are more modest than they were two years ago.

"We focus now on a morally and politically demanding, but carefully limited goal of responsible transition aimed at addressing the humanitarian crisis in Iraq; the refugee crisis in the region; human rights, especially religious freedom; and the need to rebuild the country," he said.

He summarized the USCCB public efforts on Iraq, ranging from public statements as long ago as 2002, when they warned that waging war against Iraq would not meet the conditions of Catholic teaching for the just use of military force. Since then, the bishops have made repeated statements as a conference and sent letters to political leaders about how transition from war to peace should be handled.

Most recently, Bishop Wenski sent a Sept. 27 letter to members of Congress, the secretaries of the Defense Department and State Department and the national security adviser, noting "with alarm" the political stalemate about Iraq in Washington. It focused on the "dire situation of refugees, internally displaced persons, Christians and other vulnerable minorities in Iraq."

Bishop Nicholas DiMarzio of Brooklyn, N.Y., chairman of the bishops' Committee on Domestic Policy, and Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick, retired archbishop of Washington, visited Turkey, Lebanon, Jordan and Syria in July on a fact-finding mission about the living conditions of the more than 2 million Iraqi refugees in those countries.

In October, USCCB representatives met with more than two dozen members of Congress in an off-the-record meeting to discuss moral questions related to U.S. policy in Iraq.

MEETING AT A GLANCE

At their fall general meeting in Baltimore, the U.S. bishops:

- ✓ Received details of Pope Benedict XVI's April 15-20 visit to the United States.
- ✓ Authorized a new statement on Iraq that says some U.S. policymakers "seem to fail to recognize sufficiently the reality and failures in Iraq and the imperative for new directions."
- ✓ Elected Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago as their new president, and Bishop Gerald F. Kicanas of Tucson, Ariz., as vice president
- ✓ Heard a briefing on an ongoing study of the "causes and context" of clerical sexual abuse.
- ✓ Voted to draft a brief policy statement on embryonic stem-cell research and a pastoral document on reproductive technologies.
- ✓ Approved a $147.7 million budget for 2008 and a 16 percent reduction in the diocesan assessment that funds the USCCB.
- ✓ Issued the 2008 version of their quadrennial "Faithful Citizenship" election statement.
- ✓ Approved legislation specifying when a bishop must get the consent of his diocesan finance council and college of consultors before certain financial transactions or commitments. The legislation needs Vatican approval.
- ✓ Approved three liturgy related documents concerning music, celebrations of the Liturgy of the Word, and revised readings during Lent.
- ✓ OK'd a curriculum framework for catechetical materials for high school students.
- ✓ Approved a document on stewardship and teenagers.

Papal trip, Iraq, politics, liturgy, new president top USCCB meeting

BALTIMORE (CNS) — The announcement of dates and locations for Pope Benedict XVI's U.S. visit next year highlighted the U.S. bishops' Nov. 12-15 fall general meeting in Baltimore.

The April 15-20 trip will include visits to New York and Washington and an address at the United Nations.

Archbishop Pietro Sambi, apostolic nuncio to the United States, announced the details of the papal visit during his remarks to the bishops Nov. 12.

That same day the bishops were briefed by the staff of the New York-based John Jay College of Criminal Justice on an ongoing study of the "causes and context" of clerical sexual abuse.

Researcher Karen Terry told the bishops that early research seems to indicate that the patterns of sexual abuse within the church are consistent with the experience of society as a whole, adding there are "clusters of hypothetical factors being studied" to explain the incidence of sexual abuse.

On Nov. 13, for the first time in 36 years, the bishops elected a cardinal — Francis E. George of Chicago — as their next president.

Cardinal George won the presidency on the first ballot with 188 votes, or 85 percent. He is completing his three-year term as vice president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

He succeeds Bishop Skylstad, whose three-year term came to an end at the close of the meeting. Bishop Gerald F. Kicanas of Tucson, Ariz., was elected vice president.

Cardinal George, in remarks at the end of the public portion of the meeting, thanked Bishop Skylstad for his leadership and friendship, and said: "The conference is stronger in its sense of mission and more purposeful in our decisions."

By a 221-7 vote Nov. 13, the bishops approved legislation specifying when a bishop must get the consent of his diocesan finance council and college of consultors before making certain financial transactions or commitments. It now goes to the Vatican for its approval.

Norms approved by the bishops in 2002 set those thresholds at $500,000 for dioceses with fewer than 500,000 Catholics and $1 million for dioceses with 500,000 or more Catholics.

The bishops' Ad Hoc Committee on Diocesan Audits recommended annual reporting by every parish as well as exercising caution about the tradition of presuming church employees view their work as ministry and do not need oversight.

Such a "trusting environment" can be exploited by a dishonest worker, the committee's report said.

The bishops also took the final steps to formalize the new USCCB structure and approved a $147.7 million budget for 2008 and a 16 percent reduction in the diocesan assessment to fund the USCCB.

The same day, with the approval of the body of bishops, a new statement on Iraq was issued in the name of the bishops' outgoing president, Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash.

The bishops voted overwhelmingly Nov. 13 to draft a brief policy statement on embryonic stem-cell research and a pastoral document on reproductive technologies.

On Nov. 14, the last public day of the four-day meeting, the bishops approved the document "Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship: A Call to Political Responsibility From the Catholic Bishops of the United States."

The document rejects politics based on "powerful interests, partisan attacks, sound bites and media hype" and calls instead for "a different kind of political engagement."

That engagement must be "shaped by the moral convictions of well-formed consciences and focused on the dignity of every human being, the pursuit of the common good and the protection of the weak and vulnerable," it said.

The bishops also approved several liturgical agenda items Nov. 14: a document on liturgical music, 183-22, with three abstentions; an English-language version of a document on weekday celebrations of the Liturgy of the Word, 190-18, and a Spanish-language version, 188-16, with five abstentions; and revised readings during Lent, 199-6, with five abstentions.

The music document, "Sing to the Lord: Music in Divine Worship," had originally been proposed as a document that would have required Vatican approval and would have been binding on bishops in their dioceses.

But Bishop Donald W. Trautman of Erie, Pa., outgoing chairman of the bishops' Committee on the Liturgy, said the committee decided to recommend the document only as a guideline for bishops, not as "normative law."

In "Stewardship and Teenagers: The Challenge of Being a Disciple," approved in a 198-6 vote Nov. 14, the bishops spelled out in simple language what young people can and should do to share their "time, talent and treasure." They also approved a Spanish-language brochure, 202-5; it is not a translation but was written originally in Spanish.

To love Jesus, according to the English-language text, "means loving Jesus as my brother and my savior, my best friend and my God. It means living our faith fully. It means sharing it freely as disciples of Jesus Christ by living out the Gospel value of stewardship. It means walking a mile in the other person's shoes."

The bishops Nov. 14 also OK'd a curriculum framework for developing catechetical materials for high school students, 117-97, with one abstention.

In his last official address as USCCB president Nov. 12, Bishop Skylstad urged a leadership style that does not measure success "moment to moment" but instead follows the example of Jesus and Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

"We cannot shrink from our calling to be shepherds, to be leaders," he said. "As Christ made it his mission to show us his Father, to teach us to seek the will of his Father, we cannot in fidelity to him renounce or weaken our proclamation of the truth."

Robert Epperly, a parishioner of the Basilica of St. Lawrence in Asheville, signs a copy of his novel, "Sons of Thunder: The Story of Joe and Paul," at a book store in Asheville Nov. 3. Epperly said the book was inspired by Pope John Paul II's "new evangelization."

Epperly was a fallen-away Catholic who rediscovered his Catholic faith while living alone on a mountain in southwest Colorado — he sold all his possessions to follow Jesus, then went to work with homeless children on the streets of New York City, where his experiences partly inspired his book.

Jesuit scholar's book aims to 'decode' Sistine Chapel frescoes

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — A new book by a Jesuit scholar aims to "decode" the Sistine Chapel's famous frescoes, examining a rich but largely hidden array of theological images and symbols.

"The Sistine Chapel: A New Vision," the first of a new series of in-depth works on Vatican artistic monuments, was presented at the Vatican Oct. 30.

The author, Father Heinrich Pfeiffer, an art history professor at Rome's Pontifical Gregorian University, said the idea for the book grew out of a visit he made to the Sistine Chapel nearly 50 years ago.

At that time, he said, he noticed interesting correlations between Michelangelo's ceiling fresco, "Noah's Drunkenness," and an earlier fresco of the crucifixion on the chapel's side wall directly below.

Father Pfeiffer began to research early church and medieval theology and its influence on Renaissance painting. His conclusion was that the Sistine Chapel artists did not invent the themes, designs and even many of the details in their paintings, but were guided by papal theologians.

In particular, he said, Michelangelo's famed cycle of ceiling frescoes was an "iconographic program" carried out according to theological principles.

Father Pfeiffer said this theological aspect of the Sistine frescoes is largely ignored by modern art history experts, who focus almost exclusively on the artist and his techniques, materials and style.

The book includes 185 photographs in color and black and white.

Transformation to light done through Christ

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

I found myself in a situation recently that I haven't experienced in quite a while — standing in a long line at the bank.

I was conducting business that required help from a teller. I mused that if not for e-checks, credit cards, direct deposit and online banking, the lines at banks would probably be much longer.

There was a time when transferring funds meant literally carrying one's hard currency from one place to another — a slower, more laborious task. But because we have short memories we often consider mere waiting in bank lines an inconvenience.

The second reading for the feast of Christ the King mentions transfer of something more precious than gold as a reminder that the kingdom of God's "beloved Son" is not simply some abstract principle or imaginary place where Christ alone dwells.

The reign of Christ is a state of real and profound transformation that he willingly shares with you and me. Even more significantly, our transfer from the "power of darkness" takes place through the blood of Christ which reconciles everything to himself.

It is through Christ's efforts, not ours, that this "transaction" takes place, encompassing all of creation.

The Gospel of Luke uses the exchange between the two thieves at Calvary to underscore the point that even when Christ's kingship isn't obvious to the human observer, it is in fact present.

For Luke's first-century community of believers — innocents suffering the persecution reserved for criminals — it was an essential reminder that Christ already had suffered these things and yet maintained his lordship over all.

The Gospel and Paul's letter to the Colossians, when read together, give us the big picture of Christ's kingship throughout eternity, from before the creation of the universe to the moment of our death and far beyond to the end of time.

The church places this feast at the end of the liturgical year just before Advent to instill in us the hope that the same Christ who has always reigned will continue to reign both in our hearts and in human history despite all appearances to the contrary.

Now that's something to meditate on while standing in line at the bank!

Questions:

What circumstances in your life right now obscure the fact that Christ reigns over all things?

What can you do this week to remind yourself and others in need of hope of the "bigger picture"?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"He delivered us from the power of darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of his beloved Son" (Colossians 1:13).

Dick Van Dyke, 'Ugly Betty' TV show honored by Catholic media group

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — Comedy icon Dick Van Dyke and the "Ugly Betty" television series were honored at the 15th annual entertainment industry awards luncheon sponsored by Catholics in Media Associates in Los Angeles Nov. 4.

Nearly 400 film, television, radio and media professionals attended the event.

The television series award for "Ugly Betty" was accepted by Ben Silverman, the show's executive producer, accompanied by cast members Tony Plana and Vanessa Williams.

The ABC hit comedy starring America Ferrera playing a fashion-challenged, good-hearted Latina secretary working for a shallow, high-fashion publisher "tackles issues unapologetically," Silverman noted, adding that the show reflects what Catholics in Media Associates are all about, celebrating the "goodness in all of us, wherever you come from, whatever you're about."

"If you really try to define what 'ugly' means on our show, it means we're imperfect, and because we're imperfect, we have the capacity to love (as well as) be loved," said Plana, who plays Betty's father on the show.

Legendary comedian Van Dyke accepted the Catholics in Media Associates lifetime achievement award from his good friend and neighbor, Franciscan Father Warren Rouse, director of the Serra Retreat Center in Malibu.

Five-time Emmy winner Van Dyke said he was "so pleased and proud just to be here and be among you."

The comedian spoke about what has happened since film censorship "went away," as he described it. He said some movie producers "got the freedom and took the responsibility that went with it," but others took freedom to an extreme, he added, and unfortunately there are "not enough people angry about it."

Paul Haggis, a director, writer and producer, accepted the group's motion picture award for "In the Valley of Elah," a film starring Tommy Lee Jones and Susan Sarandon that examines the impact and aftermath of war on families and the nation. Haggis noted that today's service men and women deserve our attention.

In accepting the organization's board of directors' award for the film "The Nativity Story," producer Marty Bowen said he and his co-producer, Wyck Godfrey, set out to "humanize Mary and Joseph — two people who are often put up on a pedestal."

Bowen, a member of Good Shepherd Church in Los Angeles, said it was a great experience to make a movie for people of faith and it was also gratifying to dramatize the Nativity for those unfamiliar with the salvation story.

Tom Allen, who accepted the documentary award for "Champions of Faith — Baseball Edition," said he wanted to publicly thank the baseball players who spoke so "heroically" about their faith.

"What we want to do is a whole series of these films where we go to the different sports," he said.

Capuchin Franciscan Father Tony Scannell, one of the founding members of Catholics in Media Associates and former publisher of The Tidings, was given the Christophers' Spirit Award in recognition of his leadership in Catholic communications.

Christophers' president Dennis Heaney said the Spirit Award is given on rare occasions to "an individual in the media world we believe has used his or her gifts over many years to exemplify the commitment to lifting the human spirit in the creative arts."

'That ubiquitous hymn'

Girl's comment saved 'I Am the Bread of Life' song from trash bin

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — An unsolicited comment from a high school girl kept one of the most popular hymns of the Second Vatican Council era, "I Am the Bread of Life," from meeting an untimely fate.

Mercy Sister Suzanne Toolan, who composed the song, said she had been asked to write a song for an event in the Archdiocese of San Francisco — possibly a eucharistic event, she recalled — and was writing on deadline.

At the Catholic girls' high school in California where she was teaching in 1966, Sister Toolan used an unoccupied room next to the school infirmary to finish what became "I Am the Bread of Life."

"I worked on it, and I tore it up. I thought, 'This will not do,'" she told Catholic News Service in an Oct. 16 telephone interview from her order's convent in Burlingame, Calif.

"And this little girl came out of the infirmary and said, 'What was that? That was beautiful!' I went right back and Scotch-taped it up," she said.

The rest, as they say, is history. But history takes time.

Sister Toolan said the song was "not particularly well received" in San Francisco, but she credited "a very gifted Sulpician" named Father John Olivier at a seminary near the Burlingame convent with helping get the word out about her songs.

"He would come to our convent on Saturdays, so we'd have a decent homily every week," she said. "He began to hear some of my things and he took it back to the seminary. And that's how I think most of my things got out."

"I Am the Bread of Life" is not only in all manner of Catholic hymnals, but also is in the official hymnbooks of the Episcopal, Lutheran and Methodist churches.

"People keep giving me copies of it when they go to Europe or Asia, even," Sister Toolan said. "It's in different languages. It's thrilling."

She alluded to "the problem some critics have allowing the congregation to sing words that Jesus has spoken."

She left the phone to scurry to find a copy of a column from one of those critics, Catholic press columnist George Weigel.

"Weigel calls it 'that — I can't even pronounce it! — hymn,'" she said, spelling the word "ubiquitous."

"My answer is: Do we really think we're saying 'I am the bread of life' and that 'I' is the assembly? I don't see why we can't use that as a prayer," she said.

Sister Toolan sees another problem inherent in the hymn, though: "It's a hymn that really shouldn't work for the congregation. It's too low. It's too high."

"I often ask myself: Why does it work so well, then? I think it's the Scripture. The Scripture is so strong," she said.

Mercy Sister Suzanne Toolan, who is pictured in an undated photo, composed "I Am the Bread of Life," one of the most popular hymns from the Second Vatican Council era.

She took it upon herself to make the lyrics more inclusive, including changing the original "I will raise him up" in the chorus to "I will raise you up."

"I did that a long time ago, but other people have done it, too," she said. "As soon as that awareness (about inclusive language) came in, I couldn't live with it (the original) anymore."

Sister Toolan, who was to celebrate her 80th birthday Oct. 24, is not only a liturgical music composer, but now an author as well, getting credit as a co-author with Elizabeth Dossa, communications officer for the Mercy Sisters in Burlingame, for a book titled "I Am the Bread of Life."

"I have a hard time with ... being the subject of it," Sister Toolan said, adding that when Dossa first sat her down to interview her on her life and ministry, she thought it was for some other purpose.

"It's kind of dumb of me, but I didn't know I was writing a book," she said.

Dossa came back to Sister Toolan the next week, "so I thought she was looking for some more quotes," she added. "Finally dodo," she said, referring to herself, "realizes what's going on."

Sister Toolan called Dossa "a lovely, a gorgeous person and a very fine writer."

Born Gloria Toolan in Lansing, Mich., she took her sister Suzanne's name when she entered religious life 57 years ago, because "I hate" Gloria, she noted.

Sister Toolan said she holds a unique record among Sisters of Mercy.

"I'm the only one in the community who's always stayed here in the motherhouse," she said. "It's a beautiful, wonderful property. When they made the (assignment) changes, I'd always hide."

Her call to religious life, she said, "came pretty early on, even in first grade. We had this kind of strange but wonderful nun" — a Mercy sister — "who used to play the organ," she recalled.

"I thought, 'Gee, I want to be a nun and I want to be an organist,'" she said.

Father John Starczewski, pastor of Sacred Heart Mission in Wadesboro, is pictured with children dressed as animals for a St. Francis of Assisi party Oct. 28. The party was a way for the children to celebrate and learn about the feast of All Saints, celebrated Nov. 1, which is a holy day of obligation and commemorates all those in heaven.

Because St. Francis of Assisi is the patron of animals, the kids came to the party dressed as cows, ladybugs and other animals. The party included a lesson on All Saints' Day and the life and teachings of St. Francis, as well as crafts, games, refreshments and bags of treats. Pet food donations also were collected for the Anson County Humane Society.

Girl Scouts show others how 'Kids Care'

Service project brings 'good moments' to people in need

CHARLOTTE — Girl Scouts at Our Lady of the Assumption Church in Charlotte recently showed others how much they care.

During National Kids Care Week Oct. 21-27, this year themed "Bringing Good Moments," young volunteers combined their spirit of compassion with their creative energy to enrich and heal the lives of others through service projects.

The Girl Scout Troop Kids Care Club at Our Lady of the Assumption Church is one of more than 1,400 Kids Care Clubs nationwide. Kids Care Clubs, a program of the Points of Light & Hands On Network, provides elementary- and middle school-age children with hands-on volunteer opportunities to help others in their local and global communities.

For National Kids Care Week, Brownie Troop 3089 and Junior Girl Scouts Troop 82 — girls ranging from kindergarten through fifth-grade at Our Lady of the Assumption School — put together "Good-eat Bags" for an organization that assists homeless children.

The bags contained healthy food and a handmade card.

"In some instances, this small meal will be the only food the homeless child may receive outside of the free breakfast and lunch program at their school," said Anne Morlando, Junior Troop 82 leader.

The Girl Scouts also studied the causes and effects of homelessness. They had group discussions and played a board game that put them in control of a pretend family's income for a month. Throughout the game, the Scouts had to use game money to pay rent and doctor bills, and buy groceries and other items.

"They experienced how running out of money and potentially becoming homeless could easily take place," said Morlando.

"They truly felt compassion for the students they were helping, and they look forward to finding other ways to impact people in our Charlotte neighborhood that are in most need of assistance," she said.

'Good Moments' good benefits

"Bringing Good Moments" projects are designed to:

- educate youths about the needs in four categories: homelessness, literacy, seniors and troops and veterans;
- enable clubs to bring "good moments" to people in need through meaningful, hands-on service projects;
- demonstrate to youths that by bringing "good moments" to others, they develop skills and nurture values that will last them a lifetime.

Catholics schools plan long-range study

Results will help make education more accessible, affordable

CHARLOTTE — How many Catholic schools are needed in the Diocese of Charlotte? How can Catholic education be made affordable to all?

These are two of the many questions to be addressed in a long-range planning study being conducted by the diocesan Catholic Schools Office.

Catholic Education Consulting Services, a Denver-based independent Catholic consulting firm, will conduct the study over the next 12 to 16 months.

"At a time when many dioceses across the country are experiencing consolidations and/or closing of schools, the Diocese of Charlotte is growing and so is enrollment in Catholic schools," said Linda Cherry, superintendent, in a letter to parents.

To ensure continued success, she said, the study will help determine:

- where new schools are needed;
- which parishes have students who would attend a Catholic school if facilities were available;

- the optimal capacity at each school and if each student is guaranteed a seat for the duration of his or her education;

- the most efficient and cost-effective transportation options for students in the diocese.

The study will also identify alternative school models and governance and financing options that will make Catholic schools affordable for all.

"During this study, Catholic Education Services will visit all 18 Catholic schools in the Diocese of Charlotte, and will interview pastors, administrators, support personnel and key members of the Catholic community," said Cherry.

The study will be overseen by a steering committee chaired by Cherry.

"The implementation of long-term plans will enable us to meet the goal of making Catholic education accessible and affordable to all Catholic families within the diocese — now and in the future," said Cherry.

Perspectives

A collection of columns, editorials and viewpoints

Abortion 'is' a religious issue

'Do no harm' principal applies in all regards

In an essay for the Los Angeles Times (Nov. 4, 2007), Garry Wills, the noted historian and author of many books which include "What Jesus Meant," "Saint Augustine" and "Why Am I Catholic?", seems to have totally lost the answer to the last question in asserting that battling abortion has nothing to do with religion.

Wills should know better.

He begins his argument with the startling proposition that "the Catholic Church has not always treated abortion as murder," then asserts that "the subject of abortion is not scriptural."

Abortion, he proclaims, is not treated in the Old or New Testament.

For good measure, Wills then tosses in the speculations of St. Thomas Aquinas about human ensoulment occurring "at the end of human generation."

For many Jews and Christians, "Thou shalt not kill" in the Ten Commandments is obvious enough. In the New Testament, the instruction to "love God and love your neighbor as yourself" is also reasonably apt.

It would stand matters on their head to see loving oneself as an authorization to kill. If we observe the strongest of human inclinations to preserve oneself, we can hardly fail to extend that sanctity to others.

As for St. Thomas, can it really be surmised that Aquinas would want faith to be denied the benefit of the knowledge of modern prenatal science?

Faith and reason are partners, not antagonists, and in this instance science exhibits the essence of unborn life far more fully to us than it did to Thomas.

Of course, Wills would likely insist that any argument likening abortion to murder begs the question since the killing referenced in the Decalogue and our duty to preserve life necessarily refer to "persons," and Wills contends we really don't treat the unborn as "persons."

For example, Catholics and other religious believers, argues Wills, do not call for imposing criminal punishment on a mother who kills her unborn child.

Fair enough. We have not done this, but it also proves nothing. It is a matter of prudent discernment how strongly human law ought to be drafted to coincide with the moral or natural law.

Since Wills fancies Aquinas, he should remember that the good Dominican admonished us not to "attempt to enact every virtue or prohibit every vice" into law, as doing so would overtax human capability.

But like so many moderns, Wills mistakes what is legal (or what consensus approves) for what is moral.

Wills also overlooks the sacramental teaching of the church on forgiveness and compassion, which itself would be

Faith & Precedent

DOUGLAS W. KMEIC

a basis to be hesitant about criminalizing the decision of a woman that has to be so callously misled and deliberately confused by what John Paul II described as "the culture of death."

As for Wills' claim that abortion is not a scriptural subject, he might want to take a look at the teaching of the apostles in the Didache, traceable to the end of the first century, which rather explicitly recites "you shall not kill the embryo by abortion."

In my Catholic Catechism, this scriptural reference is reaffirmed with: "This teaching has not changed and remains unchangeable" (par. 2271).

Since Wills is without support in Scripture or Aquinas for his proposition that abortion is not a religious subject, he is left with little in the way of argument.

He quotes the splendid Cardinal John Henry Newman as saying "I shall drink to the pope, if you please — still, to conscience first, and to the pope afterward."

Cardinal Newman was not licensing human conscience to contradict either Scripture or natural law, but exactly the opposite. As Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger pointed out before assuming the papacy, Cardinal Newman had elaborated a theory of conscience which did not shade off into individualism.

In the end, virtually all of Wills' argument is simply the timeworn claim that, because the unborn child at various stages may not yet have a functioning central nervous system or cerebral cortex, he or she is not worthy of legal or moral protection.

This is not reason but misuse of science. No responsible researcher expects moral answer to be derived from scientific description.

And even were that not true, long ago the late Dr. Jerome LeJeune, the world-renowned researcher of Down's Syndrome, noted that no geneticist has ever doubted that all that is necessary for human life exists from the moment of conception.

No, the only thing needed for people of good will to honor the dignity of unborn life is to observe the most basic principal of medical science: "Primum non nocere" ("first, do no harm") — an admonition that applies to noted historians and sometime religious writers as well.

The important anniversary you did not hear about

Urgent teaching of 'Populorum Progressio' relevant today as 40 years ago

This year marks the 40th anniversary of one of the most radical and relevant Catholic documents of our time.

Unfortunately, 2007 will soon come to an end with little attention paid to Pope Paul VI's landmark encyclical "Populorum Progressio" ("On the Development of Peoples").

With deep insight into the problems facing the poor throughout the world, Pope Paul VI condemned the unjust disparity between those who have too much and those who have too little, and challenged rich nations to place their wealth at the service of suffering humanity.

In 1967, like today, war was raging, military spending was out of control, nuclear weapons threatened humanity, millions of Americans were poor and billions of people worldwide were struggling to survive. "The present situation of the world demands concerted action," Pope Paul wrote.

For its part, he said, the church must "scrutinize the signs of the times and interpret them in the light of the Gospel."

Pope Paul VI called on the church to take a critical, analytical view of all that plagues humanity and to work tirelessly to find solutions to them that reflect the radical vision of the Good News of Jesus Christ.

"The world is sick," from a "lack of brotherhood among individuals and peoples," wrote the pope.

"When so many people are hungry, when so many families suffer from destitution, when so many remain steeped in ignorance, when so many schools, hospitals and homes worthy of the name remain to be built, all public or private squandering of wealth, ... every exhausting armaments race becomes an intolerable scandal," he wrote.

The pope explained that it was

Making a Difference

TONY MAGLIANO
CNS COLUMNIST

his duty to denounce this scandal. He pleaded with those in authority to listen to his words "before it is too late."

He also urged us to form consciences that convey "a new message for our times."

If only we would dare to challenge our consciences, to develop a higher level of moral integrity that would say no to weapons of war and yes to human development!

Pope Paul also called for establishment of a world fund, made up of part of the money spent on arms, that would be used to relieve the destitute of this world. Military power will never defeat terrorism, but human development will.

Pope Paul prophetically wrote that the "new name for peace" is development.

"Excessive economic social and cultural inequalities among peoples arouse tensions and conflicts, and are a danger to peace. ... To wage war on misery and to struggle against injustice" is to promote the human and spiritual progress of humanity, he said.

The urgent teaching of "Populorum Progressio" is as relevant today as it was 40 years ago. I've only scratched its surface here. I hope many others will write, teach and preach on it.

It's that important.

Witnessing the dignity of life

I read with interest the article "Quintuplets bring Catholic couple joy, teach lesson in patience" (Nov. 9). As a father of four children ages 5 and under, I know how children can teach patience!

However, I was disappointed in one aspect of the article — the mother was given the option to "reduce the pregnancy to two or three babies, terminate the entire pregnancy or carry the pregnancy as it was to term."

Though the word was not mentioned in the story, we all know what these first two options entail — abortion. I am very glad that she made the decision not to terminate the lives of any of her children. Killing babies, born or unborn, is wrong.

What a wonderful opportunity this could have been for a faithful Catholic family to witness to the Gospel of Life before a medical establishment that would encourage her to kill her own children under the euphemism of

Letters to the Editor

"reducing the pregnancy."

A much better witness to the dignity of human life was the guest column by Kathy Schmugge ("Discovering the body's world," Nov. 9).

She described the reactions that people had to the display of human embryos in different stages of growth, as they came face to face with the reality of their humanity. As one woman is quoted as saying, "This is not a blob of tissue."

I hope and pray that many who attended that exhibit came away with a changed perspective and a better appreciation for the dignity of human life at all stages.

My Thanksgiving wish for you

Affection of close friends is source of happiness, strength

"If at the end of your life you have one good friend, you are very fortunate."

When my grandfather said this, it didn't connect with me. I thought, "You will always have friends if you make friends."

It is true that if we continue to make friends we will always have friends. Lifelong friends are precious gems.

As such, it is my Thanksgiving wish that you cherish your close friends. Count them as your greatest blessing.

English critic, scholar and novelist C.S. Lewis tells us, "Friendship is born at that moment when one person says to another: 'What! You too? I thought I was the only one.'"

In Spanish the word "simpatico" means, "I feel and suffer what you are feeling and suffering." I am one with you because we have this in common.

Some of my best friends were classmates, not the smart ones but the ones such as I who made it through school by the skin of our teeth. Running scared together and suffering through doubtful moments became the precious bonds of our friendship.

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

No doubt some of our best friends are those with whom we endured difficult trials. Let's thank God for having them at our side and for the friendship that resulted.

Lewis also tells us, "Eros will have naked bodies; friendship naked personalities."

There is nothing more beautiful in life than being able to express our feelings, flaws, desires and loves with another without holding back.

No doubt we've had cathartic moments when we were able to share our deepest feelings with another. So let's thank God for the freedom we felt, because of the freedom given us by a friend.

Lewis tells us too that "affection is responsible for nine-tenths of whatever solid and durable happiness there is in our lives."

In the Old Testament, Jonathan, the son of Saul, was very fond of David. We must wonder how much this supported David when Saul was forever trying to kill him.

We also must wonder how much the fondness of a friend has sustained us through trying times.

The affection of close friends can be a wonderful source of happiness that strengthens our spirit and enables us to perform unimaginable feats. Let's thank God for the heart this put into our hearts.

The word "friend" in Romantic languages comes from the word "amare," to love. May our Thanksgiving be a time of recalling dear friends and the love they give us.

'Bella,' the beautiful choice

Threats, condemnation, coercion is wrong way on pro-life path

At the Toronto Film Festival there are several awards. One is the "Film Critics Award." Another is "The People's Choice Award."

What's the difference? I really don't know; I can only speculate.

The "People's Choice" probably has something to do with what ordinary viewers really like. The film critics view the silver screen from a higher perch through a sophisticated, if not elitist lens.

I suspect the experts often miss what the ordinary moviegoers closer to the ground connect with eye to eye and heart to heart.

"Bella" won the "People's Choice Award" in Toronto for 2007, but when the film opened nationwide in late October, the critics for the New York Times, Washington Post, Variety, other newspapers, Internet blogs and slick magazines managed to mute their enthusiasm.

Bella is the name of a sweet young child who shows up in the last reel of this film to meet her tearful mother who chose life over the alternative of an abortion several years before.

Neither the tears nor the life choice seem to have registered with the critics. They do register, however, with the PG-13 audiences that have been filling the theaters to see this show.

I personally prefer realistic over impressionistic visual art. And I have to confess that the jumps and cuts in both story line and visual flow left me momentarily confused from time to time as I watched this stunning story unfold on the screen.

The crisis is indeed drawn with sufficient clarity for the viewer to understand the choice that a young, unmarried, pregnant woman has to face between having an abortion or bearing a child.

There is no didacticism here. There is no propaganda, much less preaching.

There is, however, quiet persuasion on the part of a handsome young man whose earlier misfortune behind the wheel of a sports car resulted in the accidental death of a child. He befriends the pregnant woman without the benefit of any romantic links to her.

Looking Around

JESUIT FATHER WILLIAM J. BYRON
CNS COLUMNIST

What struck me as I sat engaged and enthralled by this 91-minute experience of film art was how much more effective persuasion can be over coercion in the abortion debate.

Threats, condemnation and heavy-handed coercion represent the wrong way to go on the pro-life path. Nonjudgmental acceptance and support of the woman who has to make the choice and gentle persuasion from someone ready, able and willing to care for the child are surely more effective ways to reach the right solution.

There are good words spoken for adoption in a sidebar plot to this family-focused film. There is much more here to think about and nothing to resent. No finger-pointing, no name-calling, no criminalization.

There is just selfless love (is there any other kind?) and human reassurances that demonstrate how being with as well as for a troubled person can bring light out of darkness and hope out of despair.

Pope, at audience, encourages Christians to read Bible

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY — To know God and to know how to live their lives, Christians must read the Bible, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"Drawing close to the biblical texts, especially the New Testament, is essential for believers because 'ignorance of the Scriptures is ignorance of Christ,'" the pope said, quoting St. Jerome.

At his Nov. 14 weekly general audience, the pope continued a talk begun the week before about the importance of the teaching of St. Jerome, the fourth-century doctor of the church.

Reading the Bible teaches believers the way they are to live their lives, the pope said, but the Scriptures must be read in a spirit of prayer and must be understood the way the church understands them.

"For Jerome, a fundamental criterion for the interpretation of Scriptures was harmony with the magisterium of the church," he said.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In this week's catechesis we continue our reflections on St. Jerome, the priest and scholar who was responsible for the Latin translation of the Bible known as the Vulgate.

Convinced that "ignorance of the Scriptures is ignorance of Christ," Jerome everywhere urged the daily, prayerful study of the word of God. He insisted that the correct interpretation of the Scriptures demands not only the interior assistance of the Holy Spirit but also conformity to the church's authoritative teaching.

Jerome stressed the importance for all Christians, but especially for preachers, of ensuring that their lives accord with the ethical teaching offered in the sacred texts.

Devotion to the Word of God also shaped Jerome's ascetic doctrine, which emphasized the virtue of obedience and encouraged the pious practice of pilgrimage, particularly to the Holy Land.

Finally, by his spiritual counsel, especially to parents, he emphasized the importance of a broad and disciplined Christian education for the young, including women.

Jerome's integration of the enduring values of classical civilization and the wisdom of the inspired Word of God made him one of the great figures of the emerging Christian culture of late antiquity.

Residents walk on a flooded street in Villahermosa, Mexico, Nov. 1. About 500,000 Mexicans were left homeless after floods devastated 70 percent of the southern state of Tabasco.

Soaked in despair

As water recedes, Mexican flood victims must rebuild their lives

BY IOAN GRILLO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VILLAHERMOSA, Mexico — Filthy water recedes from the city streets. Lights and telephones flash on. Globe-trotting TV crews fly on to the next story.

But for many residents of flood-ravaged southeastern Mexico, their troubles are just beginning. As the pure shock of escaping danger fades away, they wake up to a new harsh reality.

Crops of corn, bananas and beans have been ripped to pieces, robbing many of their only income; the decaying corpses of thousands of cows, pigs and chickens line fields; hundreds of thousands of homes are damaged or destroyed; water supplies to villages are polluted.

"This is a situation that is going to affect people for months or even years," said Eufemio Flores, emergency coordinator for Caritas Mexico, the local affiliate of the Catholic umbrella organization Caritas Internationalis.

"The evacuation operation was good. But in the past, our government has been notorious for quickly forgetting about the long-term problems of people in disaster zones," he said.

After a week of torrential rain, rivers across southeastern Mexico burst their banks in late October. The water enveloped more than 70 percent of the swampy state of Tabasco, home to 2 million people and the sprawling oil city of Villahermosa.

It also wreaked havoc in mountain communities in the neighboring state of Chiapas, unleashing a Nov. 4 landslide that wiped a village completely off the map.

At least 18 people were killed by the floods and dozens are still missing.

International observers say the death toll was relatively low because the Mexican government and aid organizations were quick to evacuate people, set up shelters and fly in packages of water, food and medical supplies.

"If there were not such a fast and wide-scale response, the human cost of this tragedy would have been much higher," said Helena Ranchal, regional head of the European Commission's emergency relief fund.

In the farming village of Santa Catalina, 300 residents crammed into their schoolhouse for a week, eating dry tortillas while their houses were submerged. When the water finally receded, they clambered out, hungry and tired, to find their crops devastated.

"I don't know what we are going to do. We have nothing for this year's harvest. How are we going to live?" asked Jesus Hilario.

Tabasco's Economy Ministry reports that the state's agriculture — which includes corn, cocoa, sugar cane and citrus — has been almost completely destroyed for the year, wiping out the income of up to a third of the population.

Hilario feared that he might have to abandon his home and look for work in another part of Mexico or in the United States. Thousands already have left Tabasco, fleeing to neighboring Veracruz or Mexico City as the waters rose.

Relief crews have brought in food and water to Santa Catalina and across the state. But there is not always enough to go around, and villagers have fought over packages.

Lacking bottled water, villagers drink from wells that have been contaminated as garbage and rotting carcasses were hurled around in floodwaters.

"We tell people in the village not to take water from the wells. But when you have nothing to drink, what are you going to do?" Hilario asked.

Caritas Mexico is planning to distribute packs of disinfectant and train the villagers how to clean the wells, said Flores.

Government doctors also are handing out vaccines for cholera and other diseases. Swarms of mosquitoes eat away at the animal carcasses, then bite humans while people wade through the receding water to get back to their homes.

In the Villahermosa slum of Tierra Colorado, residents continued to live in camps of tarpaulin and cardboard, two weeks after they fled their houses. Their damaged furniture and possessions lay scattered by them on the road, and they cooked meals on makeshift fires.

"We are starting to go crazy living like this," said Jose Wuatla, 48, while his family rested on a torn-up sofa that was dragged from their flooded house. "We have no money left, and we need to get back to work. But it is hard to go out and leave your family like this."

Tierra Colorado residents are scared about a crocodile that has been swimming about the flooded slum streets. Government officials have warned that the floods have swept crocodiles and dangerous snakes from Tabasco's lagoons into the city.

Thousands of refugees continued to fill up the refuges, including one in the city's cathedral.

Some evacuees in the shelters had lost their houses completely, with rushing water from the hills toppling their cinderblock and corrugated-tin structures. Others still had dirty water filling their homes. The evacuees said they prayed that money would arrive from the government or aid organizations to repair or rebuild their homes.

"We have to trust in God that the help will come," said Nadia Gomez, sleeping in Villahermosa's St. Anthony of Padua Church with her three children after her home was torn to pieces. "We just don't have the money to build a new house from nothing."

WASHINGTON —
Washington Archbishop
Donald W. Wuerl said he hopes
Pope Benedict XVI's visit to the nation's capital next spring will deepen the faith of Catholics in the Archdiocese of Washington and give them new energy.

"Personally, I'm thrilled that he will be here and be with all of us," he said.

"There is so much renewal going on, among our young people, in the whole church," said Archbishop Wuerl.

"His visit will be a reaffirmation of that. But also I'd like to think it's going to be a way of just re-energizing us," he said.

COLUMBUS, Ohio —
During the National Catholic
Youth Conference in Columbus
Nov. 8-10, about 20,000 youths — including youths from the Diocese of Charlotte — had the chance to sing, pray, ask questions about their faith, meet new people and even play dodgeball.

Twenty-five youths from six churches in the Diocese of Charlotte attended the conference, with four youths serving as "animators," or onstage entertainment.

The youths said they had an "awesome" time, according to Peg Ruble, assistant director of youth ministry for the Diocese of Charlotte.

FINDING GOD IN THE STILLNESS

Benedictine Father Laurence Freeman (left), a native Briton and president of the World Community of Christian Meditation, conducts a Nov. 8 midday meditation session at Georgetown University in Washington.

Christian meditation finds a sanctuary at Georgetown University

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In the oldest building on the campus of the United States' oldest Catholic university, Christian meditation has found a place to take root.

The structure at Georgetown University is now home to a meditation center that had for two years before been based in a pair of adjoining row houses one block from campus.

In the center, organized meditation is offered twice a day, although students, faculty and staff can walk into the building at all hours for some moments of silent meditation.

"Ma-ra-na-tha," counseled Benedictine Father Laurence Freeman, a native Briton, at one recent midday meditation session.

He was instructing those present to say the ancient Greek invocation for "Come, Lord" to themselves, inside their heads slowly and evenly, without putting emphasis on any syllable.

"The best way to learn is to practice," Father Freeman said, as the meditation session had a few first-timers.

Some sat in chairs, some sat on small pillows on the floor and a majority had their footwear off, as they meditated.

Meditation, the priest asserted, is "simple. It's not easy, but it's simple."

Although anyone could meditate, not everyone does, said Father Freeman, noting that many Christians have lost touch with this ancient form of prayer.

What's the reason? "The mind is not attentive," Father Freeman explained. "It's very distractive. ... Don't be disappointed if your mind wanders. Someone once described it as a monkey jumping among the branches."

The Georgetown meditation session was flanked by two readings: one from a Chinese text called "Tao-Ching," the other by the late Benedictine priest, Father John Main, for whom the Georgetown center is named.

2007 marks the 25th anniversary of Father Main's death, and his efforts to spread Christian meditative practices have been observed this year with different programs across North America.

Father Main, who believed that the contemplative experience creates community, began the first meditation groups at his monastery in London and, later, in Montreal. His student and collaborator in these endeavors was Father Freeman, now president of the World Community of Christian Meditation.

Father Freeman said he believes the meditation center at Jesuit-run Georgetown is unique among U.S. Catholic colleges in that a specific spot on the campus has been reserved for meditation.

"People say to me they're missing something," Father Freeman said. "They're often confused" by unceasing demands placed on them in society and respond by undertaking a "spiritual search," he said.

The search can begin at any time in life. For some it starts quite early. In the Diocese of Townsville, Australia, 31 Catholic elementary schools have adopted meditation as part of the school routine.

Father Freeman said he marveled at the energy of Georgetown students who work and study hard yet want to maintain a rich prayer life and embrace meditation as one way to pray.

A verse from Psalm 46 in some versions of the Bible carries a rich reminder about the benefits of meditation: "Be still and know that I am God."

Federal lawmakers, including Pelosi, chided for not attending global poverty conference

SAN FRANCISCO (CNS) — A San Francisco Catholic official wrote letters in early November to California's two U.S. Democratic senators, Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein; House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.; and three other federal lawmakers to voice "deep disappointment" that none of them attended a conference on global poverty held at St. Mary's Cathedral.

George Wesolek, the Archdiocese of San Francisco's Office of Public Policy and Social Concerns director, said he could only surmise "elimination of global poverty" is not a priority for them.

The Point7Now! Action Conference Oct. 27 was designed to urge federal lawmakers to support legislation aimed at implementing a U.N. mandate to reduce the most dire poverty in the developing world by 2015.

Pelosi had a representative at the meeting. In replies to Wesolek, some of the other lawmakers said their aides had talked with conference planners prior to the event.

The conference focused on foreign aid and trade reforms and a debt-relief measure — all topics of bills pending in the current congressional session and requiring urgent action, according to conference speakers.

The speakers said the legislation would have an immediate impact on the extreme poor by boosting spending on health and education, which they said would lessen suffering from preventable diseases such as malaria and HIV/AIDs.

"On behalf of the over 500 participants at the event, I can say that there was deep disappointment because of your lack of participation," wrote Wesolek. "Perhaps, this lack of participation is a brief glimpse into why congressional job approval is at an all-time low."

Wesolek said the fact Pelosi's representative, Phil De Andrade, attended was appreciated but noted his responses were not that pertinent to the legislation on global poverty.

FROM THE VATICAN

Veteran Vatican diplomat named to head U.S. military archdiocese

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI has named Archbishop Timothy P. Broglio, a Cleveland native who is apostolic nuncio to the Dominican Republic and delegate to Puerto Rico, to head the U.S. Archdiocese for the Military Services.

The appointment was announced in Washington Nov. 19 by Archbishop Pietro Sambi, apostolic nuncio to the United States.

Archbishop Broglio, 55, succeeds Archbishop Edwin F. O'Brien, who was installed as head of the Baltimore Archdiocese Oct. 1.

"I am indeed privileged to take the reins from Archbishop O'Brien," said Archbishop Broglio at a Nov. 19 news conference at the military archdiocese's headquarters in Washington.

The new military archbishop, who has never been in the armed forces, said he has encountered members of the military in countries where he served in the diplomatic corps.

He said his primary goal as military archbishop will be to find more chaplains. Currently there are about 300 Catholic military chaplains serving U.S. troops.

"The greatest resource of our (archdiocese) is our priests," Archbishop Broglio said. "Chaplains are committed to letting the light of Christ shine."

Archbishop Broglio is to be formally installed as head of the military archdiocese Jan. 25 at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington.

In the new post, he will be in charge of the spiritual, pastoral and sacramental care of the 375,000 Catholic active-duty U.S. military personnel and their 800,000 family members; 200,000 Catholics in the Reserves and National Guard; 30,000 Catholic patients in 172 Veterans Affairs hospitals; and 66,000 Catholics in government service overseas in 134 countries.

Cardinal calls it a 'real breakthrough' that Orthodox discuss authority

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The "real breakthrough" in a new Catholic-Orthodox dialogue document lies in the fact that the Orthodox were willing to discuss how authority was shared and exercised on a universal level in the early church, said Cardinal Walter Kasper.

The cardinal, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, spoke Nov. 14 about the document on the unity of the church and how authority is shared and exercised on a local, regional and universal level.

After finalizing the document during a meeting in Ravenna, Italy, members of the dialogue commission planned to release the text Nov. 15. But a Web site associated with the Russian Orthodox Church, whose delegation abandoned the Ravenna meeting, published it in late October.

Cardinal Kasper said that the Catholic delegates were "very saddened and concerned" that the Russians left the meeting, "but the absence of the Russian Orthodox Church does not take away the validity or the legitimacy of this document."

"The real breakthrough is that for the first time the Orthodox were ready to speak about the universal level of the church," he said, and not simply about the reality of the church on a local or regional level under a patriarch or archbishop.

The document recognizes there must be "synodality" — responsibility exercised by all the bishops together — on the universal level, but also that one bishop must hold the place of honor as the primate and, in the ancient church, that position was held by the bishop of Rome.

The document said, however, that Catholics and Orthodox disagree on how his leadership translated into a concrete exercise of authority and jurisdiction over other bishops.

The Ravenna document, he said, "is an important first step, a basis, but not more."

Clearing the way for World Youth Day

The Royal Randwick Racecourse in Sydney, Australia, is shown in this undated aerial photo. The horse racing venue will be the site of the 2008 World Youth Day vigil and closing Mass in July.

A dispute that threatened the use of the racecourse was resolved with the announcement that the Australian and New South Wales governments will disperse a $30 million (US$26.7 million) taxpayer-funded compensation package to the affected parties.

Under the terms of the agreement announced Nov. 15, an additional $10 million (US$8.9 million) will be set aside in a contingency fund in case the racecourse is so trashed that it cannot be used for the 2008 racing carnival, which this year had to be canceled due to the outbreak of the highly contagious equine influenza.

Up to half a million people are expected to attend the closing Mass, which will be celebrated by Pope Benedict XVI.

The papal Mass will be the largest single gathering of people ever organized in Australia.

Awards dinner recognizes Irish-American culture, supports parade

Irish-American Awards Dinner held at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte Nov. 15.

The dinner, which serves as the primary fundraiser for the parade, was organized by the Charlotte St. Patrick's Day Parade Foundation, a nonprofit group. The awards recognize outstanding individuals who have made cultural, social and professional contributions to the Irish-American community in the Charlotte area.

The event, attended by 125 people, featured live Irish music and performances by Charlotte Irish dance schools. Knights of Columbus honor guards were on hand to escort award winners.

"I thought the evening went very well," said Frank Hart, one of the organizers of the dinner and parade.

"We received a lot of feedback from those who have been to more than one of the dinners, that they felt it was the best yet," he said.

Previous grand marshals include Charlotte Mayor Pat McCrory and Principal Jerry Healy of Charlotte Catholic High School.

"I hope to live up to this honor," said O'Boyle, a Charlotte native who has anchored on "A Current Affair" and "Extra," while accepting her award.

The other winners of the night were:

— Irish Civic Leader of the Year: Edward Brynn, history professor at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte and former ambassador to Burkina Faso and Ghana.

— Irish Ambassador of the Year: Kevin Devin, owner of Connolly's on 5th Irish Pub.

— Irish Business Person of the Year: Rosemary Harrington, vice president of First Trust Bank.

— Irish Person in Media: Olivia Fortson, an editor and reporter with the Charlotte Observer.

— Irish Bar Person of the Year: Christine Doherty, a bartender at Tyber Creek Pub.

The 2008 Charlotte St. Patrick's Day Parade, to be held March 15, will also feature the annual Charlotte Goes Green Festival in uptown Charlotte. Approximately 40,000 spectators watched the 2007 parade.

Father James Hawker, pastor of St. Luke Church in Mint Hill, gives a homily during Mass in a chapel at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre on Mount Zion in Jerusalem. The church is considered one of the most important Christian holy places in the world, as it was built over the site of Jesus' crucifixion and his burial tomb.

The visit to the church was part of a diocesan pilgrimage to the Holy Land Nov. 6-15. Forty-five people took part in the trip, which toured significant biblical sites including Mount Carmel, the Sea of Galilee, the Dead Sea, Masada, Bethlehem and Jerusalem.

Deacon Carlos Medina, a permanent deacon at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte, assisted Father Hawker at daily Masses at various sites on the pilgrimage.

Catholic youths keep faith alive at Ohio conference

Bishop Matthew H. Clark of Rochester, N.Y., told participants during the closing ceremony that he hoped the experience was a "profoundly confirming time for you and an expression of the deep love of the church for you."

"And I hope that when you return, you share your experience and tell how your being together in these wonderful days in Columbus has spoken to your heart. The folks back home are very anxious to hear what you have learned and shared about Christ," he added.

Bishop Clark served as celebrant for the closing ceremony in place of Columbus Bishop Frederick F. Campbell who was recovering from foot surgery.

The Washington-based National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry was the conference's sponsor, and the Columbus Diocese was the conference host.

The Rochester bishop also addressed the sadness that overshadowed the conference because of the death of conference participant Veronica Gantt, 16, of Las Vegas, who was killed by a hit-and-run driver in Columbus Nov. 8.

"There has been cause for tears among us through the weekend," Bishop Clark said.

"I have also seen you laugh, be inspired to dance, break into marvelous song, and extend kindness, care and consideration not just to one another, but to the arena staff and the people of Columbus. You have been able to wrap your arms around that which is painful and that which is beautiful," he told them.

During question-and-answer sessions with the youths, Bishop Clark was joined by seven other bishops who were asked about temptation, heaven, vocations, celibacy, contraception, the Latin-language Mass and the war in Iraq, among other topics.

Participants also had the chance to discuss bullying, dating, sharing the faith with family and friends, Catholic social teaching, deepening one's faith, stress management and tragedy in a variety of panel discussions and workshops.

Beating back bullying

The workshop on bullying dealt with how to respond to a bully without becoming one and how body language may cause some people to become targets for bullying.

"Kids who have a strong relationship with God seem less likely to get bullied," said workshop presenter Terry Clark of the St. Thomas Center in Des Moines, Iowa.

A crowd of more than 20,000 young people from across the U.S. gather Nov. 8 in the Nationwide Arena in Columbus, Ohio, for the opening session of the 2007 National Catholic Youth Conference. The three-day event featured worship, seminars, a Catholic theme park, music and lots of time for fellowship.

"They are self-assured, walking with God. If you want to feel less bullied, look up, smile, act like you're happy to be alive. Act like you're a son of God."

"We have a God that understands bullying," Clark said, pointing out that Jesus was "bullied on the way to Calvary like no one else before or since."

"He responded with love. That's the ultimate answer to bullying — love for yourself and love for each other," she added.

During the conference there were also daily liturgies, opportunities to pray in an adoration chapel and opportunities to receive the sacrament of reconciliation.

Another highlight was a theme park that featured displays from many Catholic organizations and included a series of webcasts with youths from India, El Salvador and the Philippines.

Future of the church

Mark Butler, director of the Columbus diocesan Office of Youth and Young Adult Ministry, said the ultimate effect of the conference is likely to be seen in parish youth ministry programs.

"Many parishes don't yet have a youth ministry, and I anticipate many young people will be going back to those parishes wanting to be more active. In the long run, this is going to be a great way to further the cause of youth ministry," he said.

Valerie Johnson, a 15-year-old from St. Paul Church in St. Petersburg, Fla., called the conference "a life-changing experience" primarily because she met so many people from all over the country who "share the same faith."

"It's not just praying and singing all day, like I thought it would be," said Adele Literski, 15, of St. John Fisher Church in the Cincinnati suburb of Newtown.

"There's so much more," she said, noting that the event also provided the chance for participants to play dodgeball and do sumo wrestling.

"And the people have been incredible," she said. "There's just so many of them, and we have so much in common."

Tom Gaier, an adult leader with Adele's group said he was "awed by the energy of 20,000 Catholic youths in one place," and it gave him "a real sense of joy and hope for our church in the 21st century."

Washington Archbishop Donald W. Wuerl answers questions from the media on the first day of the U.S. bishops' fall meeting in Baltimore Nov. 12.

Archbishop hopes pope's visit will energize people's faith

The archbishop said he believes the emphasis of the pope's trip will be "on the renewal of the faith life of the church."

Archbishop Pietro Sambi, apostolic nuncio to the United States, announced the pontiff's April 15-20 visit to Washington and New York — billed as an "Apostolic Visit to the United States of America and to the Seat of the United Nations" — at the Nov. 12 opening session of the U.S. bishops' national meeting in Baltimore.

Pope Benedict's main public event in Washington will be a Mass April 17 at the Washington Nationals' new baseball stadium.

Shortly after the nuncio spoke, Archbishop Wuerl told the Catholic Standard, newspaper of the Washington Archdiocese, that the visit "will be an opportunity for all of us in the church in Washington to show the Holy Father our affection, to show him our profound loyalty, but also to demonstrate to him how alive the church in Washington is, how profoundly faith-filled the church is."

He said he and other church officials have been laying the groundwork for the visit since August, but he did not know for sure if it would happen until the nuncio officially announced the planned papal itinerary.

The pope is to arrive in Washington April 15 and meet with President George W. Bush at the White House the following day, which also happens to be the pope's 81st birthday.

That afternoon he will address the U.S. bishops — probably at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Archbishop Wuerl said.

After the stadium Mass April 17, the pope is to meet with heads of Catholic colleges and universities and diocesan education leaders at The Catholic University of America, followed by a meeting with leaders of non-Christian faiths at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center.

During a midday press conference Nov. 12, Archbishop Wuerl said that in visiting the nation's capital "the Holy Father is attempting to speak to the church throughout the United States."

He said that when it was first announced last summer that the pope was considering a U.N. visit next spring "it seemed appropriate to invite him to Washington."

The fact that the pope would make Washington his first stop "says to me that he sees this as a center representing the entire church in the United States," he said.

Besides being the home of Catholic University and the national shrine, Washington is the location of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' headquarters.

He added that the pope's plan to address representatives of Catholic higher education highlights the importance of faith formation and Catholic education in the life of the church.

The archbishop said preparing for the papal visit "will be a lot of work, but it'll be joyful work, because we'll be welcoming the head of the church."

"We'll be welcoming the successor to Peter, and he will come here to say to all of us, 'Be strong in your faith. ... Be a light of the Gospel to this country,'" he said.

Asked how ticket distribution would be handled for the stadium Mass, Archbishop Wuerl said he did not know yet.

"I suspect there will be more people who want to see and be with the pope than there are places at the stadium. ... We have to take into account that there will be people coming from all over the country," he said. "They will not see this as a Washington event. They will see it as a national event."

"I think that we have to make sure that people — especially our young people — get a chance to see him," he added.

"That's going to take some planning on our part, but I think the principle we want to work from is (that) we want to make sure the coming generation of Catholic young people get a chance to see him," he said.

Church in Chile collects funds to help victims of earthquake

BY PASCALE BONNEFOY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SANTIAGO, Chile — The Catholic Church has begun collecting funds for the more than 15,000 people left homeless after a magnitude 7.7 earthquake rocked the desert and mining region of Antofagasta, 760 miles north of the capital, Santiago.

The Archdiocese of Antofagasta, through the regional Caritas office, was coordinating with local parishes and the national offices of Caritas Chile to mount a nationwide fundraising campaign for victims of the earthquake.

Two women died and 161 people were injured — 11 seriously — while nearly 4,000 homes were severely damaged or lay practically flat on the ground after the Nov. 14 quake.

Most of the damaged homes were made of adobe.

"People have not only lost their homes, but also many of their belongings, from furniture to kitchen utensils. But to save the costs and complications of transporting donated goods, we are calling on people to donate money that we can convert into bedsheets, chairs, pots and pans, etc.," said Luis Gonzalez Pizarro, director of Caritas Antofagasta.

Caritas also was collecting information from parishes throughout the region for an estimate of damages to church facilities.

"The problem is that distances are long, and there are isolated areas that can only be reached by helicopter, because roads have been cut off due to landslides," Gonzalez said.

In the midst of powerful aftershocks Nov. 15, Chilean President Michelle Bachelet and several Cabinet ministers visited the most devastated areas to assess the damage.

The three most severely hit municipalities — Tocopilla, Maria Elena and Quillagua — were declared disaster zones, allowing for the swift allotment of fiscal and emergency assistance.

"In these kind of situations, people have to help one another," Bachelet said, seeking support from Chileans across the country.

Bachelet announced that within a month the government would complete a registry of which homes need to be repaired or demolished, and she promised soft loans and subsidies to help families rebuild their homes.

She also said that the hospital in Tocopilla would be completely rebuilt.

During the quake, two of its floors collapsed, and patients were transferred to other health centers or were being treated on outdoor patios while the military set up a hospital tent.

In Santiago, the youth vicar, Father Galo Fernandez Villaseca, expressed the church's solidarity with the victims.

"It is painful to know that so many families have lost their homes and are going through a sad moment. We express our solidarity and affection," he said.

Chilean bishops defend company's refusal to sell morning-after pill

Salcobrand considers the drug abortive, is appealing $68,000 fine

BY PASCALE BONNEFOY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SANTIAGO, Chile — Chilean Catholic bishops have defended a Chilean pharmaceutical company's right to refuse to sell the morning-after pill because it considers the drug abortive.

Auxiliary Bishop Fernando Chomali Garib of Santiago, a member of the bishops' bioethics commission, wrote in early November that forcing the pharmaceutical industry to sell the drug is wrong.

At least one pharmaceutical company said the government is forcing it to sell the drug.

"To force salespeople, pharmacists and pharmacy executives, as well as pharmacy shareholders and owners, to collaborate materially and formally in the sale of a product that is harmful to health ... constitutes not only an abuse of power ... but also an act of intolerance in the name of tolerance," said Bishop Chomali.

"Refusing to participate in an injustice is not only a moral duty, but also a fundamental right," he said.

In mid-October, the Chilean Health Ministry fined three pharmaceutical companies that control 90 percent of the Chilean market for not selling Levonorgestrel 0.75 as required by law.

The companies are appealing the fines of $68,000 each.

One of the companies, Salcobrand, said in a statement that in order to avoid further fines it "was being forced to sell Levonorgestrel ... against our will," because the company considers the pill abortive.

The other two companies claimed that supply problems, not ethical qualms, were inhibiting their sales, and promised to maintain a permanent stock of the drug in their pharmacies.

The Catholic Church and government opposition parties quickly criticized the government for imposing public health policies they consider immoral and reopening the debate over whether or not the drug is equivalent to abortion.

More than a year ago, a similar controversy arose after the government issued guidelines authorizing public health centers to distribute Levonorgestrel 0.75 to minors over age 14 without cost or parental consent.

Bishop Alejandro Goic Karmelic of Rancagua, president of the Chilean bishops' conference, and Bishop Chomali were invited Nov. 6 to present their views before the congressional health commission.

"An issue so important and fundamental like the origin of human life merits an ample, national debate, and not the imposition of a unilateral point of view," Bishop Goic said.

He told members of Congress that "everyone knows" that the two nongovernmental organizations that helped the Health Ministry prepare the guidelines authorizing free distribution of the pill to teens "are clearly pro-abortion, and their ultimate goal is to have abortion legalized in Chile."

The Public Health Institute authorized the sale and distribution of Levonorgestrel 0.75 in March 2001, when President Michelle Bachelet was minister of health. After a series of legal actions taken by pro-life groups, in 2005 the Supreme Court ruled in favor of its distribution.

It is now part of an official list of drugs that all pharmacies must have available.

The morning-after pill usually prevents pregnancy if taken within 72 hours of sexual intercourse.

It is available over the counter to women over age 18 in the United States and has long been available to victims of rape at U.S. Catholic hospitals, following a pregnancy test and an ovulation test.

The pill's opponents argue that it is abortive because they say it prevents the implantation of a fertilized egg.

In late October, Pope Benedict XVI defended the right of pharmacists to refuse to dispense drugs "which have clearly immoral aims."

Speaking to delegates to an international congress of Catholic pharmacists in Rome Oct. 29, the pope called on them to educate their clients on "the ethical implications of the use of particular drugs."

LAYERS DATE BACK ABOUT 1700 YEARS

As glaciers melt, historical record is lost, says glaciologist

Time lost from the surface down

BY BARBARA J. FRASER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

HUANCAYO, Peru — An important historical record is being lost as the glaciers melt, said a glaciologist at Ohio State University's Byrd Polar Research Center.

"The ice is the best recorder (of history) that we have," said Lonnie Thompson, who has studied glaciers from Greenland to Antarctica and from the Andes to the Himalayas.

Glaciers accumulate a new layer of snow every winter, just as a tree grows new rings. That layer contains particles of dust, which could indicate a volcanic eruption or a drought, as well as grains of pollen, insects and air bubbles that scientists can sample to determine the exact composition of the atmosphere that year.

From that information, they also can calculate air temperature.

As more snow accumulates, the ice is compressed, but scientists can still distinguish the layers.

By boring vertically into the ice, Thompson extracts core samples that provide a snapshot of history.

The Quelccaya ice cap in the highlands of Cusco, in southern Peru, which Thompson has been studying since the 1970s when he was a graduate student, contains one of the most unblemished ice records in the world.

The layers date back about 1700 years, but rising temperatures are causing the top of the glacier to melt and refreeze more frequently, blurring the record.

"I think we're going to lose the record from the surface down," Thompson said during a visit to Peru in June. "In places like Kilimanjaro in Africa or Naimonyi in the Himalayas, they're already losing time from the top down."

human beings," he said.

The Mantaro River Valley, where Huancayo is located, is Peru's breadbasket. The rich soil produces crops for export and food that is sold locally and in Lima, the capital.

Between December and April, there is abundant rainfall in the valley, while snow falls on the white-peaked mountains, where glaciers serve as frozen reservoirs. During the dry season, the slow melting of Andean glaciers provides irrigation and drinking water.

Throughout the Andes Mountains, however, that water supply is threatened because the glaciers are melting faster than snowfall can replenish them.

In Bolivia, the glaciers in the Condoriri mountain range that provide much of La Paz's drinking water have shrunk by 30 percent in the past 20 years. Ecuador's capital, Quito, relies on the rapidly melting Antisana glacier for its drinking water.

In Peru, Huaytapallana's ice cap has retreated by more than 1,000 feet in the past five years.

"Blocks of ice that were solid for years are breaking off," Archbishop Barreto told Catholic News Service.

"That indicates a rapid deterioration of Huaytapallana, which is the source of Huancayo's drinking water," he said.

Venezuela's glaciers are virtually gone. Scientists generally attribute the melting to global climate change, and they say it is probably too late to save most of the Andean glaciers, which could disappear within 30 to 50 years, affecting drinking water supplies, agriculture, hydroelectric energy and tourism.

Glaciers in the Andean mountains provide a steady flow of water. Andean glaciers shrank by 10 percent between 1978 and 2007, a decline that could affect water supplies.

Farmers are already feeling the pinch, although they do not always recognize it.

In Peru's Ancash department, in the Cordillera Blanca range that takes its name from its snow-capped peaks, there are more and more conflicts between neighbors and communities over water, said Cesar Portocarrero, a civil engineer who works with the nonprofit organization Practical Solutions.

That is an early warning sign of diminishing water supplies, said Portocarrero, who helps communities install more efficient irrigation systems to reduce water use.

At the foot of the Cordillera Blanca, hydroelectric power plants on the Santa River are part of a system that provides 80 percent of Peru's electricity. During the dry season, they depend on glacial runoff for an adequate water flow.

A study issued in June found that the glaciers' disappearance would reduce the capacity of one power plant by at least one-third.

Once they're gone

The Cordillera Blanca's glaciers are also a tourist attraction, drawing hikers and mountain climbers. Local guides say the mountains have become more unsafe in recent years, and they worry about what will happen when the glaciers are gone.

Similar concerns have been voiced about Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania, where 80 percent of the snow has melted, and Glacier National Park in Montana,

"Blocks of ice that were solid for years are breaking off. That indicates a rapid deterioration of Huaytapallana, which is the source of Huancayo's drinking water."

— Huancayo Archbishop Pedro Barreto Jimeno

where only 26 glaciers of the more than 100 recorded in 1912 remain and all could be gone by 2030.

"In many parts of the world, there's an economic side to glaciers," said Lonnie Thompson of Ohio State University's Byrd Polar Research Center.

"Mountaineers and tourists come to see these ice-covered mountaintops. How many of those people will continue to come when the glaciers are gone?" she asked.

Photos that Thompson has taken in the Andes and on Kilimanjaro show how drastically the snowscape has changed.

"When we started serious monitoring (of the Andean ice cap Quelccaya) in 1978, there was very little discussion of global warming," said Thompson, who received this year's U.S. National Medal of Science in July from President George W. Bush.

"People were talking about the next ice age. It was only in the repeat photography that the demise became so clear and that it was accelerating," she said.

A report issued earlier this year by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, an international group of experts, drew a clear link between climate change and human activity, particularly the burning of fossil fuels.

The experts said that while industrialized countries are responsible for most of the emissions that are causing the climate to warm, developing countries will suffer most from the effects, which range from disappearing glaciers to the expansion of deserts to rising sea levels that could cause coastal flooding.

In a letter to participants in the seventh symposium of the Religion, Science and the Environment movement Sept. 1, Pope Benedict XVI wrote:

"While it is true that industrializing countries are not morally free to repeat the past errors of others by recklessly continuing to damage the environment, it is also the case that highly industrialized countries must share 'clean technologies' and ensure that their own markets do not sustain demand for goods whose very production contributes to the proliferation of pollution."

In the Andes, where the Quechua people look to the snow-capped mountains for protection, climate change could alter not just the landscape, but also their relationship with the land and with their neighbors, as Portocarrero has seen in the increasing conflicts between communities in the Cordillera Blanca.

In the Quechua culture, "the snow-capped peaks and the earth itself are seen as a gift" from God, Archbishop Barreto said. "It is a relationship of great harmony."

That, he said, is why the pope's 2007 World Peace Day message was so important.

"The pope said that when there is not a harmonious relationship between nature and human beings, and when there is a deterioration of the environment and people's health, there is also a breakdown in human coexistence," the archbishop said.

'Complete icon' of church liturgy Vatican official presents book discussing papal liturgies in detail

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Recent papal liturgies have heightened awareness that the Catholic Church finds its fullest expression in celebrating the Eucharist and that it gathers people of every nation, language and culture, said the archbishop who coordinated the celebrations.

Archbishop Piero Marini served as master of papal liturgical ceremonies for 20 years until his Oct. 1 appointment as president of the Pontifical Committee for International Eucharistic Congresses.

During a Nov. 9 conference sponsored by the Vatican publishing house, Archbishop Marini presented three thick books discussing in minute detail the sometimes-controversial choice of prayers, vestments, language, music and gestures used at Vatican liturgies from the Holy Year 2000 to the inauguration of Pope Benedict XVI's papacy.

The books, written under Archbishop Marini's direction, offer the texts of and commentary on the liturgies of the Holy Year, for the death and funeral of Pope John Paul II and the inauguration of the pontificate of Pope Benedict.

"The celebrations commented upon, thanks also to the media, remain impressed on the memory of innumerable faithful," Archbishop Marini told the conference, and "they are, in my opinion, the most complete icon of the adapted liturgy of the church after the Second Vatican Council."

Archbishop Marini said it was important for his office and its liturgical and theological consultants to document the liturgies and the studies behind them in order to demonstrate how they conformed to "the changed mentality created by the liturgical reform desired by the Second Vatican Council," highlighting "the principles of active participation in the liturgy, adaptation and the need for the historical study of the liturgy."

The volumes, Archbishop Marini said, "are eloquent witnesses that the servant of God, Pope John Paul II, and Pope Benedict XVI have and continue to confirm the holy people of God in the faith, proclaiming the word and celebrating the sacred mysteries."

In the introduction to the book on the Holy Year liturgies, Archbishop Marini wrote that the central figure in each liturgy was Jesus Christ and his saving action.

But the liturgies also highlighted the fact that the church, the sign and sacrament of unity in Christ, is truly catholic in its composition, "able to welcome different cultures and open to all," he said.

The Holy Year liturgies were among the most controversial, and the book explains how the various liturgical dances and the use of instruments such as a Japanese koto, a horn made of an elephant tusk, and a conch shell were chosen to emphasize the Holy Year pilgrimage of all the world's Catholics toward a renewed commitment to Christ.

Monfort Missionary Father Corrado Maggioni, an official in the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, said the liturgies studied in the books "are liturgies of primary importance" because "the papal liturgy, a liturgy in St. Peter's Basilica, must be the exemplary liturgy for all."

The books, he said, "aim to bring a patient reader into the particular experiences of worship, explaining the meaning of the rituals."

The liturgical celebrations presided over by the pope are unique, because his ministry is unique and because he brings to the altar the prayers of the entire church around the world, Msgr. Maggioni said.

"Unity and catholicity find expression in the papal liturgy with the variety of languages — Latin and local languages — and adaptations for people who come from different cultural and ritual backgrounds," he said.

Beauty is one of the most important elements in liturgy, Msgr. Maggioni said.

"There is a beauty in the liturgy that is invisible to the eye and must come before and be reflected in the simple beauty" of the rite used, he said.

The aim, he said, is "noble beauty, not sumptuousness."

As an example of how simple prayers, gestures, vestments and furnishings heighten the beauty of the liturgy, he pointed to the 2005 funeral of Pope John Paul, planned by Archbishop Marini.

"Where was the beauty in that Mass?" he asked. "The beauty present was in that which the love of God accomplished in and through John Paul II for the entire church and the entire world."

Advent celebrations, liturgies prepare us for Jesus return

BY JEFF HEDGLEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

In the fall of 1992, I went to Germany to visit my brother and his family who were stationed at Ramstein Air Base.

While there one of their friends, a beautiful German woman named Monika, invited us to dinner. That evening she and I hit it off and ended up spending quite a bit of time together during the rest of my trip.

I returned to Texas wondering what would come of that budding romance. So before the Internet and low-cost, long-distance phone calls, we embarked on a trans-continental relationship.

When she came to visit the next spring, I popped the question and she said yes.

Over the next year we saw each other only once, petitioning the U.S. government then for a fiancé visa. We were told it would be from three to 12 months before we would learn if the visa was granted.

When Monika got on the plane to go home, we had no idea when we would see each other again. But we knew that when that day came it would be the happiest of our lives.

However, the wait was excruciating.

The Gospel for the first week of Advent gives some insight into how to handle such situations. Jesus, like the Boy Scout motto, calls us to always be prepared: "Therefore, stay awake! For you do not know on which day your Lord will come."

Here the promise of Jesus' return is made, but the when and how has yet to be revealed.

I wish I could wait for Jesus' return with the same intense, focused anticipation I had waiting for Monika to return to Texas. But in the midst of the daily grind it can be hard to keep the Lord's second coming at the forefront of our minds.

To help us, the church brings us Advent, a season of preparing to celebrate Jesus' coming 2,000 years ago and his promised return in glory.

While I waited for Monika's return, I prepared her way with letters, cards, gifts and other creative things. These efforts helped keep the connection strong until our glorious reunion.

Similarly, Advent with its various celebrations and liturgies commemorating Jesus' initial coming prepares our hearts for his return.

Questions:

What are the things you do to prepare for the celebration of Christmas each year? What are some things that we can do to stay prepared for the return of Jesus?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

Therefore, stay awake! For you do not know on which day your Lord will come" (Matthew 24:42).

Catholic and Bible-themed toys take their place on the market

BY LESLIE O'MALLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Every year as December approaches, retailers begin stocking their shelves and filling their Web sites with toys.

This year, Moses and the baby Jesus will share space with action figures and fashion dolls.

A test run of three lines of toys based on stories from the Old and New Testaments started this summer at a select group of Wal-Mart stores and Target.com. The tests will continue through January.

These lines, produced by one2believe toys, include "Tales of Glory" figurine sets, "Messengers of Faith" figures and "Spirit Warriors" action figures.

Each toy comes with a small storybook of a well-known Bible story, such as Noah's Ark, David and Goliath, the birth of Jesus, and Jesus walking on water.

The select Wal-Marts will display the toys on the preschool aisle because the chain felt they were good items for that age range, said Melissa O'Brien, in a written statement from Wal-Mart's corporate communications department.

This is the first time Wal-Mart has carried a line of "faith-based toys," and the company will decide if it will continue or expand the offering based on customer response, O'Brien said.

Robert Winzerling, a Wal-Mart toy department manager in North Little Rock, said his store has been selling out every case of the Bible characters they've been getting.

He thinks the market for this type of toy comes from parents.

"I've heard mothers talk, especially that they didn't care for (some of the) action figures. They didn't like what it represented and wanted something more wholesome," he said.

That's exactly what inspired David Socha, founder of one2believe toys, the company that introduced the faith-based toys two years ago.

"We're trying to bring resources to parents that are wholesome and of God," Socha said.

He got his start in the toy business as a child when his parents ran a gift shop in Buffalo, N.Y. The best-selling figure in his company's faith-based line is a Jesus figure.

"I was surprised at that," Socha said.

"Tales of Glory" figurine sets, which include toys and small books based on Bible stories, are seen in a display at a Wal-Mart store in Bentonville, Ark., in late September.

"It has really caught us off guard. It'll probably be completely sold out."

The next best-seller is the Nativity set, but Socha's favorite is Samson, whom he describes as "the toughest guy in the toy box."

Right now the company has another 75 products in development and is focusing on toys for girls. It plans to introduce a line of Bible princesses such as Ruth, Deborah and Miriam with a "focus on biblical strength."

Other religious toys available online include characters from the Catholic prayer-based "Holy Baby" DVD series created by Wayne and Dede Laugesen of Boulder, Colo.

The characters — Baby Scholastica and Baby Bosco — are fashioned after saints for whom they are named.

The toys are available at Catholic gift stores in the Boulder area. The couple's newest product is a puzzle rosary featuring breakaway clasps between each decade.

"There is nothing else like it on the market," Dede Laugesen said, noting that the rosary can be "taken apart and used for family prayer."

This past summer the Laugesens took some samples of the rosary to the Catholic Marketing Network Conference where they sold hundreds of them.

"People saw them as practical, as well as fun," Laugesen said. "They flew off our table."

Stars, fans attend Goulet funeral service at Nevada Catholic church

LAS VEGAS (CNS) — Stars and fans alike turned out to remember singer-actor Robert Goulet at a funeral service for him at the Shrine of the Most Holy Redeemer in Las Vegas Nov. 9.

News reports said mourners filled about half of the 2,200 seats in what is the largest Catholic church in Nevada.

Goulet, whose rich baritone voice made him an instant success when he played Lancelot in the original 1960 Broadway hit "Camelot," died Oct. 30 in a Los Angeles hospital of idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. He was awaiting a lung transplant. He was 73.

His long career as a singer and an actor encompassed theater, radio, television and film. He was a winner of Grammy and Tony awards.

Raised a Catholic, he was born in Lawrence, Mass., Nov. 26, 1933. During his career he starred in 17 movies and made 24 albums. He has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame in California.

CHARLOTTE — Kim Richards, star of the one-woman comedic play "Late Nite Catechism," visited St. Ann School in Charlotte Oct. 26. The play had a 12-night run at the Booth Playhouse in Charlotte in October.

During her show, Richard's character, "Sister," quizzes audience members on their knowledge of the Catholic faith. Throughout the course of the class, the benevolent instructor rewards her students for correct answers with glow-in-the-dark rosaries and other prizes. At the conclusion of each performance, Sister takes up a collection for retired women religious. Each week's after-performance revenue is designated for a specific order. The show's first week benefited the Sisters of Mercy of the Carolinas in Belmont. The second week's collection benefited the Sisters of St. Joseph of Chestnut Hill, Pa., and totaled $5,200. The staff of St. Ann School hosted a lunch for Richards in appreciation of her choosing the Sisters of St. Joseph for the collection.

Dr. Elinor Ford receives NCEA award

Catholic educational association recognizes teacher who has transformed educators

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dr. Elinor Ford received the President's Award from the National Catholic Educational Association during the association's 17th annual awards dinner in Washington, D.C., Oct. 1. The President's Award recognizes a teacher who has challenged and transformed fellow educators to reach a higher level of professionalism.

Ford, a parishioner of Immaculate Conception Church in Hendersonville, has long been a supporter and champion of those who serve and lead ministries within Catholic education and parishes.

She was the first woman appointed as superintendent of schools for the Archdiocese of New York, a system that at the time served about 200 elementary and 80 secondary schools.

Following this position she chaired the archdiocesan Council for Religious Education and established the NCEA's first national Catholic parent organization.

At the same time she was a full professor in the graduate education department at Fordham University. While there she directed the nonpublic school program for administrators and founded the doctoral program for church leaders in collaboration with Fordham's Department of Religion and Religious Education.

Ford then became publisher, president and chief executive officer of the William H. Sadlier Company, which publishes catechetical and educational publications.

She has written numerous leadership, educational, mathematics and catechetical articles, books and materials. She has conducted church leadership, teacher, catechist, clergy and parish family programs for dioceses and other groups.

Today she is a consultant and speaker for national and international catechetical, educational, parish, stewardship, clergy and health care groups in the United States, Canada and Europe.

In 1995, the Canadian Catholic School Trustees Association honored her for contributions to and support of Canadian Catholic education. In 1996, she received the Msgr. John Meyer Award from NCEA for her support of Catholic education.

In 1997, Today's Catholic Teacher magazine named her one of the 25 most influential people in Catholic education over the past 25 years.

Extraordinary legacies

Bishop McGuinness honors distinguished alumni during homecoming weekend

KERNERSVILLE — Bishop McGuinness High School celebrated homecoming weekend with its fifth annual Hall of Fame and fourth annual Distinguished Alumni Hall of Fame induction ceremonies Oct. 6.

"The legacies of all these exceptional individuals are a gift of extraordinary value to the life and the living memory of this school," said Principal George Repass.

The Athletic Hall of Fame honored Elissa Bergevin, a 1986 graduate, and Gene Thomas, a 1987 graduate.

Bergevin's induction was presented posthumously, as she died in a car accident while stationed in Germany in 1993. Her brother, Eric, accepted on her behalf.

While at Bishop McGuinness, Bergevin played softball and volleyball. As a sophomore, she was recruited to play volleyball at West Point Military Academy.

While in the U.S. Army, she was sponsored for the Olympic volleyball team.

Thomas was a baseball and basketball player at Bishop McGuinness — he helped his teams win one state championship in basketball and three in baseball.

Thomas was awarded Male Athlete of the Year and is among the top 10 players with the highest scoring average in a season (25.8) and for most points scored in a season (801).

The Distinguished Alumni Hall of Fame honored Felipe Villalon, a 1964 graduate.

After serving in the U.S. Navy, Villalon had a successful 30-year career in the international division at Wachovia Bank in Winston-Salem. He is currently a senior vice president for the international services division of BB&T in Greensboro.

After graduation, Villalon remained involved with Bishop McGuinness, serving on the school's board of education and as chairman of the Alumni Relations Committee.

He was instrumental in the establishment of the Distinguished Alumni Hall of Fame program. His children have since graduated from Bishop McGuinness.

Bishop McGuinness was recognized in 2006 as one of the Top 50 Catholic High Schools in the United States by the Catholic High School Honor Roll.

Thinking of poverty, building bridges

Holidays a good time to begin making changes in world

During the after-dinner talk, my mind started to wander. My eye traveled around the lavishly appointed hotel ballroom. It had enormous crystal chandeliers and brocade fabric on the walls.

It was a beautiful space, but in so many ways ordinary. It was like hundreds of other elegant hotel ballrooms.

My mind started to wander to other places. I thought of places of poverty and privation I have visited. I thought of places where sanitation was poor and trash was seen as a resource.

I remembered barrios in rural Mexico where I was fed rice and beans in tiny adobe houses with corrugated metal roofs. I thought of villages in Africa, in places like Malawi and Ethiopia, where I have spent the night in mud huts.

I thought of the meals that the poor so generously set before me.

I also thought of abandoned people. I remembered the orphanages I visited in Romania. I remembered those with Hansen's disease I had worked with briefly in Africa.

I thought of people I had seen lying on cots in a makeshift hospital in Ethiopia in the midst of a cholera epidemic. I thought of polio victims I had seen crawling down the roads in Malawi.

How can all these people dwell on the same planet? How can it be said that the rich and the poor are all children of the same God?

Can it be fairly said that they all deal with the same reality? Does God really hear the cry of the poor?

This holiday season is a good time to wonder about these things.

I find myself most grateful for the chances I am given to see life in all its contrasts.

I have seen the inside of a banana worker's house in Costa Rica. I have stayed in a public housing project in Mexico City. I have shared a meal in a shack on the edge of the city dump in Addis Ababa in Ethiopia.

The life of a Catholic priest in America is one of privilege. If we want, we can dwell only in comfort.

But it is also true that we can see the whole of the human condition.

The pope is called the pontifex maximus: the supreme bridge builder.

He may be the top bridge builder, but I think every priest, indeed every Christian, is meant to be a bridge builder, too.

We are meant to be a bridge between peoples, to connect the poor to the rich.

I have the feeling that our Lord would want his priests to be bridge builders. He would want us all to connect the farm owner with the migrant worker.

He would want us to bring together the day trader with the day laborer, the lawyer and the landscaper, the professor and the housekeeper.

During the holidays, most of us are surrounded by excess. But I also think the Lord would want our minds to wander beyond our heavily laden tables and our own comfortable surroundings.

He would want us to see other places, where Lazarus lies at the gate.

I, for one, have no excuse. I know what lies outside the brocade-covered walls of the ballroom. The Lord has given me the privilege of seeing life in all its forms.

For that I am truly grateful.

Being with people in success

True friendship means sharing in both good times and bad

The day my brother's house caught fire, he maintained his composure well.

He rushed home from work when he heard that the roofers had unwittingly left something smoldering when they packed up and departed.

My sister-in-law was home with a brand-new baby and a toddler. She got the kids out of the house, called 911 and then my brother.

Fortunately, the house was saved and everyone was safe.

The neighbors came running, and when my brother's boss heard about it, he came over, too, and quietly handed my brother a large wad of cash to help out.

After all he'd been through, that's when my brother broke down and shed some tears.

Have you ever noticed that in the midst of crisis, it's often the kindness of others that brings out the greatest emotion?

We can be pretty tough in times of trouble, but when people respond generously to our plight, we crack.

I thought of this when I was listening to a news story about the San Diego fires. A family was searching through the rubble of their home for a keepsake when friends came upon the scene with shovels determined to help them clean up and move on.

As the woman of the family talked about their loss, it was when she got to this part — the part where friends come with shovels — that her voice broke and she began to weep, so moved was she by their love and faithfulness.

Now, you might think the point of this column is to encourage all of us to respond with love and faithfulness to our friends in need. Who could argue with that? Indeed, that's a hallmark of friendship.

But I think friendship is about something else, too, something that's sometimes harder for us but marks true friendship just as much as — or more than — showing up with the shovel or the wad of cash.

I think we're only as true a friend as our willingness to sincerely rejoice in the achievements — the good times — of our friends and relatives.

For the Journey

EFFIE CALDAROLA
CNS COLUMNIST

And even though we can appear to do this on the surface, sometimes our hearts aren't quite as open to the success of others as we'd like.

When someone is down and out, when we feel pity, we want to help.

But when a friend is at the top of his game, the king of the world, that's when a tiny drop of envy may seep into us.

Are we quick with a note of congratulations, with a sincere wish that his good luck continue, with a heart full of happiness at his success?

We try to be the kind of people who root for our friends. But a nagging little voice can tug at us down deep, asking if maybe there's a twinge of jealousy or a little resentment behind our good wishes.

Is it easy to stand by people when they're down because somewhere inside we're glad we aren't in their spot?

Is it hard to be genuinely happy for people's success because somewhere inside we're insecure about our own success?

For me, this little dark spot inside, this little crack where jealousy rears its head, is a good place to bring to God in prayer.

Sometimes even the kings of the world feel a little insecure. That's another reason to point out what a great job they're doing, to encourage, to praise.

They may not respond with tears, but they will have a joyful sense that they have that priceless thing: a true friend.

A lesson from the U.S. bishops on how to vote

From the television came a booming voice, promoting the next debate of presidential candidates: "The gloves come off for this one."

Great. So much for offering any expectation that character and substance will be a part of the next eleven months.

We need thoughtfulness; we are given a metaphorical boxing match.

It is time, as the U.S. bishops said, for "a different kind of political engagement," free of "powerful interests, partisan attacks, sound bites and media hype."

By an overwhelming majority, the bishops adopted Nov. 14 "Forming Consciences for Faithful Citizenship."

"This document is a summary of Catholic teaching; it is not a voter's

Extra! Extra!

STEPHEN KENT
CNS COLUMNIST

guide," said Bishop Nicholas DiMarzio of Brooklyn, N.Y., chair of the committee which drafted it. "It calls us as bishops to help form consciences for political life, not tell people how to vote."

The document is directed to Catholic voters, "not Catholic politicians," noted Bishop DiMarzio.

This distinction is critical, for it presents the proper role of the bishops in the church: as teachers — not tyrants or dictators — laying out the principles of faith against which issues and candidates are to be judged.

"Catholics may choose different ways to respond to compelling social problems, but we cannot differ on our moral obligation to help build a more just and peaceful world through morally acceptable means, so that the weak and vulnerable are protected and human rights and dignity are defended," the document says.

All Catholics "have a responsibility to discern carefully which public policies are morally sound," the document says.

A Catholic cannot not be a Catholic anymore than a rock cannot not be a rock. It's not something that can be turned on or off at the door to a legislative chamber.

John Kerry, a Catholic and former presidential candidate, said recently that he understands the bishops' role is teaching that all life is sacred. But he also said he saw no contradiction in saying that he is both pro-choice and anti-abortion. (Substitute the word "gravity" after the hyphens in the above and see how much sense that makes.)

Expecting the elimination of sound bites, media hype and partisan attacks may exceed reasonable hope. But we should welcome the fact that someone is serious about issues and candidates by putting forth a document based on facts, principle and issues. A group of people who give thousands of hours to an issue cannot be dismissed as some bunch of out-of-it clerics imposing their sectarian dogma upon the populace.

The bishops are not dictating who to vote for but are instructing us on how to vote: by understanding the moral principles of our faith, understanding the candidates' positions and matching them up.

To experience the miraculous healings

The 150th anniversary of Mary's appearance at Lourdes

The miraculous healings that have taken place for decades in the little French village of Lourdes, France have always fascinated me.

The year 2008 will mark the 150th anniversary of the great miracle of Lourdes when Mary appeared to a simple 14-year-old girl named Bernadette Soubirous. A steady stream of pilgrims have been coming to Lourdes to honor Mary since then and to pray for healing.

I was delighted a few months ago when Kathleen Stauffer, the president and publisher of Catholic Digest, invited me to be the chaplain on a pilgrimage to Lourdes in 2008. She explained that Cardinal Theodore McCarrick, retired archbishop of Washington, D.C., agreed to be the spiritual director of this pilgrimage.

I was honored to accept the invitation.

It will be my job, among other things, to give three weekly talks on Mary. This would be a wonderful way for me to honor the mother of Our Lord as well as pray for my own spiritual and physical needs.

When Mary first appeared to Bernadette, she told her to drink from a previously invisible fountain of water that sprung up spontaneously from the ground. Bernadette returned to report the incident.

Doubting church officials told her to go back and ask the lady's name.

"I am the Immaculate Conception," was the reply.

Ever since that day the Augustinian Fathers of the Assumption have led annual pilgrimages to Lourdes on Aug. 15, the feast of Mary's assumption into heaven.

The Augustinians own the Catholic Digest. As such, the two decided to combine their efforts to lead an American pilgrimage to Lourdes to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the apparition and the miraculous healings.

From the beginning, thousands upon thousands of pilgrims have flocked to Lourdes. Many of them returned home cured of their maladies.

The church's teaching on this is quite positive. On Dec. 8, 1854, Pope Pius IX solemnly declared in a papal bull entitled "Ineffabilis Deus" ("Indescribable God") that "the most Blessed Virgin Mary, from the first moment of her conception, by the singular grace and privilege of almighty God, and in view of the merits of Christ Jesus, savior of the human race, was preserved immune from all stain of original sin."

Spirituality for Today

This privilege was not merely a personal gift to Mary, unrelated to her mission. Mary's twofold vocation was to receive Jesus into her body and to give him away to the world for the salvation and sanctification of God's people.

Both the dogma of the Immaculate Conception and that of the Assumption of Mary into heaven tell us that we, too, are destined for glory, not merely as pure spirits but as humans in glorified bodies.

After death, both body and soul will be reunited for eternal life.

I extend to you this personal invitation to visit Lourdes during this 150th anniversary year. The U.S. bishops have encouraged dioceses to consider a pilgrimage to Lourdes as a way of honoring Mary and increasing devotion to her.

Perhaps I will see you there. God bless you.

As I passed the U.S. Capitol in Washington, D.C., something seemed funny. Capitol Hill police cars were parked on the lawn instead of on the street, and police helicopters were sputtering overhead.

It wasn't until I was a few blocks from the mall that I realized a large march was taking place on Pennsylvania Avenue. Loud cries of "Bring home the troops!" rang in the street, and signs against the war in Iraq were everywhere. Riot police lined the parade of marchers who were a sea of youthful enthusiasts, middle-age adults and hobbling elders — all moving slowly toward the Capitol.

As they passed I wondered whether we would ever see an end to Middle East conflicts. Even if U.S. troops came home, governments stabilized somewhat and opposing sides began to talk to one another, will this ultimately create lasting peace?

The frightening thought hit me that the only thing to bring peace might be a catastrophic event that brings everyone to their knees, that we might need to hit bottom in order to come up.

On my way home, I passed the House of Representatives. Over its entrance is the frieze, "The Apotheosis of Democracy." At its center stands Armed Peace protecting the youthful figure of Genius nestled at her feet. On her sides are Agriculture and Industry, a reaper and his helper, a husbandman and a cow, a child garlanded with fruits of the harvest and another child playing with a ram.

The frieze is bounded on both ends by waves symbolizing the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. This masterpiece pictures the love, peace and prosperity upon which the United States was built. It symbolizes that lasting peace relies on industry, agriculture and maritime trade.

It also represents people who work the land and the sea, and who work not only to create prosperity but to receive nobility. Work begets identity and dignity.

Many of today's terrorists were spawned by poverty. They have little or no work, no prosperity to look forward to, and no dignity except that of belonging to a gang of terrorists. The work and prosperity that bless ordinary people are virtually non-existent for them.

In our lifetimes we have had civil strife, but we have never reverted to the level of terrorism the Middle East experiences. In large part, this is because we believe every person has a right to work, and we are blessed in most cases with jobs. Agriculture, industry and maritime trade are the genius behind peace in the United States. Even more so, they are the formula for creating a lasting peace in the Middle East.

A disease that 'affects us all'

Marking World AIDS Day, Dec. 1, 2007

Another day, another cause. That's what World AIDS Day on Dec. 1 each year can seem like, especially if this is a cause that doesn't appear to have much of an impact on your loved ones or you.

The U.S. bishops' Secretariat for African American Catholics — to become part of the Secretariat for Cultural Diversity in the Church as of January 2008 — has a direct response to that point of view concerning AIDS/HIV: "If it infects one of us ... it affects all of us."

Among the resources the secretariat offers to help educate Catholic families about HIV/AIDS is a nine-question pop quiz. Here's a sampling from it. See how much you know:

1. How many people in the world are living with HIV and AIDS?

a. 2 million
b. 12 million
c. 40 million

2. What percentage of people with HIV and AIDS are in the developing world?

a. 50 percent
b. 80 percent
c. 95 percent

3. How many children in Ethiopia have been orphaned by AIDS?

a. 80,000
b. 240,000
c. 720,000

The answer to all three is "c."

The final question offers the reminder that it isn't just the one who has HIV or AIDS who suffers; it's that person's loved ones, too.

In some ways, HIV/AIDS can seem like old news in the United States. Then, too, many current facts and statistics have to do with "over there," not "here." Or with "them and theirs," not "us and ours."

The secretariat notes, "Images associated with HIV and AIDS suggest that HIV is an 'African disease,' 'a gay plague' or a 'junkie's disease.'"

Simply put, we can adopt the attitude that "it's not my problem."

This is hardly what we as parents want to teach our children. Hardly what we as Catholics claim to profess.

What can a family do? What can you do? A few suggestions:

— Pray for those who have HIV or AIDS. Pray for their loved ones. Pray for the children now orphaned because of AIDS. For the spouses, parents, siblings, sons, daughters and friends who grieve.

— Learn more about HIV and AIDS and the tremendous and tragic impact they have on communities and nations.

— Contribute to organizations that are helping alleviate the suffering.

— Wear a red ribbon on World AIDS Day Dec. 1, 2007.

"God of our weary years, God of our silent tears, ... many of us are now suffering with HIV or AIDS.

"We come before you and ask you, if it is your holy will, to take away this suffering from us, restore us to health and lead us to know you and your powerful healing, love of body and spirit.

"We ask you also to be with those of us who nurse your sick ones. We are the mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, children and friends of your suffering people. It is so hard for us to see those whom we love suffer.

"You know what it is to suffer. Help us to minister in loving care, support and patience to your people who suffer with HIV and AIDS. Amen."

Calling for charity after cyclone catastrophe

Pope urges international aid for victims of cyclone in Bangladesh

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI urged international assistance for Bangladesh, where thousands were killed in one of the worst cyclones in the country's history.

"In recent days a tremendous cyclone struck southern Bangladesh, causing numerous victims and serious destruction," the pope told pilgrims at his Sunday blessing at the Vatican Nov. 18.

The pope expressed his condolences to the families of the dead and said he hoped the international community, which moved quickly to aid the survivors, would continue to provide relief.

"I encourage every possible effort to help these brothers and sisters who have been so sorely tried," he said.

Officials estimated that at least 3,100 people died when the cyclone tore through coastal areas of Bangladesh Nov. 15 with winds estimated at 150 mph. Relief agencies said the final death toll could reach 10,000.

In Dhaka, Bangladesh, the head of the nation's charitable agency said Caritas officials were rushing aid to areas along the coast.

"Though there were warnings of the cyclone, its impact has been deadly. The people have been badly affected," Auxiliary Bishop Theotonius Gomes of Dhaka, chairman of Caritas Bangladesh and secretary-general of Catholic Bishops' Conference of Bangladesh, told Catholic News Service Nov. 19.

Bishop Gomes said Caritas officials had rushed to the worst-affected areas like the port city of Chittagong to assess the needs of the affected people and plan the church's relief work.

Caritas Bangladesh appealed for food aid and tarpaulins (plastic sheeting) and blankets to provide shelter to the families rendered homeless by the cyclone.

"Crops have been destroyed in water-logged areas, fishermen communities and day laborers have lost their sources of income, and thousands of people are too poor to have any food stocks in their homes," said the appeal.

Caritas said its national, regional and field offices had taken preventive measures and joined in cautioning the villagers along the coastlines to flee the coastal areas.

Many villagers could find no trace of their homes when they returned the next day.

Bishop Gomes said although many simple church structures in the areas have also been damaged there has been no report of damage to any major church properties.

Meanwhile, the international Caritas network responded with pledges of financial assistance. For instance, Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops' international relief and development agency, initially pledged $50,000 in aid.

Christians make up less than 1 percent of Bangladesh's estimated 150 million people, nearly 90 percent of whom are Muslim; Hindus and Buddhists account for the rest of the population.

In his main talk at the Sunday Angelus, Pope Benedict spoke about how Christians are called on to face daily trials — including natural catastrophes — with the confidence of faith.

History follows its course, which includes human drama and suffering, but it still embodies a "design of salvation" introduced by Christ's life, death and resurrection, he said.

Christians therefore should trust in God's love as they cope with difficulties and apprehensions, he said.

"We don't fear the future, even when it appears ominous, because the God of Jesus Christ, who took up history to open it up to its transcendent fulfillment, is its alpha and omega, the beginning and the end," he said.

He said Christ guarantees that the entire meaning of the universe is contained in "every small but genuine act of love."

VATICAN CITY — In a liturgy that emphasized the church's cultural diversity and its unity of mission, Pope Benedict XVI named 23 new cardinals from 14 countries.

The group included U.S. Cardinal John P. Foley, grand master of the Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, and Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston.

The pope, presiding over his second consistory, told the new cardinals he had chosen them to be the "closest advisers and collaborators" of his ministry in Rome, the church's traditional center.

At the same time, he said, the cardinals' geographical variety reflects Catholicism's

A MOST CARING 'G-DOG'

Jesuit Father Greg Boyle (center) is assisted by youths from Homeboy Industries as he breaks ground for the organization's new headquarters in Los Angeles in early March 2006. Father Boyle, known to former gang members in East Los Angeles as "G-Dog," was among the 11 people honored as the most caring people in America for 2007.

Jesuit who works with gang members named one of most caring Americans

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A priest known to former gang members in East Los Angeles as "G-Dog" was among five adults and six young people honored by the Washington-based Caring Institute as the most caring people in America for 2007.

Jesuit Father Gregory Boyle, who founded Homeboy Industries in 1988 to provide "hope, not jail" for former gang members who want to turn their lives around, received one of the 2007 National Caring Awards at a Nov. 16 ceremony in Washington.

As chairman of the institute's board of trustees, former U.S. Sen. Robert J. Dole of Kansas described the 2007 winners as "wonderful role models and the very personification of caring."

Father Boyle's programs help an estimated 1,000 young people from nearly 600 different gangs each month. Beginning with a jobs program and a bakery, Homeboy Industries now includes a cafe as well as businesses that offer silk-screening and home maintenance services and sell merchandise with the Homeboy logo.

Other adult recipients of the 2007 Caring Awards were:

— Constantin Asavaoie, director of Prison Fellowship Romania, who spent 10 years in prison because of his Christian faith;

— Dominic Avellani, founder of the East Boston Adult Education Center, which has assisted more than 40,000 immigrants, refugees and high school dropouts;

— Rose Espinoza of La Habra, Calif., who started a tutoring program for low-income children that now serves 200 children at four branches;

— Karin Walser, founder and executive director of Horton's Kids, a nonprofit tutoring and mentoring program in the southeast section of Washington.

Youth winners of the Caring Awards were:

— Jourdan Urbach, a 15-year-old violin virtuoso from Roslyn Heights, N.Y., who has raised more than $1.3 million for pediatric units and medical charities.

— Mollie and Jackie Singer, 18-year-old twins from Las Vegas who started Diabetic Angels to educate children about diabetes and teach them how to watch out for their diabetic friends.

— Davin Singleton, 18, of Pasadena, Md., who created a workshop called "Dreamers: How to Become Your Dream" to empower dyslexics like himself and other children.

— Lauren Beeder of Newbury Park, Calif., a 16-year-old volunteer at Children's Hospital of Los Angeles who founded kidsCANCERvive to raise funds for research and provide online support to children with cancer and their families.

— Emily Wemhoff, 18, of Creston, Neb., founder of Project SAFE, or Save a Friend Everyday, whose fire safety efforts have saved countless lives in Nebraska.

The Caring Institute was founded in 1985 by Val Halamandaris after he met with Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta. She suggested he confront the poverty of the spirit in the developed world by identifying extraordinarily gifted people and holding them up as role models.

Catholic officials say Middle East peace possible, but U.S. must lead

BALTIMORE (CNS) — As key leaders from Israel, the Palestinian territories, Saudi Arabia, Syria and other nations gathered in Annapolis for a Nov. 26-28 Middle East peace conference and related meetings, local Catholic leaders said they were hopeful the meetings would trigger further discussions for making a lasting peace in the Holy Land.

Peace is attainable, they said, but it will take assertive leadership from the United States to make it a reality.

"I'm guardedly optimistic in the sense that I'm always happy when there's some kind of negotiation going on in the Middle East," said Baltimore Auxiliary Bishop Denis J. Madden, urban vicar for the archdiocese.

Bishop Madden previously served as director of the Pontifical Mission for Palestine office in Jerusalem. He said the lack of strong leadership from the United States in recent years has been a contributing reason the peace process has stalled. He was hopeful the U.S.-led Annapolis conference would change that.

The conference and related meetings included participants from 50 organizations and countries, including Israel, the Palestinian territories and several Arab states.

Bishop Madden said there is general consensus about what steps are needed to achieve peace. Israelis would like greater control of the terrorists who pose a threat to security, he said, while Palestinians are looking for a cessation of Israeli settlement-building, the return of land and freer travel.

Pope Benedict XVI said he hoped the Annapolis conference would help Palestinians and Israelis reach a "just and definitive solution."

The Vatican also sent a delegation to the conference headed by Msgr. Pietro Parolin, undersecretary for the foreign affairs section of the Vatican Secretariat of State. He was accompanied by Msgr. Franco Coppola, another foreign affairs specialist.

FROM THE VATICAN

Vatican prepares new series of conferences on social development

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Forty years after Pope Paul VI's groundbreaking encyclical on human development, "Populorum Progressio," the Vatican is preparing to launch a new series of conferences and publications on poverty, corruption, disarmament, prisons and the ethics of taxation.

The new proposals were discussed at the Nov. 20-21 plenary assembly of the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace, which examined the impact of the 1967 encyclical and the new challenges that have emerged since its publication.

In a statement, the council announced proposals for at least four major international conferences on themes related to justice and world peace. It said the topics will include "politics, democracy and values"; disarmament; Catholic social doctrine and the laity; and "ethics and taxation."

Future documents will address the topics of poverty and globalization; penal justice and the re-education of convicts; and the fight against corruption, it said.

During the encounter, participants underlined that the moral dimension of development was more important than ever in an increasingly globalized economy.

The plenary assembly was followed by a Rome conference of Catholic organizations that work on justice and peace issues. Addressing participants, Cardinal Renato Martino, head of the pontifical council, said globalization holds real opportunities, as long as its goals are based on the sharing of resources and the common good, he said.

Mati Mulumba, an economist from the Democratic Republic of Congo, said multilateral cooperation over the last 40 years has brought progress in health care, education and areas of economic development. But he said the world has not eradicated the imbalances between rich and poor, which was one of the appeals made in Pope Paul's encyclical.

U.N. nuncio urges religions to be 'loud and clear' against violence

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (CNS) — Religious leaders must speak out "loud and clear" against those who try to use sacred texts such as the Quran or the Bible to justify violence or human rights violations, the Vatican's nuncio to the United Nations said in a lecture at the University of Notre Dame.

Archbishop Celestino Migliore spoke Nov. 15 on "Catholicism and Islam: Points of Convergence and Divergence, Encounter and Cooperation."

He said the spread of terrorism has "triggered a renewed interest in Christian-Islamic dialogue."

"It's not enough for any religion to say: We have nothing to do with extremists, with fundamentalists; or, extremists do not speak for our respective religions," Archbishop Migliore said.

"Indeed extremists and fundamentalists do make reference to the same sacred texts; they even dare to portray themselves as the faithful interpreters and keepers of those sacred texts," he said.

"Rather, we have to engage those who try to justify their unjustifiable acts of violence and multiform violations of human rights using those same texts and proclaim it loud and clear that those texts do not lend themselves to a reading which leads to violence," he added.

The history of relations between Christians and Muslims has been "marked by long periods of incomprehension, of rivalry and at times also very violent oppression, interspersed with intervals — although truly limited in time and space — of peaceful coexistence and of mutual cooperation at all levels," he said.

But Archbishop Migliore cited three important "points of convergence" between Christians and Muslims: "We are all children of Abraham; both are monotheists and belong to a religion gifted with a sacred book."

"The similarities that are found" in the Bible and the Quran "offer starting points and basis to achieve together personal holiness and the common good of society," he said.

Archbishop Migliore suggested that the theme of "love of God and neighbor" could be the source of fruitful dialogue between the two religions.

Guiding the roles of pastors and pastoral councils

Bishop Jugis promulgates revised guidelines

CHARLOTTE — Bishop Peter J. Jugis has approved new guidelines for parish pastoral councils in the Diocese of Charlotte.

The bishop signed the decree of promulgation, dated Nov. 1, the date the new guidelines went into effect.

Replacing those issued in 1991, the revised guidelines reflect the changing role of pastoral councils in the 21st century.

By virtue of their baptisms and full initiation into the Catholic Church, the laity "share responsibility" with priests "for the pastoral mission of the local church," said Bishop Jugis in the decree of promulgation.

"Members of the pastoral council collaborate with the pastor in the building up of the church and its sanctification," wrote Bishop Jugis.

Msgr. James Gaston and Sister Brenda Herman lead a training session on new pastoral council guidelines at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory Nov. 17.

Bishop Jugis wrote that, according to the Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity of the Second Vatican Council, the action of pastoral councils "within the Church communities is so necessary that without it the apostolate of pastors will frequently be unable to obtain its full effect."

"The primary work of any pastoral council should be the building of a single community of faith," said George Cobb, director of planning and research for the Diocese of Charlotte.

"The guidelines reflect a new tone of decision-making that returns pastoral councils to their original intent — from managing interior church matters to consulting and advising the pastor on matters relating to the parish and the larger community in which its members are called by Christ to serve," said Cobb, who provides pastoral council training in the diocese.

The guidelines will bring uniformity to the use of pastoral councils by standardizing their roles and relationships with other parish organizations, such as providing clarification on the role of parish commissions and on the parish staff's relationship with lay councils and commissions.

Training sessions on the guidelines were offered for priests, deacons and lay pastoral council members at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory Nov. 15 and 17.

The sessions were facilitated by Msgr. James Gaston, a priest of the Diocese of Greensburg, Pa., and Sister Brenda Herman, a member of the Missionary Servants of the Most Blessed Trinity, both of whom have extensive, firsthand experience working with pastoral councils.

The revised guidelines are available in English on the diocesan Web site, www.charlottediocese.org/parish.html. A Spanish-language version will be available soon.

Sending the season overseas

Faith formation classes 'adopt' soldiers for Christmas

BY LAURA RICE
SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — Jackie Cristiano is a woman who thinks ahead, and with good reasons.

She's senior vice president at a bank, a cycling instructor at the YMCA and a religious education teacher at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte.

But it's her role as mother to four children, specifically to her son John, that's put her planning skills to work.

Sgt. John Cristiano of Task Force Gladius of the 82nd Airborne out of Fort Bragg is currently serving his fourth year in the U.S. Army and finishing up his first year in Afghanistan.

Knowing her son wouldn't be returning home until March 2008 and wanting to make Christmas a bit brighter for him and his fellow soldiers, Cristiano turned to the young faith formation students at St. Gabriel Church for help.

The response from the 700 children in the 44 classes from kindergarten through eighth grade was overwhelming.

The classes "adopted" the 34 soldiers in the unit, providing each one with gifts, necessities and some much-needed holiday cheer.

Beginning in late October, the parish's 90 catechists worked with students and their families to quickly provide items for the classes' designated soldiers, in order to mail them to reach the soldiers by Christmas.

The response was immediate, with many parents wanting to give more. The parish faith formation office was soon filled with donated items, including T-shirts, DVDs, CDs and books.

"When I first asked if we could involve the other classes in this, I never expected such a response. It's all going to be so appreciated," said Cristiano.

The catechists began incorporating into their lessons themes connected to the collection for the soldiers — such as Christian charity, the Corporal Works of Mercy, the Good Samaritan and the generosity of the Holy Spirit.

Students wrote cards and letters to their adopted soldiers; they decorated handmade ornaments and took class photographs to send in the packages.

Cristiano initially expected to be sending small care packages, but the families filled multiple shopping bags for each soldier. When the magnitude of the shipping costs became apparent, another religious education teacher and Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor, donated money to help defray the costs.

The packages arrived in Afghanistan the day after Thanksgiving, Nov. 23. Sgt. Cristiano called his mother soon after to say the soldiers were happy and grateful to receive so many items. The unit took photographs of the gifts being opened, which will be shared with the students.

Meanwhile, Jackie Cristiano continues looking ahead — to sending future care packages and to welcoming her son home again.

Many faiths gather for annual ecumenical service

from various faiths, was sponsored by Mecklenburg Ministries, a nonprofit, interfaith organization.

"This service gives Charlotte the wonderful opportunity to worship with people of different religions," said Rabbi Murray Ezring of Temple Israel in Charlotte.

"It helps us appreciate the many things we share in common that unite us. When houses of faith connect in this positive worship experience, they are not afraid to work together for our city," said Rabbi Ezring, one of the event's organizers.

Rev. Greg Moss, pastor of St. Paul Missionary Baptist Church in Charlotte, gave the keynote speech, "The Soul of the City."

"Do we want Charlotte to be a world-class city, or a world-class community?" he asked the attendees.

To achieve "world-class community" status, Rev. Moss said residents of all faiths must strive to overcome the injustices plaguing their communities.

"We need to work to develop the will to deal with the issues of homelessness, affordable housing and living wages," said Rev. Moss in an interview with The Catholic News & Herald.

In separate interviews, several of the participating spiritual leaders discussed ways to follow through on Rev. Moss' challenge of making Charlotte a "world-class community."

"We all need to pay attention to social issues," said Rabbi Micah Streiffer, assistant rabbi at Temple Beth El in Charlotte.

"People are created in God's image and are deserving of those basic necessities," he said. "We can make a difference if we pay attention to that."

"We need to stop focusing on our differences and focus on what we have in common," said Rabbi Ezring.

The rabbi spoke of the recent All Clergy Build, in which spiritual leaders and members from 10 faiths built a Habitat for Humanity house in Charlotte.

"Now a family has something they did not have before because God's leaders came together and made a difference," he said.

The house was dedicated and presented to the family Nov. 18.

University of North Carolina, the All Clergy Build was his first chance to interact with many clergy and spiritual leaders of other faiths.

"We were gathered to do something good for the community, and it opened a door for exchange in a relaxed atmosphere," said Rokayak.

He said events such as the interfaith Thanksgiving service also help to promote unity among the people.

"Education is key. When we learn about each other, we avoid judgments based on stereotypes," said Rokayak.

People of all faiths must be "more generous and become bridge builders," said Father Frank O'Rourke, pastor of St. Gabriel Church.

"Then we can be more responsive to the plight of people who are in need," he said.

Exploring ways to strengthen families

Office of Economic Opportunity welcomes Catholic Charities visitors

MURPHY — Members of several Catholic Charities agencies recently came to the Diocese of Charlotte.

The group visited Catholic Social Service's Office of Economic Opportunity in Murphy Nov. 6-8, part of a tour highlighting the 2007 recipients of the Catholic Charities USA Family Strengthening Awards — of which the OEO was one of four national recipients.

Established in 1999 by the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace, the OEO serves the far-western North Carolina counties of Cherokee, Clay, Graham and Swain.

As a recipient of a Family Strengthening Award, the OEO received a $25,000 grant to be used for its programs, which help strengthen families and promote financial literacy.

The visiting group included members of seven Catholic Charities agencies throughout the United States and Catholic Charities USA headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

They traveled the four counties served by the OEO, learned about its programs, met representatives of partnering organizations and listened to an ecumenical panel of clergy speak about the OEO's interfaith partnerships.

One of the OEO's programs is Far West Families First, which matches struggling families with ecumenical faith teams who provide support and encouragement to help the families reach financial goals.

The visiting Catholic Charities personnel indicated a desire to introduce faith team partnerships and ecumenical collaborations into their agencies and programs.

Jean Beil, Catholic Charities USA senior vice president for programs, complimented Claudie Burchfield, diocesan OEO program director, and OEO staff members Netta McFaddin and Mary Pat Dailey for what they are "able to accomplish by developing such a supportive network."

The tour included a visit to the Museum of the Cherokee Indian in Cherokee, Mass celebrated by Father Shawn O'Neal at Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in Cherokee and a dinner celebration at the OEO's annual grants and awards ceremony.

Elizabeth Thurbee, executive director of Catholic Social Services of the Diocese of Charlotte, thanked the attendees from the western North Carolina communities for their contributions to the OEO's various collaborative projects.

She also expressed her appreciation to the Catholic Charities visitors for coming to the Diocese of Charlotte to hear about the unique work of the OEO's programs.

Catholic Charities USA officials urge government to do more for poor

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Just last year, Catholic Charities agencies across the country provided services for one out of every 10 people living in poverty.

Although the agencies are proud of the work they do, they would like to see that number of people in need decrease. But that is not going to happen, according to Catholic Charities officials, until the federal government steps up its efforts to help the country's poor.

"The federal government must do its part" because "we can't continue to provide at this level," said Father Larry Snyder, president of Catholic Charities USA during a Nov. 15 press conference in Washington where a report titled "Poverty in America: Beyond the Numbers" was released.

What the report shows about services provided to the poor is "impressive, but alarming," said Father Snyder.

He described the current state of poverty in the United States as both "unacceptable" and a "moral crisis."

The report, based on a 2006 survey of local agencies, provides a state-by-state look at the types of services local Catholic Charities agencies provide.

There are 173 main agencies, which include nearly 1,735 branches and affiliates. Charities funding comes from the Catholic Church, program service fees, government contracts and the support of corporations, foundations and individuals.

According to the report, the agencies are serving a growing number of people below the poverty line, including 4.1 million people last year. In 2006 Catholic Charities agencies served a total of 7.9 million clients.

In 2006, local Catholic Charities agencies saw a 12 percent increase in the need for food service programs, and between 2002 and 2006 the number of clients receiving food services — through soup kitchens, food banks and pantries or with home-delivered meals — increased by 2.7 million, or nearly 60 percent.

Janet Valente Pape, chairwoman of the Catholic Charities USA board said the report "shines a spotlight" on the work of Catholic Charities.

She also said it is getting "harder and harder to meet escalating needs."

Other key findings of the survey show that more than 45 percent of Catholic Charities' clients were either under 18 or over 65.

The agencies' community service programs including education and enrichment, social support, health-related services and neighborhood activism — reached more than 3.6 million people last year, a 7 percent increase from the previous year.

Also last year, nearly 1.1 million people received counseling, mental health services and immigration services. In the past five years, requests for temporary shelters have increased 24 percent.

Last year, Catholic Charities agencies managed more than 176 temporary shelters and were unable to serve more than 31,000 people because all available beds were full.

"Thank God for Catholic Charities," said U.S. Rep. Jim McGovern, D-Mass., at the press conference.

McGovern, a co-chair of the Congressional Hunger Caucus, said the increase in poverty in this country makes the need for Catholic Charities' services all the more acute. But he also stressed that the work of Catholic Charities "does not let the government off the hook."

"The government is not doing enough to meet the needs of its people," he said.

But he also said there were signs of hope and that lobbying efforts by groups such as Catholic Charities "are starting to resonate."

"You're shaming us to talk about issues," he said, adding that the organization's new report is a "great road map" showing what needs to be done.

Rev. David Beckmann, head of the Christian citizens' anti-hunger lobby Bread for the World, likewise noted signs of hope, saying, "We're on the cusp of a groundswell of concern for hunger."

But concern alone, by U.S. citizens, is not enough, he said. It has to make its way to government leaders.

"The government has to do its part," he said, and "has to be part of the solution."

Earlier this year, Catholic Charities USA launched a campaign with the goal to cut poverty in America in half by 2020. That would mean that the 37 million Americans now living below the poverty line, who form 12.6 percent of the country's population, would have to drop to about 6 percent within 13 years.

Catholic Charities USA and its branches and affiliates plan to attack the structural roots of poverty by advocating in Washington and in state capitals.

Ethical, scientific breakthroughs seen in new stem-cell studies

Separate studies from teams led by Shinya Yamanaka of Kyoto University in Japan and Junying Yu and James Thomson of the University of Wisconsin-Madison were published online Nov. 20 by the journals Cell and Science, respectively.

"The methods outlined in these papers fully conform to what we have hoped to see for some time," said a statement from the National Catholic Bioethics Center in Philadelphia.

"Such strategies should continue to be pursued and strongly promoted, as they should help to steer the entire field of stem-cell research in a more explicitly ethical direction by circumventing the moral quagmire associated with destroying human embryos," it added.

By adding four genes to the skin cells, the scientists were able to create stem cells that genetically match the donor and have the ability to become any of the 220 types of cells in the human body.

"The induced cells do all the things embryonic stem cells do," Thomson, who isolated the first embryonic stem cells in 1998, said in a university news release.

"It's going to completely change the field," he said.

Cardinal Justin Rigali of Philadelphia, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities, welcomed the news, expressing gratitude "for scientists who took up the challenge of finding morally acceptable ways to pursue stem-cell research, and for government leaders who have encouraged and funded such avenues."

The new technology "avoids the many ethical land mines associated with embryonic stem-cell research: It does not clone or destroy human embryos, does not harm or exploit women for their eggs, and does not blur the line between human beings and other species through desperate efforts to make human embryos using animal eggs," he added.

The White House also praised the breakthrough Nov. 20, saying that President George W. Bush's June 2007

"The methods outlined in these papers fully conform to what we have hoped to see for some time."

— National Catholic Bioethics Center

executive order expanding stem-cell research using "ethically responsible techniques" was "intended to accelerate precisely the kind of research being reported today."

"The president believes medical problems can be solved without compromising either the high aims of science or the sanctity of human life," said press secretary Dana Perino.

"We will continue to encourage scientists to expand the frontiers of stem-cell research and continue to advance the understanding of human biology in an ethically responsible way," she said.

The findings drew similar reaction from Catholic and pro-life leaders abroad.

Australian Archbishop Philip Wilson of Adelaide, president of the Australian Catholic Bishops' Conference, said, "While it is still early days for this research, it is a very promising discovery which will help scientists to fight serious diseases without resorting to the deliberate destruction of human embryos to obtain stem cells."

He expressed regret that the Australian Parliament had acted to permit embryonic stem-cell research when more effective and more ethical means were just around the corner.

In Great Britain, the head of the pro-life group Society for the Protection of Unborn Children said the new stem-cell studies "show that one can be both pro-life and pro-science."

"Experimenting with embryos, on the other hand, is both bad ethics and bad science," said Anthony Ozimic. "Science advances when it respects human life, but stalls or even goes backwards when it treats human beings as mere research material."

Creating Stem Cells

Researchers have discovered a new way to develop stem cells that bypasses the use of human embryos.

Ian Wilmut, the Scottish scientist who created Dolly the cloned sheep in 1996, told the London Telegraph that he had decided in light of the new findings to abandon his efforts to clone human embryos and would instead concentrate on research involving the new reprogramming techniques.

Archbishop Mario Conti of Glasgow, Scotland, chairman of the United Kingdom and Ireland Joint Bishops' Bioethics Committee, welcomed Wilmut's announcement, saying: "The Catholic Church has constantly supported the work of scientists who use adult stem cells, research which has produced much more promising results and avoids the ethical dilemma involved in creating and destroying human life."

The National Catholic Bioethics Center said Wilmut's change of heart "flowed largely from practical considerations" but that the scientist also had acknowledged that the new approach was "easier to accept socially."

"Persistence in seeking creative scientific breakthroughs and actively pursuing alternative approaches can help resolve serious ethical problems and allow us to maintain the ethical integrity of science while achieving important scientific and medical ends," the statement said.

However, Thomson and the International Society for Stem-Cell Research called on scientists to continue research involving the destruction of human embryos.

More study is needed to ensure that the newly made cells "do not differ from embryonic stem cells in a clinically significant or unexpected way, so it is hardly time to discontinue embryonic stem-cell research," Thomson said.

"These findings do not obviate the need for research using human embryonic stem cells," said the society in a Nov. 20 statement.

"Rather, the different avenues of human stem-cell research should be pursued side by side providing complementary information," it said.

In light of that stand by some scientists, Mailee Smith, staff counsel for the Chicago-based Americans United for Life, said: "The need for states to pass legislation that bans all forms of human cloning remains."

Vatican official says stem-cell studies show science can be ethical

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Recent studies showing that human skin cells can be reprogrammed to function as stem cells demonstrate that scientific progress can be achieved without violating basic ethical norms, said Bishop Elio Sgreccia, president of the Pontifical Academy for Life.

"If this technique is validated, it would be a historic discovery," the bishop told Vatican Radio in late November.

The success of the approach, which the Japanese and U.S. researchers followed for scientific and not primarily for ethical reasons, demonstrates that progress does not have to violate ethical norms, he said.

And, he said, the results demonstrate that "it is not true that the church is against research, only that it is against bad research, research which damages human beings, in this case the human embryo."

He said it is a shame that so many human embryos have been destroyed and so many millions of taxpayer dollars have been spent on embryonic stem-cell research when better results have been obtained without destroying embryos.

"It is true" that researchers do not know for sure what will work and what will not when they begin a project, the bishop said, "but there were already indications that results could be obtained using adult stem cells, while from embryonic stem cells there have been no results."

"I do not know if those who have invested money and passed laws precisely to allow this (embryonic stem-cell research) will be able to recognize their error and turn back, but at least the scientists who want to achieve results will go looking where they have been proven to be found," Bishop Sgreccia said.

global expansion and the fact that today the church "speaks every language of the world."

International groups of pilgrims who packed St. Peter's Basilica for the Nov. 24 consistory added emphasis to the pope's words, applauding, cheering and even waving national flags when the new cardinals' names were announced.

The pope made a special appeal for peace in Iraq and said his naming of Cardinal Emmanuel-Karim Dely of Baghdad, the Chaldean patriarch, was a sign of his closeness to the country's Christian population.

"They are experiencing in their own flesh the dramatic consequences of an enduring conflict and now live in a fragile and delicate political situation," the pope said.

"Together we want to reaffirm the solidarity of the entire church with the Christians of that beloved land and ask prayers for the beginning of the hoped-for reconciliation for all the peoples involved," he said.

New cardinals

During the consistory, each cardinal knelt as the pope placed on his head a red three-cornered hat, called a biretta.

The pope told them the color was not only a sign of the cardinal's dignity, but also a visible reminder of their readiness to act with courage "even to the point of shedding your blood" in order to help spread the Christian faith.

Cardinal Dely, 80, received the biggest applause when he approached the altar to receive his red hat; the pope gave him the classic round hat of a Chaldean patriarch instead of a biretta.

Pope Benedict, wearing a gold cape and seated on a gilded throne, smiled as he watched the cardinals adjust their hats and receive the congratulations of the veteran cardinals, who filled the front of the basilica.

Cardinal Foley, a 72-year-old native of Philadelphia, spent many years as a Catholic journalist before being named to head the Pontifical Council for Social Communications in 1984.

In June he was made head of the Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, a chivalric organization that responds to the needs of Catholics in the Holy Land.

Meeting reporters afterward, Cardinal Foley said he appreciated the great number of warm and positive articles about him in recent days.

"It's nice to be canonized without the inconvenience of dying," he quipped.

Cardinal DiNardo, 58, was the second-youngest of the new cardinals. He is the first cardinal from a Texas diocese, and his nomination was considered a sign of Pope Benedict's attention to the growth of the Catholic Church in the U.S. Southwest.

"It's an honor, a responsibility and pretty humbling for this kid from Pittsburgh," Cardinal DiNardo said of his elevation to the rank of cardinal.

Besides the United States and Iraq, other new cardinals came from Argentina, Brazil, France, Germany, India, Northern Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Mexico, Poland, Senegal and Spain.

Cardinal duties

Of the 23 new cardinals, 18 were under the age of 80 and therefore eligible to vote in a conclave. Those over 80 included Franciscan Cardinal Umberto Betti, 85, who processed into the basilica in a wheelchair; when he was given his red hat by the pope, whom he has known for more than 40 years, he appeared to be overwhelmed with emotion.

The consistory left the College of Cardinals with 201 members, a new record. Of those, 120 are under age 80 and eligible to vote in a conclave.

In his sermon, the pope underlined that being a cardinal was not about power and success, but a new form of service.

"True Christian greatness, in fact, lies not in dominating but in serving," he said.

This is the ideal that should guide the cardinals in their new role, he said.

Each of the new cardinals was assigned a church in Rome as a symbol that he was becoming a member of the clergy of Rome and was more closely bound to the bishop of Rome, the pope.

Cardinal Foley was given the Church of St. Sebastian on the Palatine Hill. Cardinal DiNardo received the Church of St. Eusebius, one of the city's oldest churches, on the Esquiline Hill.

The consistory liturgy had been planned for St. Peter's Square, but was moved inside the basilica when bad weather was forecast. In the end, it did not rain during the consistory. The pope walked out to the steps of the basilica afterward and extemporized a talk to those who waited outside.

Among those in the square was a large contingent from Senegal who came to cheer Cardinal Theodore-Adrien Sarr of Dakar. They wore T-shirts with the cardinal's name and picture on the front and the phrase, "Where can we go, Lord?" written on the back in French.

Alphonse Mendy, a native of Dakar, said the nomination was especially important for the African country because it put the spotlight on the minority Catholic population in a country that is more than 90 percent Muslim.

After the consistory, the cardinals scattered to various receptions throughout the day, including a big open house held in the late afternoon in the Vatican's Apostolic Palace.

The following day, the pope celebrated Mass with the new cardinals and gave each one a gold ring to symbolize his special bond of communion with Rome.

The day before, the pope presided over a meeting with cardinals and cardinals-designate for discussions on the church's ecumenical dialogues.

New Cardinal Emmanuel-Karim Delly of Baghdad, Iraq, leaves the consistory Nov. 24 at the Vatican. The Chaldean patriarch said Pope Benedict XVI hoped that naming him a cardinal might promote dialogue and reconciliation between Christians and Muslims in Iraq.

Elevation of Chaldean patriarch highlights plight of Iraqi Christians

Iraqi delegation attend consistory at Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — When Pope Benedict XVI placed a red hat on Cardinal Emmanuel-Karim Delly of Baghdad during a Nov. 24 consistory in St. Peter's Basilica, he was honoring not just the patriarch of the Chaldean church, but was elevating the plight of Iraqi Christians to the world's attention.

The pope "told me 'I hope this gesture will be a sign of reconciliation not only among the people, but especially among Sunnis, Shiites and Christians, because Iraq is a country dear to me,'" the patriarch told reporters Nov. 23 after a meeting of cardinals and cardinals-designate with the pope.

During the Nov. 24 consistory, Pope Benedict said in his homily that elevating the Chaldean leader was a way of "concretely expressing my spiritual closeness and my affection" for Iraq's Christian minorities.

"They are experiencing in their own flesh the dramatic consequences of an enduring conflict and now live in a fragile and delicate political situation," the pope said.

Among the thousands of pilgrims crammed inside the basilica were hundreds of Chaldean Catholics from Iraq, Syria, Jordan, the United States and Europe. Pilgrims who did not get inside the standing-room-only ceremony in the basilica watched in St. Peter's Square.

One large group waved two immense Iraqi flags, devoid of Arabic script, cheering loudly when the pope announced their patriarch's name.

Chaldean Father Basel Yaldo, 37, was among those who came to Rome to see his patriarch elevated. Father Yaldo was kidnapped for three days in September 2006, just after Pope Benedict's controversial remarks about Islam in Regensburg, Germany, inflamed part of the Muslim world.

Death threats against the priest were so serious that he was transferred from Baghdad to a parish in Michigan.

Jerry Yono, a Chaldean businessman in Southfield, Mich., said Father Yaldo had been beaten so badly by his captors that he was unable to walk properly for a long time.

Speaking to CNS through a translator, Father Yaldo said Nov. 23 that he had not been kidnapped for money, but that his abductors instead "had some conditions."

Yono said one of the conditions was to tell Cardinal Delly that all Christians were to leave Iraq.

Cardinal Delly said he would stay in Iraq and continue to lobby political and religious leaders to work together to create peace and improve security in the country. He said that now when he travels abroad as cardinal he "will try to convince everyone who left the country to return to Iraq and work to build Iraq together."

Cardinal Delly said Iraq's prime minister, president and parliament all sent delegations to the consistory. Political representatives included members of the Shiite-backed Supreme Islamic Iraqi Council — one of Iraq's largest and most powerful political parties — and emissaries of Iraq's regional Kurdish government.

He said Sunni and Shiite Muslims, Kurds, Christians and other religious and ethnic representatives were in attendance to pay witness to the Iraqi government's desire "that we are still in a united Iraq and that I will continue to serve (my country) with all my strength to the last drop of my blood."

The 20-member government delegation was headed by the minister of human rights, Wijdan Mikhail Salim, a Chaldean Catholic who said she hoped Cardinal Delly's elevation "will be for the good of all of Iraq."

She told CNS her government "does not want the Christians to leave"; they want all groups to live together harmoniously and are "trying to improve security for all people."

She said the government wanted to thank the pope for bringing the world's attention to Iraq through Cardinal Delly's elevation. She said the Catholic Church has always tried to remind people of Iraq's need for help, and she praised it because "it supports all Iraqi people, not just Christians."

Despite churches, mosques and religious leaders often being targets of bombings and kidnappings, Salim said the conflict in Iraq "is not a religious civil war."

She said criminals, terrorists and other groups were hiding behind religious symbols "for some political aims."

Three childhood friends write book on their WWII experiences

BY MICHAEL VICK
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SAN FRANCISCO — Ken Burns' recent documentary, "The War," showcased the stories of average soldiers in new ways, revealing hidden stories behind the most explosive conflict of the 20th century.

One reason Burns cited for those stories remaining in the shadows for so long is the costly psychological trauma inflicted on young men in war.

In 2005, a trio of San Francisco natives and World War II veterans published their account of World War II, and raised a different reason why so many stories remained shrouded.

"We just didn't think people would be interested in what we had to say," said Ken Ross, co-author with childhood friends Normand Black and Carl Swendsen of the book "We Didn't Know We Were Heroes."

The men continue to be surprised by how many people have eagerly snapped up copies.

Ross, who compiled the book from audio recordings, said the three would often tell stories about the war to friends and family. Their loved ones' interest in hearing more and seeing the men actually put what they had on paper prompted them to tell their story.

Black now lives just down the road from Ross in Windsor, where both attend Our Lady of Guadalupe Church.

"What we've found is every time we speak to someone, they mention their father or their uncle or grandfather," Black said. "They wish they'd asked them questions, but they're gone."

In the preface, Ross makes it clear the book is not meant to be a historically complete account or a discussion of military strategy. The stories are personal and tempered by the 60 years that separate the young men in the account from the retired veterans who wrote it.

"We don't want to deceive you readers into thinking that we are historians or apologists for our nation and civilian or military leadership," Ross writes. "We are just three average guys — of course, we think we're a cut above average."

In those stories, the three recount their journey from high school students to soldiers, starting Dec. 7, 1941.

Catholics Kenneth Ross, Carl Swendsen and Normand Black write about "three ordinary guys, fresh out of high school, who sign up to do their part" in World War II in their book, "We Didn't Know We Were Heroes." They are pictured in an undated photo.

When they learned Japan had attacked America's Pacific fleet, Ross, his two friends and his fellow classmates immediately wanted to join the military.

Swendsen entered the Navy and ran supplies in the treacherous Pacific. Black also served in the Pacific in the Army. He saw combat in the Gilbert Islands, Saipan and Okinawa, and later served for in Japan after the Japanese surrender.

Ross served in the 101st Airborne Division as a demolition specialist, and saw combat in the European theater at the Battle of the Bulge.

In the book, the men recount both lighthearted moments and the darkness of war. The men dedicate the book to their wives — Black's Jackie, Ross' Lyn and Swendsen's Pat.

"The war never really got to me," Ross said. "It was nasty and horrible and horrendous, but I did it and forgot about it."

Swendsen, who still lives in San Francisco where he is a parishioner at St. Monica Church, writes of his experience on supply ships in the Pacific. The ships carried limited armaments and traveled without escort in waters crawling with Japanese submarines.

Each veteran ends his section of the book with moving statements on "How I Feel About War." Each embraces the importance of defending nation and family when under attack.

Each underscores, as did Burns' series, that war "is nasty business," in the words of Swendsen.

We must be open, willing to be filled with Holy Spirit

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My 25-year-old friend Penny used to tell me about her weekend social "adventures" with her friend Sara. Sara was a bit of a "wild child," Penny explained.

The two had very different backgrounds. Sara came from a broken home with little discipline or parental attention during her adolescent years. Penny's family was close-knit and, while not overbearingly devout, Christian values were at its core.

Penny herself had a strong sense of personal morality and self-confidence. It was obvious that Sara admired Penny and subtly tried to emulate her.

Sara began having relational problems with her boyfriend. She told Penny that he was controlling and didn't treat her with respect.

She told him she'd started going to church and wanted him to go too. He didn't buy it. Still Sara continued the relationship with him — and quit going to church herself.

Penny didn't counsel Sara to go back to church. Instead, she suggested Sara not only end the bad relationship but start showing respect for herself by continuing her college education, slowing down her drinking and giving up other negative behaviors that contributed to a poor self-image.

But Sara wasn't willing to change or sever the attachment to her boyfriend.

Penny, meanwhile, was on a forward track and quickly tired of the shallow party scene and moved on.

Months later Penny heard from her old friend. Sara had decided she wanted to be a teacher and had begun college classes toward that goal.

She also broke up with the boyfriend, was working out regularly at the Y and had met some new and interesting friends.

"She seems so much happier — it was like talking to a different person," Penny told me. "Now she's ready for God."

Sara's experience illustrates the need for a two-step conversion such as John the Baptist offers in this week's Gospel of Advent. The first step is repentance — turning away from one's sinfulness.

Then will come the Holy Spirit, bringing a life imbued with Jesus Christ.

The way of Advent is preparation. First we cleanse ourselves of elements that keep God out of our lives. Once emptied, then we are available for the Lord to fill us with his Spirit.

Questions:

What are the sins or bad habits and attachments that currently crowd out Jesus from your life? What must you do to eliminate these elements so your life is open to Christ's coming in?

New Catholic Web site offers resources to connect faith, faily life

Iraqi delegation attend consistory at Vatican

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (CNS) — A new Catholic Web site, www.ActiveParishioner.com, is aiming to bridge the gap between the Catholic faith and everyday life by offering books for sale and other timely resources for free.

The site, which launched Nov. 5, was founded by Ana Kelly, who worked for nearly 10 years at the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Secretariat for Family, Laity, Women and Youth.

"When I worked at the bishops' conference, I received many requests for good Catholic resources," Kelly said in a news release.

"I realized that there was no central location for Catholics to find the many wonderful resources that exist. ActiveParishioner.com fills that need by serving as a one-stop shop for finding excellent Catholic resources," she said.

Books are grouped into relevant topics, such as decision-making, careers, caregiving, parenting, children's books, illness and disability, prayer, forgiveness, grief and mourning, God, miscarriage, interfaith relations and travel.

"The Web site focuses on key questions and challenges that people experience, whether losing a job, becoming a parent, struggling with illness, yearning to somehow connect with God, or wondering how science and God can coexist," Kelly said.

"The Web site then provides the resources to shed light on these issues from a faith perspective," she said.

Visitors to the site also can pray online, access daily Mass readings and meditations, and read the latest Catholic news. The site also contains listings of all U.S. bishops and dioceses, current church statistics, a list of bishops' conferences around the world and a calendar of national Catholic conferences and gatherings.

Kelly, who was born in Cuba but has lived most of her life in the U.S., holds an engineering degree from the University of Notre Dame in Indiana, a master of business administration degree from the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School and a master of divinity degree from the Washington Theological Union.

Catholic comedy legend Tim Conway keeps 'em laughing

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — People know Tim Conway best from his 11 seasons on TV's "The Carol Burnett Show," where he delighted viewers with outlandish sketch comedy and physical humor.

Others remember him from his four-year stint on the sitcom "McHale's Navy." But it wasn't always plums, plaudits and success for the Catholic comedian.

In 1967, a year after "McHale's Navy" went off the air, Conway lasted less than a half-season as TV's "Rango," playing an inept lawman.

"Rango" was probably the only unsuccessful show that Aaron Spelling (producer of such hits as "Charlie's Angels" and "Beverly Hills 90210") ever had," Conway said.

Harvey Korman and Tim Conway are pictured doing sketch comedy in an undated photo. Conway, who is Catholic, is known best for his 11 seasons on TV's "The Carol Burnett Show," where he delighted viewers with outlandish sketch comedy and physical humor.

Then came 1969's "Turn-On," a rapid-fire gag comedy show in the style of "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In."

"That is in the Guinness Book of Records," Conway said. "It was the shortest show ever on television."

While not a member of the cast, Conway, as the show's special guest star, was a bigger name than anyone else on the show the one night it aired.

"We had a premiere party the night it was on. As it was coming on, it was being canceled — including (in) Cleveland, my hometown, I might add. It was very, very economical, because we had an opening-night party and a cancellation party the same night."

Conway added, "I could have actually made a living doing pilots. ... I had five shows at CBS. Some were canceled, and I would start another one the next week."

available on the small screen, thanks to two new DVDs.

"Thou Shalt Laugh 2: The Deuce" features Conway as the emcee for five Christian comics, among them Victoria Jackson, a former cast member of "Saturday Night Live."

"Together Again" stars Conway and his "Carol Burnett" cohort, Harvey Korman, re-creating some of the most popular skits featured on the Burnett show as they toured the country, doing 125 shows a year.

"All those crazy things we did on Burnett, there was no jeopardy, no fear that we were going to do anything offensive. You could be funny for funny's sake," Conway told CNS.

"Everybody — in the Midwest and especially in the Christian belt — they don't watch television anymore" because of violence, language and nudity," he said.

"I'm not a prude and I'm not out to burn DVDs or scripts. It's not the place," Conway said. "We're trying to get back the kind of humor that came from 'The Carol Burnett Show' and Carson and Sid Caesar, Steve Allen, Don Knotts, Louis Nye, Tom Poston — what's more enjoyable than watching that kind of thing at night?"

A member of Our Lady of Grace Church in Encino, Conway said he isn't made to feel uncomfortable by parishioners because of his celebrity status.

"They see me for what I am," he added, quipping, "I like to go into a confessional and stay for an hour and a half, and just let people wonder."

People pray at the Massabielle grotto in Lourdes, France, where Mary appeared to St. Bernadette Soubirous in 1858. The Vatican has confirmed that Pope Benedict XVI will visit Lourdes in 2008 to mark the 150th anniversary of the Marian apparitions. This is a 1999 file photo.

Bishop: People can identify with St. Bernadette at Lourdes

"strong in the head," and Mary chose her, said the bishop.

When the 14-year-old girl was with Mary, she always was confident, Bishop Perrier told Catholic News Service through a translator.

Noting that today people are expected to be successful and make money off of their own experiences, he said St. Bernadette "made a choice to remain poor, and she was always very humble."

St. Bernadette entered religious life in 1862 and remained hidden from the world.

Bishop Perrier was in Washington to discuss the yearlong celebration of the 150th anniversary of the Marian apparitions at Lourdes. The jubilee year opens on the feast of the Immaculate Conception Dec. 8 and will be celebrated with pilgrimages, missions, conferences and a papal visit to Lourdes.

The events will involve places throughout the world associated with the name of Lourdes and St. Bernadette, including several hundred places in the United States.

On Feb. 11, 1858, St. Bernadette, her sister and a friend went looking for wood and bones. As she was taking off her stockings and shoes to get ready to cross a canal, she heard a gust of wind and saw a young woman dressed in white.

That was the first of 18 apparitions.

The message from Mary at Lourdes — conversion and penance — is needed every day, Bishop Perrier told CNS.

He said people can change their behavior, have a conversion of heart and internal reconciliation with the past or with family, and strengthen their relationship with God.

Noting the millions of people who have experienced conversion and cures at Lourdes, he said someone might think, "If all these people experience that before me, maybe I can experience that myself."

For those who cannot travel to Lourdes, Bishop Perrier said people can experience the celebrations by linking to the images and live pictures on the jubilee Web site — www.lourdes2008.com.

He added that a novena, which will be available online in English, will be offered especially for those unable to visit Lourdes. Through the novena, all people around the world can experience the story of Lourdes, said the bishop.

Every year, more than 500,000 Catholics are estimated to visit the sanctuaries at Lourdes.

Officials confirm papal visit to Lourdes to mark Marian apparitions

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Officials confirmed Pope Benedict XVI will visit the Shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes in France to mark the 150th anniversary of the Marian apparitions there, but said the exact time period of the papal visit was not yet known.

Bishop Jacques Perrier of Tarbes and Lourdes, who is in charge of the preparations for the jubilee celebrations, said the papal journey was "a sure thing."

The bishop and others spoke to journalists during a Nov. 13 Vatican press conference, unveiling details of the yearlong jubilee celebrations.

Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, head of the Vatican press office, said the papal trip "most probably" would have Lourdes as its sole destination and for now would not include stops in other cities.

Bishop Perrier said he is often asked if the pope will arrive at Lourdes for one of the "significant moments" for the church, such as Feb. 11, the day the apparitions began and also the feast of Our Lady of Lourdes, or Aug. 15, the feast of the Assumption.

Bishop Perrier said whatever date the pope decides for his visit would be a significant moment for them.

He said Cardinal Ivan Dias, president of the Vatican's Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples, will lead celebrations when the jubilee kicks off in Lourdes Dec. 8, the feast of the Immaculate Conception.

The French bishop added there also "might be a televised link" with the pope as he visits a Marian monument in the center of Rome the same day.

Beginning Feb. 11, 1858, Mary appeared on 18 different occasions in a cave near Lourdes to St. Bernadette Soubirous, a poor 14-year-old girl.

Bishop Perrier said the apparitions still "nourish the church" today. He said Lourdes continues to contribute to the mission of the church and spread the Gospel in the world.

Praying for life

Night of prayer for life to be held in churches around diocese

CHARLOTTE — The 18th annual National Night of Prayer for Life will be held in several churches in the Diocese of Charlotte Dec. 8-9.

The event is a pro-life prayer service consisting of exposition and adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, recitation of the rosary, silent meditation and hymns.

"On this evening, we assemble to ask God's help and forgiveness for sins against our most vulnerable brothers and sisters — the unborn," said Maggi Nadol, director of the diocesan Respect Life Office.

Parishes typically begin the service at 9 p.m. on the feast of the Immaculate Conception, Dec. 8, and continue until 1 a.m. on Dec. 9, when Our Lady of Guadalupe appeared to St. Juan Diego in Mexico.

Our Lady of Guadalupe is patroness of the Americas and the unborn.

"The National Night of Prayer bridges these two feasts to honor Our Blessed Mother and to pray for the sanctity of all human life," said Nadol.

The "hour of unity" is midnight-1 a.m., so all parishes in the four U.S. time zones can be linked in prayer at the same time.

However, due to unique schedules and conditions, some parishes may adjust the schedule of the service.

"For many years, this event has brought believers into the presence of our Eucharist and our Blessed Mother to pray for an end to the tragedy of abortion," said Father Frank Pavone, national director of Priests for Life.

"Such activity on the part of God's people is a fulfillment of our Holy Father's call in 'The Gospel of Life,' as well as the call of our U.S. bishops, to have more fervent, regular prayer on behalf of life," he said.

John Eckert among 20 theologians instituted as readers or altar servers

COLUMBUS, Ohio — John Eckert, a seminarian for the Diocese of Charlotte, has become an acolyte.

Eckert was one of 20 seminarians from 12 dioceses to be instituted into the liturgical ministries of lector (reader) or acolyte (altar server) during an installation Mass in St. Turibius Chapel at the Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 18.

Bishop George V. Murry Youngstown, Ohio, a member of the seminary's board of trustees, celebrated the Mass in the company of visiting priests, families of the candidates and friends and benefactors of the Josephinum.

Once termed minor orders, the positions of lector and acolyte are conferred to first- and second-year theologians prior to their diaconate and priestly ordinations.

"In accepting the call to be instituted as lectors and acolytes, you aspire to participate in an ancient ministry as a means of furthering your preparation for ordination to the priesthood," said Bishop Murry.

"The church is grateful for and blessed by your willingness to serve," he said.

First-year theology students installed as lectors are commissioned to proclaim the word of God in the liturgical assembly and to catechize the faithful.

During the ceremony, the candidates knelt before Bishop Murry, who gave each one a Bible, and said, "Take this book of Holy Scripture, and be faithful in handing on the Word of God so that it may grow strong in the hearts of his people."

The candidates for acolytes, who are second-year theologians, were entrusted with the duties of attending to the altar, assisting the deacon and priest at Mass, and distributing Communion as extraordinary ministers.

They may also expose the Blessed Sacrament for adoration.

The candidates approached the bishop and knelt before him as he held a paten with bread in it and said, "Take this vessel with bread for the celebration of the Eucharist. Make your life worthy of your service at the table of the Lord and of his church."

All the candidates were charged by Bishop Murry to "proclaim God's word clearly and authoritatively. Distribute the holy Eucharist with patience and reverence. Be witnesses to the Gospel in your lives so that in and through your ministry the blind may see, the deaf may hear, and the poor may rejoice in the Good News."

Fighting HIV/AIDS, keeping the promise

CRS reaches millions with hope and healing

On Dec. 1, World AIDS Day is observed by the international community, bringing renewed attention to the needs of the more than 33 million people who suffer from HIV/AIDS.

This year's World AIDS Day theme is "Stop AIDS: Keep the Promise."

The spread of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and the varied diseases that often accompany later-stage HIV infection and signify the onset of acquired immune deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) are complex health issues that require a variety of health, educational and social responses.

The two issues are usually grouped together as HIV/AIDS. It is important, however, to note that one might be infected with HIV and be capable of infecting others with HIV, but not yet suffer from the life-threatening illnesses associated with AIDS.

UNAIDS, the United Nations agency that coordinates the global campaign against AIDS, recently scaled back its estimate of the number of people living with HIV by approximately 6 million. While such a decrease in HIV/AIDS numbers is good news, there remains a crisis for the 33.2 million people with HIV/AIDS, their families and their communities.

Msgr. Robert Vitillo, special adviser on HIV/AIDS for Caritas Internationalis based in Vatican City, sees beyond the numbers in the scope of actions that we must take to treat not just the disease, but "all the factors in our society that continue to fuel the spread of the disease and inhibit our response, such as stigma and discrimination, violence and injustice against women, poverty, isolation, abuse" (as quoted in a Nov. 23 news release from ZENIT).

By offering medical assistance, encouraging prevention, caring for orphaned children and addressing a broad range of economic development concerns, Catholic Relief Services (CRS) — the U.S. bishops' international aid agency — offers a faithful, compassionate and effective response to HIV/AIDS.

With more than 200 HIV/AIDS projects overseas, CRS states it will directly help more than 3.5 million people this year. As U.S. Catholics, we can be especially proud of CRS's response to the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

Up until 2005, CRS's primary HIV/AIDS-related focus was to help individuals with AIDS and their families in their suffering and in preparing for death. While CRS continues to offer compassionate care for those dying from AIDS, today CRS also helps many HIV/AIDS patients to "live positively" with their infection.

Since 2005, CRS has been one of the numerous agencies receiving funds from the U.S. government's $15 billion President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief. CRS has been able to combine these new resources with donations from individuals in the United States to provide thousands of HIV/AIDS-infected persons with life saving antiretroviral (ARV) medicines.

One account of a CRS ARV therapy project in Zambia, which assists 17,500 Zambians infected with HIV/AIDS, discusses the phenomenon known by locals as the "Lazarus Effect" (as reported in the book, "Solidarity will Transform the World"). Many people who were near death from AIDS have recovered to such an extent from ARV therapy that they are working once again, supporting themselves and their families.

Though the "Lazarus Effect" of ARV therapy has indeed been a miracle for many Zambians, limited resources prevent two-thirds of Zambians living with HIV/AIDS from having access to life-saving ARV therapy.

In those areas not reached by ARV treatments, traditional safety nets are threatened and children often leave school early to care for siblings and manage households.

Throughout sub-Saharan Africa, and especially in Southern Africa, the access to ARV treatment is limited and the battle against HIV/AIDS remains an uphill one. Researchers are now aware of unique epidemiological conditions between malaria and HIV that likely affect HIV prevalence rates in Africa.

While such knowledge is valuable, it comes with a greater understanding of just how complex this health crisis is.

Prayer, charitable works and donations are all essential to address the HIV/AIDS pandemic. We also can thank those leaders in the U.S. government who are working hard to address HIV/AIDS and urge all our leaders to "keep the promise" made at numerous international forums to fight this global pandemic.

Visit www.crs.org/actioncenter and sign up to receive CRS legislative alerts. Read more about the HIV/AIDS related programs of CRS at www.crs.org/hiv-aids.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

Throughout the history of the Catholic Church, there have been those men and women who, called by God, took vows of poverty, chastity and obedience upon entering religious communities. Many of us remember them as the teachers, nurses and social workers who ministered to others as the hands of Christ in our world today.

Now nearly 38,000 of these women and men — who lived frugally and accepted little compensation for their ministries — are past the age of 70. Currently there are 5,452 men and women religious in need of skilled nursing care, costing more than $272 million annually. Almost without exception, our elderly and infirm religious offer moving examples of aging with grace, dignity and faith. Most elderly religious even continue volunteer ministry long after they retire from compensated ministry.

The cost of funding retirement benefits for them is the responsibility of each religious institute, rather than the diocese. Since the first national annual appeal took place in Catholic parishes in 1988, more than $529 million has been raised for the Retirement Fund for Religious. Yet, one out of every five religious institutes has less than 20 percent of the amount needed to care for elderly members.

On the weekend of Dec. 8-9, Catholics throughout the Diocese of Charlotte will have an opportunity to "Share in the Care" of our retired religious. The Collection for the Retirement Fund for Religious will be taken at all Masses during that second weekend in December. I encourage you to acknowledge the treasure that our elderly religious represent and respond generously to their retirement needs.

Grateful for your prayers and generosity toward the retired religious throughout the United States, I am

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Very Rev. Mauricio W. West

Conversing with God

Great column by Rico De Silva on "Does God have a cell phone?" (Nov. 2). However, I don't think God would need to put his phone on vibrate to "take a call" from me.

Having a math degree, I've had an introduction to infinite dimension spaces. I believe God is 100 percent with each one of us in the dimension of us as individuals.

In regular space, if God is with me in Charlotte, he can't be with the pope in Rome, but with the infinite dimensions of God, it's easy. That applies to time, as well.

At least that's how I can deal with the polite human idea of not wanting to "hog" God's attention. He has all he needs for me, and infinitely more for everybody else.

I'm with Mr. De Silva on our turning off our phones for a talk with God every day. Or call him on the phone! He'll answer.

Getting into the spirit of Advent

Going from profane to sacred is a few easy steps

Experiencing awe is a main objective of the spiritual exercises of St. Ignatius of Loyola. These exercises prompt us to literally throw ourselves into Scripture when meditating.

Advent encourages us to do this too — to enter more deeply into the life of God and to heighten our spiritual imagination.

Unfortunately, Advent is also a season when marketers attempt to heighten our secular appetites; hence the thunderous clash between the profane and sacred.

The word “profane” means to be outside the temple. Not only does the commercialized Christmas season prompt us to stay away from the temple, it employs every means possible to get us to worship in our shopping malls.

One of the biggest postmodern challenges Christians face is countering this with sacred peace.

May I suggest visiting art museums? Even though they may not be nearby, they are at our fingertips.

I got this idea from my mother years ago when she came to Washington to visit me. I wondered then where I could take her after everything she’d seen on past visits.

She suggested, “Let’s go to the religious art section of the National Gallery of Art. It’s Eastertime. Where better to get into its spirit?”

How right she was!

As we moved from paintings of the Madonna and Christ to those of notable saints, I found myself wondering about their awesomeness.

Later I learned that the awe I was experiencing is one of the main objectives of the spiritual exercises of St. Ignatius.

Ignatius would say, “If, for example, we are meditating on Christ meeting Peter along the shores of the Sea of Galilee (or, for that matter, meditating on a painting that depicts this), smell the sea breezes, listen to the water lapping against the shore, imagine how Christ looked and spoke. Enter into the scene with all your imaginative powers!”

that contains magnificent scenes from Scripture. It allows you to enlarge them and study the artist’s minute details, what he or she is trying to portray (http://mv.vatican.va/3\_EN/pages/MV\_Home.html).

All art galleries have similar Web sites filled with religious art. Just type in a gallery’s name and you’ll be in the midst of sacred art and holy thoughts.

Today we can experience virtual imaging and shop in massive malls filled with remarkable items. We also live in a frenzy-stimulated existence like never before.

We can’t turn the clock back! We can, however, select the best this age offers to enhance our spiritual life.

This Advent we have a magnificent means for entering more deeply into the sacred peace of God. All it takes is one click to transport ourselves from the profane to the sacred.

Western Christians can learn much from Eastern Christians, says pope

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Christianity is not and never has been a uniquely European phenomenon, and Christians of the West can learn much from the cultural expressions of Eastern Christians, especially those of the early church, Pope Benedict XVI said.

“Today it is a common opinion that Christianity is a European religion that exported European culture to other countries, but the reality is much more complicated and complex,” he said Nov. 28 at his weekly general audience.

“It is not only that the roots of the Christian religion are found in Jerusalem, in the Old Testament, in the Semitic world and Christianity is constantly nourished by these Old Testament roots, but the expansion of Christianity in the first centuries” went simultaneously West and East,” he said.

The pope’s main audience talk focused on the life, teaching and poetry of St. Ephraem the Syrian, a fourth-century deacon.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In this week’s catechesis we turn to St. Ephrem, the greatest of the Syriac Fathers and the most renowned poet of the patristic age.

St. Ephrem’s theology, deeply grounded in the Scriptures and profoundly orthodox in content, was expressed in poetic language marked by striking paradoxes and vivid imagery.

Through his mastery of poetic symbolism, Ephrem sought to communicate, especially in his hymns, the mystery of the trinitarian God, the incarnation of the eternal son born of the Virgin Mary, and the spiritual treasures contained in the Eucharist.

His poetry and hymns not only enriched the liturgy; they also proved an important means of catechesis for the Christian community in the fourth century.

Particularly significant is Ephrem’s teaching on our redemption by Christ: his poetic descriptions of the interplay of the divine and human aspects of this great mystery foreshadowed the theology and, to some extent, even the language of the great christological definitions of the councils of the next century.

In his life-long service to the church as a deacon, St. Ephrem was an example of fidelity to the liturgy, meditation on the mystery of Christ and charitable service to his brothers and sisters.

The voice of leadership so absent today

Catholics have responsibility to proclaim Christ’s message

The world’s lone superpower is in desperate need of leadership — of the wise and moral kind!

For far too long the ship of state has been drifting aimlessly in an ocean of despair. Having disembarked without an ethical map and compassionate compass to guide them, most Democrats and Republicans have aimlessly steered the U.S.S. America into dangerous waters.

U.S. “leaders” are sleeping while countless human beings are being tossed into a sea of suffering. The nation is the world’s richest — at least for some. Entertainers, athletes and corporate CEOs are making a bundle while many working-class people are barely able to make ends meet.

For the poor, it’s an uphill climb all the way. Over 36 million men, women and children live in poverty. Out of sight in U.S. inner cities, rural communities and Appalachian hollows, the poor suffer in silence.

Insufficient nutritious food, often little to no health care (over 45 million are uninsured), broken-down schools, underemployment (federal minimum wage is still only $5.15 per hour), high unemployment and dilapidated housing are among the daunting challenges faced by America’s poor.

Furthermore, in the U.S. over 17,000 people are murdered annually.

And approximately 3.5 million people experience homelessness every year.

Many American corporations unscrupulously profit from goods made in foreign sweatshops. The “entertainment” industry spews violence and sex into millions of homes, heating prices are skyrocketing, pollution is contaminating the air and waterways and is contributing significantly to global warming, threatening life on earth as we know it.

In the United States, legal abortion brutally murders over 1.2 million unborn babies annually, while embryonic stem-cell research and cloning threaten to kill even more.

Instead of using its wealth to eradicate global hunger and poverty, the U.S. government will waste hundreds of billions of dollars on military spending this new fiscal year for nuclear weapons, maintaining troops in over 140 nations, massive shipments of armaments to foreign countries and for waging wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

And on top of all this immorality, U.S. “leaders” are planning a new war — this time in Iran.

Throughout the world the United States is scorned. If Americans keep living in denial, refusing to admit that our nation is suffering from an absence of leadership, then we will continue to deserve exactly what we have.

But Christians cannot settle for that. How can followers of Jesus rest comfortably in the midst of such misery?

The Gospel and 100 years of Catholic social teaching point to an infinitely better way. Christ is calling Americans to radically change the course of our nation!

During the U.S. bishops’ November meeting in Baltimore, outgoing president Bishop William Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., said, “As bishops, a deep and Christlike vision of leadership must be at the heart of our service. ... Our time needs to hear the voice of Christ.”

And what is Christ’s message for us today? The same message he gave to his first followers:

Feed the hungry. Give drink to the thirsty. “Love your enemies. Do good to those who hate you. ... Blessed are the peacemakers. ... Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. ... Forgive.”

This is the message the United States and the world needs to hear — again and again — from bishops and all followers of the Prince of Peace.

This is the voice of leadership so absent today.

The face of AIDS

Pope offers prayers for families of millions who died of AIDS in 2007

NUMBER OF NEWLY INFECTED VICTIMS FALLING, SAYS UNAIDS

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI offered his prayers for the families of the estimated 2.1 million people who have died of AIDS this year, and he asked all people to work to end discrimination against those living with AIDS and HIV.

At the end of his Nov. 28 general audience, the pope spoke about the Dec. 1 commemoration of World AIDS Day.

"I am spiritually close to those who suffer because of this terrible disease and their families, especially those who have lost a relative," he said.

"I assure all of them of my prayers," the pope said.

"In addition, I want to exhort all people of good will to multiply their efforts to stop the spread of the HIV virus, to oppose the scorn which often strikes those who are afflicted with it and to take care of the sick, especially when they are still youngsters," he said.

According to figures released

Nov. 20 by UNAIDS, the U.N. agency that coordinates the global campaign against AIDS, "global HIV prevalence — the percentage of people living with HIV — has leveled off" and the number of new infections each year has fallen.

UNAIDS estimated that in 2007 about 33.2 million people were living with HIV, 2.5 million became infected and 2.1 million died of AIDS.

Sub-Saharan Africa remains the region most affected, with an estimated 22.5 million people infected, it said.

"The number of new HIV infections per year is now estimated to have peaked in the late 1990s," UNAIDS said, reflecting "natural trends in the epidemic" as well as greater HIV prevention efforts.

The UNAIDS data estimated that 2.5 million children under the age of 15 were living with HIV/AIDS, including 420,000 children who contracted the virus in 2007.

More than 330,000 children under 15 died of AIDS during this year.

WINSTON-SALEM — Catholics and Lutherans of North Carolina recently took another step forward together.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis joined with Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Raleigh and Bishop Leonard H. Bolick of the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church to reaffirm a covenant of unity, which was first set forth 16 years ago.

The three bishops signed the covenant during a formal ceremony at the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Epiphany in Winston-Salem Dec. 2.

Bishop Jugis had met with both bishops over the past few years to discuss their call to unity and looked forward to the signing.

VATICAN CITY — In an encyclical on Christian hope, Pope Benedict XVI said that, without faith in God, humanity lies at the mercy of ideologies that can lead to "the greatest forms of cruelty and violations of justice."

The pope warned that the modern age has replaced belief in eternal salvation with faith in progress and technology, which offer opportunities for good but also open up "appalling possibilities for evil."

"Let us put it very simply: Man needs God, otherwise he remains without hope," he said in the encyclical, "Spe Salvi" (on Christian hope), released Nov. 30.

CROSSING OVER

Father Piotr Koziel, pastor of St. Gertrude Parish in Kingsville, Texas, leads a Nov. 2 blessing of the graves of unidentified undocumented immigrants who died in south Texas after crossing the U.S.-Mexico border. Members of the Kingsville community cleared brush from Sarita Cemetery, which is off a dirt road on the Kenedy Ranch in south Texas.

South Texas community gives immigrant cemetery a touch of dignity

SARITA, Texas (CNS) — There is little evidence of dignity in the deaths of the undocumented men, women and children found among the south Texas cactus and brush over the past few decades.

Despite the circumstances that prompted them to cross the U.S.-Mexican border and regardless of their legal status in the eyes of the government, Father Piotr Koziel said lending dignity to their final resting place is "the right thing to do."

Seven years ago the priest made his first trip to Sarita Cemetery, located off a dirt road on the Kenedy Ranch. The site, overgrown with grass and weeds, impacted him in such a way that he recruited others to return and remember those who died in the area but were never identified.

Now each year in preparation for the Nov. 2 feast of All Souls' blessing of the graves, a group cleans the site and makes improvements to the area where the dead are all but forgotten.

But many of them live on in the memory of Rafael Cuellar Jr., born and reared in Sarita, and a 34-year law enforcement veteran who retired in 2000.

Just as remembering the dead is part of Father Koziel's job as pastor of St. Gertrude Parish in nearby Kingsville, Cuellar said his job as constable, deputy sheriff and finally sheriff included retrieving the dead from the brush lands of Kenedy County.

"It was awful to see what I have seen," said Cuellar, who estimated that he buried more than 70 people at the cemetery during his tenure.

Last year, the U.S. government recorded the deaths of more than 450 who died while making their way through south Texas. The numbers dropped by about 100 for 2007.

Dehydration, exposure to the extreme heat in the summer and unexpected cold in the winter are among the factors that lead to death.

This year's cleanup of the cemetery involved a group of students from St. Gertrude School who gathered with their pastor and other members of the community to offer their prayers and labor for the dead.

Others participants included students from the Catholic student organization at Texas A&M University in Kingsville.

Parishioners made wooden forms in the shape of crosses and then poured concrete to make sturdy headstones to replace wooden ones. The elementary school students from St. Gertrude put a white coat of paint on each new cross.

On Nov. 2, after Scripture readings and a moment of silent prayer, Father Koziel blessed each grave with holy water. St. Gertrude students placed rosaries and flowers on the headstones.

"I liked blessing the graves and praying for the people so they could go live in peace in heaven," said Josephine Bartolazo, a fourth-grader at St. Gertrude.

Sixth-grader Matthew Hewitt, said, "It felt good to do something for them to help them."

Venezuelan bishops to be wary of Chavez's hunger for power

CARACAS, Venezuela (CNS) — A package of constitutional reforms proposed by Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez that would have increased the president's powers and established a "socialist economy" was defeated narrowly by voters.

Retired Archbishop Ramon Perez Morales of Los Teques said the Dec. 3 vote "opens a new chapter in the nation's history, a chapter which must be characterized by the word 'meeting.' Venezuela must not be the same as before."

It was the first defeat for Chavez at the polls in nearly a decade. Chavez called the opposition victory "pyrrhic" and resolved to move the nation toward socialism using other means.

Archbishop Roberto Luckert Leon of Coro, vice president of the Venezuelan bishops' conference, called on Venezuelans to be careful Chavez does not use other means to expand his powers.

He urged the opposition to unite behind the strongest candidates for governor and municipal offices in upcoming regional elections.

Before the balloting, the Venezuelan bishops' conference issued a statement calling the reforms "unnecessary, morally unacceptable and not a good idea for the country."

The bishops said in their Nov. 26 statement that the reforms would "restrict many civil, social and political human rights enshrined in the constitution, create grounds for political discrimination and introduce new areas of confrontation and polarization among Venezuelans."

Proposals to put the currently autonomous Central Reserve Bank under presidential control and remove the two-term limit for presidents were among the most controversial.

The reforms also would have given the government greater control over the country's petroleum and gas deposits and over agriculture, "if necessary," to ensure food security.

FROM THE VATICAN

L'Osservatore: Papal invite to Muslims opens door to higher dialogue

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — By inviting a varied group of Muslim scholars to meet with him, Pope Benedict XVI has opened the possibility for a higher-level dialogue between Catholic and Muslim leaders, the Vatican newspaper said.

The newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, commented Nov. 30 on a letter to the pope from 138 Muslim scholars and the pope's invitation in response.

The newspaper quoted German Jesuit Father Christian Troll, a scholar of Islam, who said that the 138 scholars represent a wide and diverse portion of the world's Muslim community, and the fact that they were able to write to the pope together is important.

The letter, Father Troll said, is an initiative "which the church can only look favorably upon because it needs a skilled dialogue with the non-Christian world."

L'Osservatore said, "The pope's response opens concrete horizons for this hope."

The pope's invitation included a suggestion that the scholars hold a working meeting with the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue and with experts from Rome's Pontifical Institute for Arabic and Islamic Studies and from the Pontifical Gregorian University.

The former president of the Gregorian institute promoting interreligious dialogue and the study of Islam, Jesuit Father Daniel Madigan, said, "It is very important that there has now been a clear acknowledgment of the approaches made by these Muslim scholars."

While the pope said the purpose of Catholic-Muslim dialogue is to promote "justice and peace in society and throughout the world," said Father Madigan, "the theological aspect of this is essential because our visions of justice, peace and society are all formed by our belief — we cannot avoid talking about it."

Pope says Advent is good time to rediscover hope, read encyclical

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI began Advent by summarizing his latest encyclical on Christian hope and encouraging people to read it.

The time before Christmas is a good period to rediscover the hope that Christ brought to human history, which can "change one's life," the pope said Dec. 2, the first Sunday of Advent.

He said he wrote his second encyclical, "Spe Salvi" (on Christian hope), for the entire church and for all people of good will.

Addressing pilgrims at his noon blessing, the pope said the essence of Christian hope is an awareness of God and "the discovery that he has the heart of a good and merciful father."

Christ's life and death gave God's love a human face, he said.

Emphasizing a point he made in his encyclical, the pope said modern science holds out much that is good, but "cannot redeem humanity."

On Dec. 1, presiding over an evening prayer service in St. Peter's Basilica, the pope said Advent was the time to understand that Christian hope is not "vague and illusory" but is embodied in Jesus Christ.

The days leading up to Christmas can be a time of spiritual reawakening, a reminder that Christ "does not stop knocking at our door," he said.

The pope said he tried to make clear in his encyclical that Christianity brought something new to the pagan societies of old, but he added that it also speaks to the "paganism of our days."

Contemporary paganism, the pope said, is a "nihilism that corrodes hope in the human heart, leading the person to think that nothingness reigns inside and outside of himself: nothing before birth, nothing after death."

The Christian perspective, on the contrary, is that hope makes sense as the human response to a loving God, he said.

"What else moves the world forward, if not the trust that God has in man?" he said.

Arden Knights of Columbus win distinguished Star Council Award

Award recognizes excellence in membership, service-oriented activities

ARDEN — Knights of Columbus Father Joseph Maule Council 8923 at St. Barnabas Church in Arden recently earned the Star Council Award, the supreme council's highest honor, for the 2006-07 fraternal year.

David Jones, the Knights' N.C. state council secretary, presented the award to George Moody, head of Council 8923, during a special ceremony Nov. 13.

The award recognizes overall excellence in the areas of membership recruitment and retention, promotion of the fraternal insurance program, and sponsorship of service-oriented activities.

"Receiving the Star Council Award is quite an honor for us. We are extremely proud of this accomplishment," said Moody.

Supreme Knight Carl A. Anderson issued a statement to Council 8923.

"Your dedication to the order is seen in the high standard of excellence you have achieved. At the same time, I encourage you to carry forward this enthusiasm to meet the challenges that will face the Knights of Columbus in the years ahead," said Anderson.

"May this award be a reminder and an inspiration to the members of your council to continue to promote the ideals of Columbianism for the good of the church, your community and the order," he said.

The Knights of Columbus is a Catholic fraternal organization founded in the United States in 1882. It provides members and their families with volunteer opportunities in service to the church and their communities.

Father Fidel Melo, pastor of Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro, is pictured with members of the parish's Divine Mercy Cenacle Nov. 20. Fifteen members of the group made their formal commitments to live as Eucharistic Apostles of Divine Mercy (EADM). Father Melo presided at the induction ceremony.

EADM is a lay outreach ministry of the Marians of Immaculate Conception province based in Stockbridge, Mass. The Eucharistic Apostles strive to spread and live the Divine Mercy message as given to St. Maria Faustina Kowalska, a Polish nun who in the 1930s received a vision of Christ as the Divine Mercy.

In the vision, Christ told her that he would show mercy to those who prayed for it and who share that mercy with others. Catholics celebrate Divine Mercy Sunday a week after Easter.

Catholic, Lutheran bishops reaffirm covenant

"I have been bishop for four years now and have been waiting for this day since my ordination," he said.

The covenant was created to bond Catholics and Lutherans in North Carolina in the spirit of ecumenism and cooperation. Then-Bishop John F. Donoghue of Charlotte, then-Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh and then-Lutheran Bishop Michael McDaniel first signed the covenant on Pentecost Sunday, 1991.

At the time, the covenant was the third agreement of its kind in the United States between church officials on the diocesan/synodical level.

The covenant's foundation rests on the shared Gospel beliefs that the Lord desires unity for his followers; that "we all may be one," as stated in the document.

It outlined 16 objectives designed to encourage closer dialogue, cooperative ecumenical efforts and ministries between Lutherans and Catholics at the local and diocesan/synodical levels.

These objectives include praying for each other; praying together in joint services; observing together such occasions as the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity (Jan. 18-25), which will celebrate its 100th anniversary in 2008; the World Day of Prayer; and Lenten devotions.

Other items encourage learning more about each other for better understanding and cooperation and the establishment of the ecumenical committee.

A reading of the two-page covenant document was part of the Dec. 2 ceremony. It states six points of affirmation, and begins "that inasmuch as all unity comes from the unity of the Triune God Father, Son, and Holy Spirit" and continues "we are called to make that given unity more visible among us."

Approximately 50 people attended the affirmation ceremony.

"We are honored to host this gathering," said Rev. Stephen Gerhard, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Epiphany.

"This is a remarkable statement in the unity of the church and an expression that would please our Lord," he said.

The ceremony included songs of welcome, thanksgiving and praise, psalms, Gospel readings and a homily by Father George Kloster, a member of the covenant committee since its inception.

Father Kloster is pastor of St. William Catholic Church in Murphy and Immaculate Heart of Mary Mission in Hayesville.

"Authentic ecumenism is very, very demanding," said Father Kloster during the ceremony.

Spirit of ecumenism

Before the covenant, the two Catholic bishops and the Lutheran bishop in North Carolina shared a personal relationship, according to Father Kloster. They would meet twice a year for prayer, he said.

In the spirit of ecumenism and an awareness of numerous theological works published in the 1970s by Catholic and Lutheran officials, the idea of a covenant came into being. Bishop McDaniel was the document's main drafter, with input from Bishops Donoghue and Gossman.

The covenant was ready a year prior to its signing. But the bishops wanted to circulate it around the state to increase awareness so the signing itself would include more involvement.

"We wanted to get as much input into the wording and we wanted others to be aware of the covenant ... and to let it begin with the parishes in preparation of the actual signing," said Bishop Donoghue in a 1991 interview.

The "original vision of the covenant is still to be fulfilled," said Father Kloster. "I'm not so sure what unity will look like," he said, but we must continue to be motivated and "never give up."

"Ecumenism is the task of the church in the sense that Jesus prayed that we all might be one," said Rev. Jim Lockley, pastor of Alamance Lutheran Church in Alamance and a member of the covenant committee for the past 12 years.

"Unfortunately ecumenism moves with glacial speed, but that is very characteristic of the church," he said.

Then-Bishop F. Joseph Gossman of Raleigh, Lutheran Bishop Leonard H. Bolick and then-Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte are pictured after the re-signing of the Catholic and Lutheran covenant on its 10th anniversary at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro in 2001.

Accomplishments that have been made toward unity within the state include meetings between Catholic and Lutheran social services, media personnel and youth directors. Several joint youth conferences have been of particular success, according to Father Kloster.

The covenant also gave rise to the Luther-Aquinas Conference at Lenoir Rhyne College in Hickory, which just held its 16th installment this year, according to Rev. C. Pierson Shaw, Jr., the Lutheran synod's ecumenical representative who took part in the affirmation ceremony.

The covenant's greatest accomplishment, said Rev. Shaw, has been the establishment of local covenants throughout the state.

In Hickory, for example, a covenant has been drawn between St. Aloysius Catholic Church and Holy Trinity, St. Andrews and Mount Olive Lutheran churches. Other areas with local covenants include Newton, Greenville and Winston-Salem.

The state covenant was reaffirmed on its 10-year anniversary in 2001 by the three bishops at that time — Bishop William G. Curlin of Charlotte, Bishop Gossman and Bishop Bolick.

Rev. Shaw said it was important to acknowledge that members of both religions have studied together and discussed important works on ecumenism, including the Joint Declaration on the Document of Justification, an international statement formulated by some of the churches' highest leaders; and "A Handbook of Spiritual Ecumenism" by Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

Cardinal Kasper was one of the signers of the Joint Declaration in Augsburg, Germany in 1999 after several decades of Catholic-Lutheran dialogue.

The Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity has its origins in a decree from the Second Vatican Council in the 1960s under Pope John XXIII that set into motion a shift toward ecumenism in the Catholic Church.

This opened the door to new insights into the study of justification and former differences in theology between the Catholic and Lutheran churches.

One of the key issues that led to the Protestant Reformation in the 16th century was a differing interpretation and application of the biblical message of justification, particularly the relation between faith and acts of good work.

Doctrinal condemnations were imprinted in the Council of Trent and in the Lutheran Confessionals. Since the Second Vatican Council, relations have improved.

Hope for success

During the Dec. 2 affirmation ceremony, the bishops expressed enthusiasm about fulfilling the covenant.

"Jesus Christ is the cornerstone, the foundation and the one who holds us up and sustains us forever," said Bishop Burbidge. "That is the heart of the covenant ... to build up the body of Christ."

"We're going to share the two most important opportunities on earth, talking and listening to God," said Bishop Bolick.

"We have more work to do ... and will continue ongoing dialogue and theological discussions," said Bishop Jugis.

It "gives us hope that such progress toward full unity is possible," he said.

Mercy Sister Mary Eugenia Hartman, 1924-2007

Sister remembered for work with disabled children

BELMONT — Mercy Sister Mary Eugenia Hartman died Dec. 3 in Marian Center at Sacred Heart Convent in Belmont. She was 83.

She was received as a Sister of Mercy on Feb. 2, 1942 and was in her 65th year as a Sister of Mercy.

A Mass of Christian burial was held Dec. 7, with burial following at Belmont Abbey Cemetery.

Sister Hartman was born Regina Hartman Feb. 19, 1924 in Philadelphia, Pa. She took the name Sister Mary Eugenia upon entering the Sisters of Mercy Aug. 1, 1941.

Sister Hartman studied at Sacred Heart College in Belmont; Mount Mercy College in Pittsburgh; and graduated from Belmont Abbey College in 1965 with a bachelor's degree in social studies.

Her postgraduate studies were done at University of North Carolina at Charlotte; University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill; and two programs sponsored by the U. S. State Department that included study at the Drug Center in Charlotte and at Sacred Heart College.

In 1981 she completed work on her master's degree in school administration at Appalachian State University in Boone.

An adept educator, Sister Hartman taught at Holy Redeemer School in Newton Grove; St. Mary's School in Wilmington; Sacred Heart School in Salisbury; St. Gabriel School and Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte; St. Eugene School in Asheville and St. Michael School in Gastonia.

She taught and served as principal at St. Benedict's School in Belmont and served as a dorm counselor at St. Leo's Boarding School for Boys in Belmont.

She also taught at St. Agnes Elementary School in Greenport, N.Y., and at Sacred Heart College for three years where she served as a psychometrist tutor and as an educational consultant to the International Special Education Conference.

She was an active member of the National Catholic Educational Association, the National Educators Association and the Orton Society, and served as an associate member of the principals' association in the Diocese of Charlotte.

In 1978, she became principal of the lower school of Dore Academy in Charlotte, a position she held for 10 years. After her resignation in 1988, she served as a reading specialist for the school until 1994.

From 1983 until 1994, Sister Hartman served on the board of directors and trustees for Dore Academy. A retirement party was held for Sister Hartman in celebration of her exceptional talents serving the needs of bright children with specific learning disabilities.

An article in The Catholic News & Herald at the time of her retirement named her as "one of the Charlotte area's foremost leaders in reading education" for learning disabled children.

In her 19 years as an educator, specifically for the learning disabled, she taught more than 1,000 children with learning disabilities to read.

Additionally, Sister Hartman served as head of the science and math departments at two schools; headed the Glee Club; was a moderator for the Civics Club; and taught private piano lessons, religion and Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (CCD) classes. She also volunteered as a Sister Visitor to local hospitals.

Somewhere between her professional advancement, extracurricular activities, studies, lectures, development of workshops and her teaching, she found time to author a book, "A Course in Remedial Phonics, Writing, and Spelling," which was published as five booklets based on the Gillingham-Stillman method of teaching exceptional and learning disabled children.

Sister Hartman was the daughter of the late Harry Hartman and Frances Bové Hartman. She is survived by her regional community; by two sisters, Margaret Reilly of Greensboro, and Emma Lanni of Longwood, Fla.; a brother-in-law, John Costello of Chapel Hill; nieces, nephews, great nieces, great nephews and a cousin, Augustinian Father Joseph Hartman.

Applications invited for local CCHD grants

organized groups within the western 46-counties of North Carolina that work to combat poverty in their communities.

Established in 1970 as the U.S. bishops' domestic anti-poverty program, the CCHD is one of the largest private funders of self-help programs initiated and led by poor people in the United States.

Since its founding, the CCHD has awarded more than $300 million to 7,800 projects.

This year the CCHD is awarding more than $9.5 million in grants to support local projects working to eliminate the root causes of poverty. Grants will be distributed to 314 projects in 46 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

Within the Diocese of Charlotte this year, $46,827 was awarded in local grants to 22 agencies, bringing the local diocesan total since 1977 to $536,523 awarded to 378 organizations across the 46 counties.

"Overcoming widespread poverty in the richest nation on earth is a moral imperative," said John Carr, CCHD interim executive director, noting that according to the U.S. Census Bureau report released in August, 36.5 million Americans live at or below the poverty line.

"The Catholic Campaign for Human Development invests in bottom-up, community empowerment strategies across the United States," Carr added in a Oct. 26 statement.

Funding for the grants CCHD distributes annually comes from a nationwide church collection that takes place in dioceses each year, usually the weekend before Thanksgiving.

One-quarter of the local collection stays in the diocese and the rest is distributed nationally by the CCHD office in Washington.

Funded projects undergo a thorough review process and are selected based on need, without regard to religious affiliation.

In soliciting local grant applications, the Diocese of Charlotte CCHD advisory committee looks for programs and projects that seek to affect the root causes of poverty in the target community and involve participation of the people served in both the planning and decision-making of the sponsoring organization.

The programs and projects should indicate potential for institutional change by empowering the people and community involved and should promote the development of local leadership.

All proposals should conform to Catholic social teaching and must be postmarked by February 15, 2008.

International conference examines impact of abortion on men

BY DAN MORRIS-YOUNG
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SAN FRANCISCO — While the impact of abortion on men is low on the cultural radar, there is overwhelming research, clinical experience and anecdotal evidence that men can be profoundly traumatized by the elective loss of a child whether they encouraged it, resisted it or learned of it only after the fact.

This was the view of speakers at the first international conference on men and abortion held in San Francisco Nov. 28-29.

Nearly 200 people from at least seven nations and 28 states gathered at St. Mary's Cathedral to hear the personal stories of men affected by abortion, reports on research on the topic, and presentations by counselors and therapists on the treatment of men suffering post-abortion grief.

Organized by the Milwaukee-based National Office of Post-Abortion Reconciliation and Healing, the "Reclaiming Fatherhood: A Multifaceted Examination of Men Dealing With Abortion" conference was co-sponsored by the Archdiocese of San Francisco and the national office of the Knights of Columbus.

Victoria Thorn, executive director of the post-abortion group, opened the event with a brief overview of how men, like women, experience hormonal and other changes during a partner's pregnancy, something that is little recognized.

"Men's bodies are busy with their own changes" during a mate's pregnancy, she said, "although the physiology of men during pregnancy is not yet taken seriously."

Stories of suffering

The speakers included men who shared personal stories of how abortion had unexpectedly pulled the carpet out from under their lives.

Chris Aubert, 50, an attorney, traced his life from days as a "very secular young guy" focused on "making money and in general becoming a yuppie" to his shocking realization during a 1994 ultrasound procedure for his pregnant wife "that that is a baby" in her womb.

It flooded over him, he said, that on two occasions prior to his marriage he had agreed with pregnant girlfriends to terminate their pregnancies.

"I realized that I had killed two of my own kids," he said. "It was almost like the hand of God reached down and touched me."

He recalled how after the first abortion in 1985 he had left a rose and a $200 check for his then-girlfriend.

"But I felt no sorrow, no pain, no nothing," he said. "I had happily agreed to the abortion."

Similarly, he described a second abortion in 1991 with a different woman.

"I went to the clinic with her and sat in the waiting room reading a magazine for 20 or 30 minutes, then we went to lunch," he said.

It did not occur to him, Aubert said, "that in the next room my child was being dismembered and killed."

"Something in the depth of my belly," he said, "kept rising higher and higher" as the realization of the loss of two children sank in. By then a convert to Catholicism, Aubert said he told his wife, "There is something I have to tell you," and he revealed the past abortions.

He has since "jumped (with) both feet into the pro-life world."

He has established a Web site on his experiences and abortion, www.chrisaubert.com. (The site carries a warning to visitors that it includes links to graphic photos of abortions.)

He also has spoken "to groups of 50 to 1,000" about his convictions.

Mark Bradley Morrow, a licensed Christian counselor and Milwaukee radio personality, told participants that as a young man he had "within the space of 20 months conceived four children in my apartment and allowed my four babies to be aborted in four different states."

For 15 years, he said, he "did not feel a lot of pain or guilt," but then experienced "a meltdown one night when I thought of what I had done in the past."

His symptoms included "shame, anger, anxiety attacks and nightmares."

Worrying what people would think of him, he reluctantly shared his history with his wife, family and others who, he said, have been "kind, loving and supportive."

"Not all men are negatively impacted by abortion," Morrow said, "but many are, and they need your love, encouragement and compassion."

After effects

Psychotherapist Vincent Rue and post-abortion therapist Catherine Coyle provided an overview of research on the effects of abortion on men.

Author of "Men and Abortion: A Path to Healing," Coyle underscored that research on how abortion affects men is in its infancy.

Nevertheless, she said, "qualitative studies" make it clear there can be significant consequences.

She, Rue and other conference speakers all reported that many men experience depression and guilt as well as grief, anxiety, powerlessness, anger, emotional turmoil, sexual dysfunction and other symptoms often associated with post-traumatic stress disorder.

Director of an independent research and treatment center, the Institute for Pregnancy Loss in Jacksonville, Fla., Rue has established a Web site that gathers information on people's experiences with abortion, www.abortionresearch.net.

One aspect of abortion in the United States mentioned frequently during the conference is that "men have no reproductive rights whatsoever," even if they are married to women considering an abortion, in the words of Rue.

Rue charged that most media as well as the preponderance of mental health organizations and professionals continue to promote abortion despite "the mental-health risks," such as "thoughts of suicide in post-abortion women being six times higher" than in the general population.

"There is zero awareness" of a connection between male suicide and abortion, he said. "It is not even a category."

The experts said substance abuse and risk-taking behaviors appear to be common among men associated with an abortion.

People need God to have hope, pope says in new encyclical

The 76-page text explores the essential connection between faith and hope in early Christianity and addresses what it called a "crisis of Christian hope" in modern times.

It critiques philosophical rationalism and Marxism and offers brief but powerful profiles of Christian saints — ancient and modern — who embodied hope, even in the face of suffering.

The encyclical also includes a criticism of contemporary Christianity, saying it largely limits its attention to individual salvation instead of the wider world, and thus reduces the "horizon of its hope."

"As Christians we should never limit ourselves to asking: How can I save myself? We should also ask: What can I do in order that others may be saved?" it says.

It is the pope's second encyclical and follows his 2006 meditation on Christian love. He worked on the text over the summer during his stay in the Italian mountains and at his villa outside Rome.

Science vs. salvation

The pope says the essential aspect of Christian hope is trust in eternal salvation brought by Christ.

In contrast with followers of mythology and pagan gods, early Christians had a future and could trust that their lives would not end in emptiness, he says.

Yet today the idea of "eternal life" frightens many people and strikes them as a monotonous or even unbearable existence, the pope states.

It is important, he says, to understand that eternity is "not an unending succession of days in the calendar, but something more like the supreme moment of satisfaction."

"It would be like plunging into the ocean of infinite love, a moment in which time — the before and after — no longer exists," he says.

This is how to understand the object of Christian hope, he says.

The encyclical's main section examines how the emphasis on reason and freedom — embodied in the French revolution and the rise of communism — sought to displace Christian hope.

Redemption was seen as possible through science and political programs, and religious faith was dismissed as irrelevant and relegated to a private sphere.

While praising Karl Marx for his great analytical skill, the pope said Marx made a fundamental error in forgetting that human freedom always includes "freedom for evil," which is not neutralized by social structures.

Pope Benedict XVI signs his encyclical, "Spe Salvi" (on Christian hope), at the Vatican Nov. 30. Archbishop Fernando Filoni, Vatican assistant secretary of state, is at right.

In the same way, the pope says, those who believe man can be "redeemed" through science and technological advances are mistaken.

"Science can contribute greatly to making the world and mankind more human. Yet it can also destroy mankind and the world unless it is steered by forces that lie outside it," he says.

While Christians have a responsibility to work for justice, the hope of building a perfect world here and now is illusory, the pope says. Hopes for this world cannot by themselves sustain one's faith.

without hope.”

“We need the greater and lesser hopes that keep us going day by day. But these are not enough without the great hope, which must surpass everything else. This great hope can only be God,” he says.

Prayer's purification

The second half of the encyclical discusses how Christian hope can be learned and practiced — particularly through prayer, acceptance of suffering and anticipation of divine judgment.

The pope calls prayer a “school of hope,” and as an example he holds out the late Vietnamese Cardinal Francois Nguyen Van Thuan, who spent 13 years in prison, nine of them in solitary confinement.

In this “situation of seemingly utter hopelessness,” the fact that he could still listen and speak to God gave him an increasing power of hope, the pope said.

He emphasized that prayer should not be isolating and should not focus on superficial objectives. Nor can people pray against others, he said.

“To pray is not to step outside history and withdraw to our own private corner of happiness,” he said.

“When we pray properly we undergo a process of inner purification which opens us up to God and thus to our fellow human beings as well,” he said.

Suffering is part of human existence, and the sufferings of the innocent appear to be increasing today, the pope says.

The story of St. Josephine Bakhita, a 19th-century African slave, figures prominently in “Spe Salvi” (on Christian hope), the second encyclical of Pope Benedict XVI. He says she found the “great hope” that liberated and redeemed her.

He says Christians should do whatever they can to reduce pain and distress.

Yet suffering cannot be banished from this world, and trying to avoid anything that might involve hurt can lead to a life of emptiness, he says.

Instead, Christians are called to suffer with and for others, and their capacity to do so depends on their strength of inner hope, he says.

“The saints were able to make the great journey of human existence in the way that Christ had done before them, because they were brimming with great hope,” he states.

The pope recalled that in the not-too-distant past, many Christians would “offer up” to Christ their minor daily disappointments and hardships. Perhaps that practice should be revived, he says.

Judgment and grace

The pope says the idea of judgment — specifically the Last Judgment of the living and the dead — touches strongly on Christian hope because it promises justice.

“I am convinced that the question of justice constitutes the essential argument, or in any case the strongest argument, in favor of faith in eternal life,” he says.

It is impossible for the Christian to believe that the injustices of history will be the final word, he says.

The Last Judgment should not evoke terror, however, but a sense of responsibility, the pope says.

It is a moment of hope, because it combines God’s justice and God’s grace — but “grace does not cancel out justice,” he says.

“(Grace) is not a sponge which wipes everything away, so that whatever someone has done on earth ends up being of equal value,” he says. “Evildoers, in the end, do not sit at table at the eternal banquet beside their victims without distinction, as though nothing had happened.”

The pope says the idea of purgatory, as a place of atonement for sins, also has a place in the logic of Christian hope.

Heaven is for the “utterly pure” and hell for those who have destroyed all desire for truth and love, but “neither case is normal in human life,” he says.

Thus, the souls of many departed may benefit from prayers, he says.

The pope begins and ends his encyclical with profiles of two women who exemplified Christian hope. The closing pages praise Mary for never losing hope, even in the darkness of Jesus’ crucifixion.

The encyclical opens by describing a similar sense of hope in a 19th-century African slave, St. Josephine Bakhita, who after being flogged, sold and resold, came to discover Christ.

With her conversion, St. Bakhita found the “great hope” that liberated and redeemed her, the pope says.

The pope emphasized that this was different from political liberation as a slave.

Christianity “did not bring a message of social revolution,” he says, but something totally different: an encounter with “a hope stronger than the sufferings of slavery, a hope which therefore transformed life and the world from within.”

‘Spe Salvi’ at a glance

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Here at a glance are the main points of Pope Benedict XVI’s encyclical, “Spe Salvi” (on Christian hope), released Nov. 30:

— Jesus Christ brought humanity the gift of a “trustworthy hope” in salvation and eternal life, a hope that is directly connected with faith.

— In the contemporary world, however, religious faith has been replaced with faith in progress and technology, provoking a “crisis of Christian hope.”

— Ideologies like Marxism tried to do without religion and create a perfect society through political structures. Instead, this led to the “greatest forms of cruelty,” proving that “a world which has to create its own justice is a world without hope.”

— Some have placed their hope in the mistaken belief that man could be redeemed through science — but science can destroy the world unless it is guided by religious values.

— Experience shows that anyone who does not know God “is ultimately without hope,” the great hope that sustains life.

— Christianity cannot limit its attention to the individual and his salvation; Christianity’s transforming role includes the wider society.

— Prayer is an effective “school of hope,” as demonstrated by the saints through the centuries. Prayer should not isolate Christians, but make them more responsive to others.

— Suffering cannot be eliminated in this world but can be transformed by Christian hope. The measure of humanity, for individuals and society, lies in compassion for the suffering.

— The prospect of divine judgment also offers hope, because it promises God’s grace and justice.

Authors present old treasures, new insights about Christmas

REVIEWED BY PEGGY WEBER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Christmas thoughts from Truman Capote and St. Augustine might seem like a strange combination.

However "A Family Christmas," selected and introduced by Caroline Kennedy, uses these writers and many others to create an eclectic but compelling treasury of reflections and ideas about Christmas.

Kennedy begins her book with an endearing letter she wrote to Santa Claus in 1962. This is followed by a well-informed introduction that includes information on the history of Christmas. And she explains, rather poignantly, why this collection can be a treasure for families.

"The liturgy and literature teach us that Christmas encompasses the miraculous and the tragic, the profound and the ridiculous, and always represents the connection to something larger than ourselves.

"If we are open to the gifts of understanding, hope and faith in others and in God, the spirit of Christmas can help make real the way we want to live our lives."

The book truly is a smorgasbord of Christmas writings. It includes song lyrics, poetry, essays and even a Supreme Court decision regarding the display of a Christmas creche in Pawtucket, R.I.

This hardcover collection also includes a ribbon bookmark so that readers can mark their place or note a favorite spot.

Various themes are marked as "sort of" chapters. One is dedicated to Santa while another focuses on manger scenes.

A lovely chapter is called "Christmas in Wartime" and seems appropriate for this holiday season.

Throughout the book it is obvious that Kennedy loves Christmas and the written word. She has selected many great works to acknowledge a great feast.

"Christmas: A Candid History" by Bruce David Forbes is a very readable and enjoyable book that chronicles the history of Christmas.

The author "tells the story of Christmas — from its pre-Christian roots, through the birth of Jesus, to the holiday's spread across Europe into the Americas and beyond."

It is a scholarly work that includes 25 pages of notes and an annotated bibliography. Yet the author has a style that makes learning about this holiday interesting and even a little fun.

He also offers some profound thoughts about religious celebrations and their meanings. For example, when discussing Christmas in relationship to light, he offers a great reflection.

He writes, "In a way, the approach of winter is a little like walking into death, hoping we will emerge on the other side."

His study of the Christmas narratives in the Gospels of Luke and Mark also offers a lot of food for thought. And the book is chock-full of historical information about Christmas.

Many of these facts should make the reader look at the holiday with new eyes. If one thinks of an old-fashioned New England Christmas, one also should be reminded that Christmas was outlawed in the colonies for many years.

Forbes' book also makes one take a serious look at how Christmas is celebrated today and how much of that is affected by marketing strategies and advertising.

This book has a great, almost comical cover. However, within the pages is a serious study on how and why people celebrate on Dec. 25.

Good things come to those who wait, endure

BY JEFF HENSLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My friend Michael and his family endured a long, trying period of transition several years ago that parallels the admonition in this week's readings to wait patiently as the Lord accomplishes his purposes.

Michael had taken a job teaching at the University of Oklahoma's College of Law. But during his four years in that job, he commuted between Norman and Austin, Tex., where his wife and four children remained until they could finalize the family move.

Most weekends, he'd make the 400-mile trek home, only to reverse his path on Sunday for a long, lonely ride back to Oklahoma. It was a hard time for Michael, his wife Mara and their children.

In James 5, the writer tells the Christian community to be patient until the coming of the Lord:

"See how the farmer waits the precious fruit of the earth, being patient with it until it receives the early and late rains. You too must be patient. Make your hearts firm."

The psalm points to the hope we have because it is hope in the Lord, "who made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is in them; who keeps faith forever, secures justice for the oppressed."

These really are Advent readings, aren't they? They are all about waiting, but waiting with hope and confidence in the One who holds the future, in the One who is coming.

Also, Jesus points to the somewhat amazing nature of God's promises to those who come into the kingdom which he is initiating when he says in Matthew 11:

"I say to you, among those born of women there has been none greater than John the Baptist; yet the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he."

Michael's family trial didn't last forever. There was a fruition.

They found Norman to be a great place to raise their four quite talented children. They became deeply involved in the faith communities there.

Michael's teaching evolved into a tenured chair at the OU College of Law, with the budget to do things like hold a national conference on Catholic perspectives on American Law at The Catholic University of America in Washington. Mara's writing continued to prosper, and they co-wrote a book on Catholic pilgrimages.

Advent is a time of waiting, even sometimes of enduring, but Christmas comes. The birth of the Lord comes in this season of December, and it comes in our lives. Wait for it with hope.

Questions:

Are you in a time of waiting, of hoping for the Lord's coming into trying circumstances? Are there steps you can take for yourself, or, realistically, is prayer (and patience) all you can do at this point?

Tailgating nuns

Former Denver Bronco football player Claudie Minor greets Sister Marie deLourdes Falk during the fifth annual tailgate party with nuns at Exempla St. Joseph Hospital in Denver Dec. 2.

More than 20 former Broncos were in attendance to help the Sisters of Charity cheer on their Broncos, who lost to Oakland 34-20.

The nuns, who live at the hospital, were selected by the Denver football team to be featured in a series of commercials promoting the NFL team. They will be shown on television and broadcast at games.

'Golden Compass' shows both good and bad

Entertaining film hints at both anti- and pro-Catholic teaching

BY HARRY FORBES
AND JOHN MULDERIG
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Hollywood history is rife with examples of literary works that by dint of problematic sexual, violent or religious content have been softened to varying degrees to mollify public sensibilities.

So it appears to be with "The Golden Compass" (New Line) which, we'll say right at the start, is a lavish, well-acted and fast-paced adaptation of the first volume of Philip Pullman's much-awarded trilogy, "His Dark Materials."

The film has already caused some concern in Catholic circles because of the author's professed atheism, and the more overt issue of the novels' negative portrayal of his (very much fictionalized) church, a stand-in for all organized religion.

The good news is that the first book's explicit references to this church have been completely excised with only the term Magisterium retained.

The choice is still a bit unfortunate as the word refers so specifically to the church's teaching authority. Yet the film's only clue that the Magisterium is a religious body comes in the form of the icons which decorate one of their headquarters. Most moviegoers with no foreknowledge of the books or Pullman's personal belief system will scarcely be aware of religious connotations, and can approach the movie as a pure fantasy-adventure.

This is not the blatant real-world anti-Catholicism of, say, the recent "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" or "The Da Vinci Code." Religious elements, as such, are practically nil.

The narrative itself charts the adventures of spunky 12-year-old Lyra (Dakota Blue Richards), an orphan who leaves Oxford's Jordan College to become apprentice to a glamorous scholar, Mrs. Coulter (Nicole Kidman).

She's allowed to leave equipped with the titular compass — a truth meter that Lyra is among the privileged few to know how to interpret. Once in Mrs. Coulter's care, Lyra begins to surmise that the woman's motives are far from pure, and she escapes.

Inspired by her Arctic-exploring-uncle Lord Asriel (Daniel Craig) who, to the consternation of the Magisterium, is about to make some discoveries about the mysterious substance called Dust — Lyra journeys northward. She hopes to rescue her young friend Roger, who has been kidnapped by the Magisterium.

Lyra picks up several allies along the way, including a great polar bear named Iorek Byrnison (voice of Ian McKellen).

Even if Pullman's fanciful universe has a patchwork feel, with elements culled from other fantasy-adventure stories — most especially "The Chronicles of Narnia" (a work Pullman disdains) — there's hardly a dull moment, and the effects are beautifully realized, including the anthropomorphized creatures like the polar bears whose climactic fight is superbly done.

Richards makes an appealingly no-nonsense heroine, and Kidman makes a glamorous and chilling villain. Christopher Lee, Tom Courtenay and Derek Jacobi round out a distinguished cast, with excellent voice work from McKellen and others (e.g. Kathy Bates and Kristin Scott Thomas).

Whatever author Pullman's putative motives in writing the story, writer-director Chris Weitz's film, taken purely on its own cinematic terms, can be viewed as an exciting adventure story with, at its core, a traditional struggle between good and evil, and a generalized rejection of authoritarianism.

To the extent, moreover, that Lyra and her allies are taking a stand on behalf of free will in opposition to the coercive force of a dictatorship, they are of course acting entirely in harmony with Catholic teaching.

The heroism and self-sacrifice that they demonstrate provide appropriate moral lessons for viewers.

There is, admittedly, a spirit of rebellion and stark individualism pervading the story. Lyra is continually drawn to characters who reject authority in favor of doing as they please.

Equally, only by defying the powers that be, can a scientist like Lord Asriel achieve progress. Pullman is perhaps drawing parallels to the Catholic Church's restrictive stance towards the early alchemists and, later, Galileo.

The script also makes use of some of the occult concepts found in the books, such as the diabolically named "daemons" — animal companions to each person, identified as their human counterpart's visible soul.

Is Pullman trying to undermine anyone's belief in God? Leaving the books aside, the movie's script can reasonably be interpreted in the broadest sense as an appeal against the abuse of political power.

Will seeing this film inspire teens to read the books, which many have found problematic? Rather than banning the movie or books, parents might instead take the opportunity to talk through any thorny philosophical issues with their teens.

The religious themes of the later books may be more prominent in the follow-up films which Weitz has vowed will be less watered down. For now, this film — altered, as it is, from its source material — rates as intelligent and well-crafted entertainment.

The film contains intense but bloodless fantasy violence, anti-clerical subtext, standard genre occult elements, a character born out of wedlock and a whiskey-guzzling bear. The USCCB Office of Film & Broadcasting classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

A city garbage truck drives into the dump as men run and jump on, riding along until it stops. They want to be the first to use their makeshift picks and bare hands to sift through the fresh load of refuse.

Seventeen-year-old Edwind has been coming to La Chureca every day for three years. He works at the dump 6 a.m.-5 p.m., earning $3 per day.

Nearly one-half of Nicaragua's population of 5.5 million lives on less than $1 per day. It is one of the poorest countries in the Americas.

Yet, in the midst of the poverty, religious groups and international aid agencies offer hope.

When Msgr. Louis Pena first started his ministry at the dump 11 years ago, he saw hundreds of children picking through the garbage. He decided to take a multi-faceted approach — providing health care, feeding programs and education.

Through his efforts, he has helped many children get out of the dump. For the past six years the John Cordisco Education and Feeding Center has provided 350 children a day with education programs and nutritious lunches.

Now when he visits the dump he sees only a few dozen children. He speaks with pride about one of the first children helped by the center who graduated from high school last year.

At San Jose Protector orphanage outside Managua, the Colombia-based Sisters of the Annunciation provide food, housing, clothing, education and medical services to girls ages 1-15. Currently about 35 girls come from situations of abuse, poverty and abandonment.

"The nuns exemplify the Scriptures. They have incredible zeal; you can tell that Christ is really in their hearts," said Angel Aloma, executive director for Food for the Poor Inc.

"Orphanages do not have a negative connotation" in Nicaragua, said Aloma. "Here orphanages are a place of joy and happiness."

Nicaragua is the third poorest country in the Western Hemisphere and the CIA's World Factbook claims that it has one of the greatest inequities in income distribution in the world, with 45 percent of total income being earned by just 10 percent of the population.

Poor countries do not have the social safety nets; when the poor in Nicaragua fall, they hit the ground hard.

The Christmas earthquake of 1972 leveled 90 percent of Managua and killed more than 10,000 people. Much of the relief aid channeled to the country flowed into the pockets of the family and friends of then-ruler Anastasio Somoza.

When Hurricane Mitch hit in 1998, killing 2,400 people, almost one-fifth of Nicaragua's population was left homeless.

city of Leon has long been viewed as the intellectual center of Nicaragua. But at a restaurant near the beautiful Cathedral of the Assumption, children beg for scraps from the plates of visitors.

Since 2004, Food for the Poor has worked with the American-Nicaraguan Foundation to build homes in Leon for families with the greatest need.

Originally the plan was to build 35 homes, but by 2007 the groups had built more than 1,900 homes, as well as a school and a community center.

Continuing northwest is the town of Chinandega. Nelson Rodriguez, a policeman, lives in a house made from corrugated scrap metal, a one-room squatter's shack he shares with his wife and two children.

With no windows or adequate ventilation these shacks turn into hothouses in the tropical summer sun. There is no running water and no sewage disposal. There is no security. At any moment the landowner might arrive with a bulldozer and wipe out the entire community.

It is so hot in Leorgina Centeno's shack that it is hard to tell her tears from the sweat on her face as she holds her two children.

"I am thankful for God's grace that moves the hearts of others to help the needy," she said.

The two families will soon be moving into new houses, part of a program funded by Food for the Poor.

"A home is the first step," said Aloma. "When they get a home they have the security to leave the kids with grandparents, and the possessions are safe so both parents can seek work."

Christmas and the divinity of Christ

Through Scripture, pope searches 'for the face of the Lord'

Every Christmas we have the opportunity to reaffirm our faith in the Lord. The secularization of the Christmas holiday has weakened the faith of many.

However, to the rescue comes Pope Benedict XVI with his new book, "Jesus of Nazareth." It is a beautifully written defense of the divinity of Jesus.

The pope makes the Incarnation the central issue in every part of the Gospel. The joy of the Christmas season is based on the belief that God came to us in the form of man:

"The Son of Man has come to seek and to save what was lost" (Lk 19:10). "For us men and for our salvation, he came down from heaven. ... He was born of the Virgin Mary and became man" (The Nicene Creed).

Modern secular Scripture scholars have challenged this mystery for decades, treating the texts solely as literary works and discarding the faith perspective in their interpretations.

They distinguish between the Jesus of history and the Christ of faith, saying that the Scriptures have often reflected later influences coming from the faith of the Gospel writers, not from actual firsthand witness.

Demythologizing the Scriptures is a legitimate study, but it goes off track when it contradicts the truths of revelation.

In his book, Pope Benedict demonstrates the limitations of the historical-critical method of interpreting Scripture and insists that there is a need for a fuller, more integrated theological perspective in order to supplement the exegeses.

Pope Benedict XVI sees no difference between the Christ of faith and the historical person of Jesus. In unifying the two he presents a simple, integrated view of the person of Jesus, and even refers to the kingdom of God as Jesus Christ personified.

The Holy Father says, "This book is not meant to be a pronouncement of the magisterium. ... It is my personal search 'for the face of the Lord.'"

One of my favorite passages is when Pope Benedict cites the Lord's disagreements with the authorities of the time. Here Jesus uses the expression "I am," which means "Yahweh."

It was a bold assertion of his mission and his divinity, and the Pharisees saw it as such. They considered it pure blasphemy and became infuriated. Shortly afterward they began planning Jesus' crucifixion.

Pope Benedict also shows how Jesus was called the Logos (the Word) in St. John's Gospel:

"In the beginning was the Word, and

Spirituality for Today

FATHER JOHN CATOIR
CNS COLUMNIST

the Word was with God, and the Word was God. ... The Word became flesh and made his dwelling among us" (1:1,14).

This means that God is fully manifested and glorified in the person of the historical Jesus, right from his infancy in Bethlehem.

The importance of Pope Benedict's book cannot be overestimated. It restores the simplicity of the Christmas story to its traditional place in the history of Christianity.

"Jesus of Nazareth" already has its opponents. Father Joseph S. O'Leary, an English literature teacher at Sophia University in Tokyo, said this about the book's impact:

"A whole century of New Testament scholarship will now have to be radically corrected, and largely jettisoned" (National Catholic Reporter, 9/27/07).

Doctrinal teachings about the divinity of Jesus in the fourth century were all based on the faith of the primitive Christian community expressed in the New Testament. The message has always been the same and quite simple; namely, we are destined for eternal life.

To get there we all need to acknowledge our dependence upon Jesus as Lord, who said, "Without me you can do nothing" (Jn 15:5).

God's gift of humor

Being joyful helps one to be kind, to endure

I was saddened recently to learn that my former classmate, Father David Cortesi of the Archdioceses of Chicago, had died.

It was only a year ago when we gathered for our high school reunion and Dave was his old humorous self. When I asked him how he was doing, he laughed, "I have diabetes and am falling apart just like everyone else our age."

Dave had a gift of lightening the anxiety we often experienced during our studies. It wasn't that he took life lightly; rather, he knew how to lighten it up by revealing its oddities.

Frequently he would tickle our funny bone by noting the eccentricities of our most feared professors or exposing the laughable side of a serious issue.

As I reflected on Dave's gift, I couldn't help but think of the other David Cortesi in life who keep us sane when everything seems insane and chaotic. They bless us with the virtue of humor and with the kindness it spawns.

Kindness involves being well-disposed toward our neighbors, ourselves and the world. It's the opposite of being ill-disposed, gloomy, negative and fearful.

Many a time Dave's humor was the epitome of kindness, enabling us to rise above a gloomy situation and not get bent out of shape.

We don't give much thought to the worth of people like Dave and the humor they create. The theologian Father Romano Guardini, however, reminds us they are extremely important for maintaining our kindness.

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

"One thing is required of kindness," Father Guardini writes, "something of which we rarely speak — a sense of humor. It helps us to endure things more easily. Indeed, we could hardly get along without it."

"The person who sees (someone) only seriously, only morally or pedagogically cannot endure him (or her) for any length of time. We must have an eye for the oddity of existence."

"Everything human has something comic about it. The more pompously a (person) acts, the greater is the comic element."

"A sense of humor means that we take (a person) seriously and strive to help him (or her), but suddenly see how odd he (or she) is, and laugh, even though it be only inwardly. A friendly laugh at the oddity of all human affairs — that is humor. It helps us to be kind for after a good laugh it is easier to be serious again."

Dave taught us the art of having an eye for the oddity of existence. Ultimately people like Dave are gifts from God who loves us and desires that we be joyful and have a good laugh.

Breakfast with Santa

Christmas events should be focused on Christ

Breakfast with Santa. What is it with having breakfast with Santa?
This year our parish will sponsor three or four breakfasts with that merry giver of gifts and promoter of sales, Santa Claus.
We used to have Communion breakfasts — breakfast with Jesus. Now we have breakfast with Santa.

Don't get me wrong. I am 100 percent in favor of helping needy children, especially at Christmas. I want their celebration of Christmas to be joyful.

Our parish always participates in the community "giving tree." We buy gifts for more than 200 needy children in our community, more than any other church in our county.

But, like many parishes, we have had an increasing emphasis on "breakfast with Santa" around Christmas.

We sponsor one for the children born through the local crisis-pregnancy center. We have another one for Girl Scouts.

This year we even hosted a breakfast with Santa for the local motorcycle clubs. There were 150 motorcycles in the parking lot. Santa arrived on a red motorcycle. Cool.

Even the Knights of Columbus sponsor a breakfast with Santa. They give gifts to children of Knights.

So what is my problem with all of this breakfasting with Santa? Three things bother me.

First, we are promoting Santa and forgetting Jesus in all of this. Our children come away thinking that Christmas is about Santa Claus and getting stuff.

We cannot lament the fact that Christ is not in Christmas if the churches don't even keep him there.

Above all, it seems to me the Knights of Columbus should be sensitive to this. After all, they are the ones who have the "Keep Christ in Christmas" campaign. How can we expect Wal-Mart to keep Christ in Christmas if we don't?

Second, we are promoting materialism as the spirit of Christmas.

Young people are taught that Christmas is about getting stuff. The high point of these breakfasts is a merry romp through piles of gifts.

While most of them who come to these events are needy, some are just middle class children who already receive too much stuff for Christmas.

Third, all this breakfasting with Santa stretches out the Christmas season. Our celebrations begin earlier every year.

The bikers' breakfast with Santa was on Nov. 17 this year. Since when does the Christmas season begin before Thanksgiving?

I've wondered what to do about this phenomenon of breakfast with Santa. I raised it with our pastoral council. Some people thought I was the "Grinch" who stole Christmas. Others agreed with me.

Parish Diary

In reflecting, I've come up with three guidelines for children's Christmas gift-giving celebrations in our parish:

First, Christmas celebrations must be in the Christmas season. By that I mean between the feast of St. Nicholas (Dec. 6) and Epiphany (Jan. 6).

One month is plenty. I want no dragging Christmas into November just because the stores already have their decorations up.

Second, gift-giving events must be focused on the needy, not the greedy. We should be inviting children who otherwise would not be receiving gifts.

We have to be delicate in how we do this. I prefer anonymous giving.

Third, every Christmas event for children must have some reference to the birth of Jesus. A manger scene should be set up. There must be a religious Christmas carol sung (not Jingle Bells). There must be a prayer said by everyone there.

Maybe we should even require that St. Nick come dressed as a bishop!

Pope says Advent is reminder that God will never abandon his children

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Advent is a time for prayer and trust that God will never abandon his children, even during turbulent times, Pope Benedict XVI said at his weekly general audience.

"The Lord will fight to defend you," he said, quoting St. Chromatius. "It is God who brings victory in the end."

During his Dec. 5 general audience in the Vatican's Paul VI hall, the pope continued a series of talks on writers of the early church with a catechesis on St. Chromatius, the fourth-century bishop of Aquileia in northern Italy.

The bishop stayed close to his flock and "opened their hearts to trust in God who never abandons his children" even during times of trouble and insecurity, the pope said.

The Lord will protect his loved ones not because of their merits, but because he is a loving and merciful God, he said.

The pope told some 8,000 pilgrims gathered in the hall that the fourth-century saint teaches that "Advent is a time of prayer" and a time to get in touch with God.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In our continuing catechesis on the writers of the early church, we now turn to St. Chromatius, the bishop of Aquileia in northern Italy.

At the end of the fourth century, the church in Aquileia played a significant role in the struggle against Arianism, thanks to the celebrated synod held there.

Born of a devout Christian family, Chromatius became a priest, attended the synod as an expert and was then ordained bishop of Aquileia. He was a zealous pastor, governing his enormous diocese during the turbulent time of the invasions of the Goths and the Huns.

Chromatius assisted St. Jerome in the preparation of the Vulgate and left behind a number of sermons and a series of tracts on the Gospel of Matthew.

His teaching emphasized the mystery of the Blessed Trinity, the work of the Holy Spirit, the divinity and integral humanity of Christ, the dignity of the Virgin Mary and the unity of the Church.

In a lively Latin, filled with striking imagery, he proclaimed the truths of the faith, sustained his flock in hope amid the uncertainties of the times and, above all, taught them to pray with confidence in the Lord's victory over evil and his unfailing mercy toward his holy ones.

The value of saying 'no' in a can-do culture

Blocking scientific 'progress' can be necessary, commendable

A benefit of being in business for a long time is the ability to see things through the perspective of 2,000 years.

The recent announcement that human skin cells can be made to function as effectively as embryonic stem cells is a case in point, an increasingly rare situation when a scientific discovery appears to make everyone happy.

Separate studies from teams at the University of Wisconsin and in Japan reported results that negate the need to destroy human embryos in order to acquire stem cells.

"The induced cells do all the things embryonic stem cells do," said James Thompson, the Wisconsin researcher.

He isolated the first embryonic stem cells in 1998.

"It is going to completely change the field," he said.

The widespread acclaim that greeted the announcement emphasized the breakthrough of providing scientific benefit without the ethical question of destroying human life to obtain the embryonic cells.

The Catholic Church opposes the direct destruction of innocent human life for any purpose, including research involving harvesting stem cells from a living human embryo.

Despite the temptation for a strong "I told you so," this is more a time for an appreciation of caution and principles. It is good to have boundary-keepers, an organization with principles saying "no" in a can-do culture.

In the last few years as science did more and more work with stem cells, the church spoke out against the use of embryonic cells. It urged the alternatives of adult cells, defining what is permissible and not permissible.

One of the few less-than-positive comments on the new breakthrough came in a newspaper editorial that urged embryonic stem-cell research continue along with the new skin cell technique.

"The potential benefits for stem-cell research's impact on millions of lives are too important to let one avenue of research forestall or trump the other," said the Seattle Times as if it were speaking of a difference of opinion over Beta or VHS in video recorders.

"The possible benefits for treating a variety of illnesses outweigh the political and religious concerns that for too long have stymied research in the U.S.," it said.

Note the words "political and religious concerns." Many would object to progress being blocked by politics and religion. But the correct words are "moral and ethical concerns."

It has been less than a decade since Thompson, the Wisconsin researcher, first isolated embryonic stem cells. It is not easy to make the case for human life when it is evident only with a microscope.

Extra! Extra!

STEPHEN KENT
CNS COLUMNIST

But skin cell development vindicates the perseverance of church.

"The choice is not between science and ethics, but between science that is ethically responsible and science that is not," the U.S. bishops have said.

The bishops' Committee on Science and Human Values put it well in a statement:

"The church must know and respond to the spirit of scientific humanism in contemporary U.S. culture, and must bring Catholic moral values to bear on issues to which advances and science and technology give rise."

Standing in the way of scientific progress — as history has often shown us — can be a necessary and commendable action.

With apologies to a former defense secretary, "We don't know what we don't know yet." That makes it important to have guidance in opening doors and boxes.

Some criticism of halting embryonic stem-cell research said it "directly conflicts with science's need to advance."

Science's need to advance, however, must be instructed by morality and ethics.

Pope OKs plenary indulgence for Lourdes' 150th anniversary

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — To mark the 150th anniversary of Mary's appearance to St. Bernadette Soubirous near Lourdes, France, Pope Benedict XVI authorized a special indulgence to encourage renewed holiness.

Catholics can receive a plenary indulgence for taking part in any public or private devotion to Our Lady of Lourdes, said U.S. Cardinal J. Francis Stafford, head of the Apostolic Penitentiary, a Vatican court dealing with indulgences and matters of conscience.

As Christians strive to become more holy, they can look to Mary who "calls the faithful to her Son and his sacrifice and to the love of the Father," said the cardinal, quoting from "Lumen Gentium," the Second Vatican Council's Dogmatic Constitution on the Church.

The Vatican published the cardinal's statement announcing the indulgence and outlining the requirements for receiving it Dec. 5.

An indulgence is a remission of the temporal punishment due for sins committed. A plenary indulgence is the remission of all punishment.

Cardinal Stafford said the indulgence can also be applied to the souls of the faithful in purgatory.

Catholics can receive the indulgence during two time frames.

Pilgrims visiting the Massabielle grotto, where Mary appeared to St. Bernadette, can receive the indulgence during the Lourdes jubilee year, which runs from Dec. 8, the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, until Dec. 8, 2008.

Pilgrims who visit any public sanctuary, shrine or other worthy place dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes may receive the indulgence Feb. 2-11.

Feb. 11 is the day the first of 18 apparitions occurred and is the feast of Our Lady of Lourdes. Feb. 2 is the feast of the Presentation of the Lord.

Cardinal Stafford said that to obtain the special indulgence one must fulfill the normal requirements set by the church for all plenary indulgences; these include the person going to confession within a reasonably short period of time, receiving the Eucharist and praying for the intentions of the pope, all in a spirit of total detachment from the attraction of sin.

Those who make a pilgrimage to Lourdes must visit the following sites, preferably in this order:

- The parish where St. Bernadette was baptized.
- The Soubirous family home.
- The Massabielle grotto.
- The chapel where St. Bernadette received her first Communion.

At each location the faithful should end their meditation by praying the Lord's Prayer, the creed and the special jubilee prayer or a prayer to Mary.

Those visiting a holy place dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes in another part of the world Feb. 2-11 also should pray the Lord's Prayer, the creed and the special jubilee prayer or a prayer to Mary.

Catholics who cannot visit Lourdes or join a communal service dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes because of illness or other serious reason could still earn the indulgence "in their own home or wherever they are" Feb. 2-11, Cardinal Stafford said.

CHARLOTTE — Just over a month ago, Kyle Fleischmann, a 2002 graduate of Charlotte Catholic High School, walked out of a bar in uptown Charlotte and disappeared.

He has not been seen nor heard from since, despite a massive search effort by his family, friends and hundreds of volunteers.

Fleischmann was recorded on security cameras leaving Buckhead Saloon Nov. 9, at about 2:20 a.m. About an hour later, two phone calls were made from his cell phone, one to his roommate and another to his best friend, Daniel Scagnelli, but the caller did not leave any TRYON — Catholics in the small parish of St. John the Baptist Church in Tryon now worship at a beautiful marble altar, one which has become a tourist attraction and "magnet for prayer."

Bishop Peter J. Jugis blessed the new ambo, altar and high altar, which houses the tabernacle, Dec. 7. The relics of three saints — St. Fortunatus, St. Paulina and an unidentified saint — were sealed in the altar during the Mass. A relic of St. John the Baptist is housed in the church.

The pieces are made of Carrara marble imported from Italy.

PRAYERS FOR THE VICTIMS

Lisa Victoria Wiemers, accompanied by her daughter, Bella, takes a moment to reflect near the altar of St. John Church at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., during a prayer service Dec. 6. The service was held to remember nine people, including the shooter, who died in the Westroads Mall shooting Dec. 5. Wiemers worked at the Von Maur department store last Christmas and knew four of the victims. Five others were wounded.

God remains source of comfort in shooting tragedy, Omaha priest says

OMAHA, Neb. (CNS) — In a time of great sadness and pain, God remains present as a source of comfort, an Omaha priest said in his homily at a Dec. 6 prayer service for the victims of shootings the day before at one of the city's shopping malls.

"We turn to God, not because God will reveal answers to all of our questions, but because God is faithful to his promise: to walk at our side in times of sorrow, even as he does in times of joy," Father Harry Buse, pastor at St. Leo Church in Omaha, told a capacity crowd of family, friends and co-workers of the victims.

St. Leo Church is located just blocks from Westroads Mall where 19-year-old Robert Hawkins entered the Von Maur department store Dec. 5 around 1:30 p.m. with an AK-47 assault rifle and randomly shot and killed eight and wounded five others before turning the gun on himself.

On the night of the shootings, a candlelight vigil at St. John's Church on the campus of Jesuit-run Creighton University was the first public gathering. A midday prayer service for the victims and shooter was held at the campus church Dec. 6.

The St. Leo Church service followed that evening; it was the home parish of one of the victims, 53-year-old Dianne Trent.

Victim Janet Jorgensen, 66, was a Von Maur employee and a member of St. James Church in Omaha. Employee Angie Schuster, 36, was a parishioner of St. Robert Bellarmine Church in Omaha.

The other deceased include two store customers and three store employees.

At the St. John Church's service, Jesuit Father Roc O'Connor, rector of the Jesuit community at Creighton, asked the 800 people gathered to be "men and women for others" in the face of tragedy.

"The men and women of Creighton University have always been here for each other," he said. "Today is no different and that makes us a special community."

Victim John McDonald, 65, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was a graduate of Creighton University, as is one of the wounded shoppers, 34-year-old Jeff Schaffart.

Father Buse went to Westroads Mall shortly after the shootings to offer pastoral assistance.

"Certainly these tragedies remind us of the brokenness of the human condition, of the fact that sin is part of our lives as humans," Father Buse said. "But it also reminds us to remember that Jesus rises above all of that."

While mourning the loss of the victims, Father Dvorak said that as Christians we can't forget to pray for the shooter.

"If we really have faith that Jesus died for everyone we recognize that we can do some drastic evil things and be forgiven," he said. "We don't believe God will judge harshly those who are not sane. So when you think about the young man we should be thankful God is merciful."

A tragedy like the mall shootings provides the opportunity for people to remember what the season of Advent is about and ask themselves if there is a place for Jesus in their lives, he said.

"God is always with us," Father Dvorak said. "If we don't have that relationship with God, then maybe this is a call to begin to find out what's missing in our lives and to open ourselves up to the hope, peace and true joy that Christ brings."

Cardinal McCarrick announces interfaith effort to fight terrorism

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick, retired archbishop of Washington, led a group of religious leaders Nov. 30 in announcing a national interfaith grass-roots campaign to oppose terrorists and protect Americans from their violence.

Launching the campaign is Cardinal McCarrick; Rabbi Jack Luxemburg, chief rabbi of Temple Beth Ami in Rockville, Md.; and Rev. Samuel Lloyd III, dean of the Washington National Cathedral of the Episcopal Church.

Cardinal McCarrick said the campaign is comprised of people from different religious traditions, coming together with mutual respect and understanding, to protect Americans from terrorists and their violence.

"This is ... a monumental step," Cardinal McCarrick said. "This is the family gathering to say thanks be to God, the one God that we all worship. ... We're all his children."

Citing work that had been done before to achieve peace in the Holy Land with representatives from different faiths, the cardinal said: "What we found is that we can all work together. ... What unites us is so much greater than what divides us."

He also welcomed, on behalf of other Christian and Jewish leaders, a "fatwa," or religious edict, issued by the Fiqh Council of North America, that in part stated its "unequivocal and unqualified condemnation of the destruction and violence committed against innocent men and women."

The council is a group of Islamic scholars who offer advice in areas of Islamic life in North America.

Cardinal McCarrick said people from all faiths are "one family," and "we really need to love each other, we really need to understand each other, and we really need to work together."

FROM THE VATICAN

Giving in to lust hurts other people, says papal preacher

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Giving in to lust hurts both the individual and other people, the preacher of the papal household told Pope Benedict XVI and top Vatican officials.

Offering an Advent meditation Dec. 7, Capuchin Father Raniero Cantalamessa said often those who justify their life of impurity say "it is not hurting other people, it does not infringe on the rights and freedoms of others unless it entails carnal violence."

But such reasoning is wrong, he said, because carnal sin not only violates God's fundamental laws governing his creatures, but it threatens everyone.

Father Cantalamessa used an example from a Jewish holy book to illustrate how even one individual's personal sin affects the entire community.

Quoting the Talmud, he said: "A number of people are sitting in a small boat. One man begins to drill a hole under his seat. The other passengers ask him, 'What are you doing?' He retorts, 'What does it matter to you? I'm drilling the hole under my own seat.' But they reply, 'Yes, but the water will come in and drown us all.'

"This is what is happening in our society," the papal preacher said. Even the church understands the kind of damage an individual's personal mistakes can inflict on the entire community, he added.

The evil of lust lies in the fact that reason is made subordinate to instinct instead of the other way around, he said.

If instinct rules, then "it becomes an enemy, not an ally, of love," and it can lead to savage crimes, Father Cantalamessa said.

He said young people today need convincing reasons "not to be afraid of their body and of love," but to be afraid of spoiling their bodies and the true meaning of love by being slaves to their passions.

Pope, Russian Orthodox official meet privately at Vatican

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Despite ongoing differences and even tensions, the Vatican and the Russian Orthodox Church have permanent and "always-open channels of communication," said Orthodox Metropolitan Kirill of Smolensk and Kaliningrad, head of the Moscow Patriarchate's office for external relations.

Metropolitan Kirill met privately with Pope Benedict XVI Dec. 7 at the Vatican.

The Vatican did not release any details about the meeting, but an interview with Metropolitan Kirill was published late in the afternoon by L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper.

"The meeting with the pope was very positive and very beautiful," he said. "On our agenda there are many important themes such as the promotion of basic values."

Metropolitan Kirill's meeting with the pope came just four days after Russia's Interfax news agency quoted him as saying that the Roman Catholic dioceses in Russia should be downgraded to the status of "apostolic administration" that they had before 2002.

"We shall never recognize them and will always dispute the presence of ordinary Catholic dioceses in the territory of Russia and consider it a challenge to our common idea" of church organization, Interfax quoted him as saying.

Metropolitan Kirill had said that when the Orthodox or the Catholics have communities outside their traditional homelands, a bishop should be in charge of their pastoral care, but that bishop should be an administrator, not the head of a normal diocese erected on a territory already assigned to another bishop.

He told L'Osservatore Romano Dec. 7: "In the theological dialogue we recognize that there exist specific difficulties between us. But at the same time, we maintain that dialogue is the best instrument for finding a common solution to the problems that exist."

The newspaper did not mention the Catholic dioceses in Russia and the metropolitan did not raise the subject in the interview, but he said the Vatican and the Russian Orthodox Church are increasingly optimistic and hopeful about their relationship.

"Without a doubt, the meeting with the pope was for us a very positive step in the development of our relations," he said.

Metropolitan Kirill said regular contact between Vatican and Russian Orthodox officials is essential for promoting the growing understanding of the other that is needed to resolve the tensions and the theological differences that keep Catholics and Orthodox apart.

Hispanics honor Our Lady of Guadalupe with celebrations

KERNERSVILLE — An estimated 1,200 people came out to honor Our Lady of Guadalupe during a celebration at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville Dec. 11.

It was one of many events honoring Our Lady of Guadalupe that were held around the Diocese of Charlotte. The feast day of Our Lady of Guadalupe is Dec. 12.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis and Franciscan Father Joseph Tustin, pastor of Holy Cross Church, participated in the event at Holy Cross Church, which featured an elaborate recreation of a brown-skinned Virgin Mary's miraculous apparitions to St. Juan Diego at Tepeyac, Mexico, in December 1531.

She left her image on his "tilma" or cloak.

For 476 years her image has been a symbol of unity, peace, compassion and hope for people around the world.

The apparitions are credited with the conversion to Catholicism of millions of indigenous people of Central and South America.

Bishop Jugis blesses new altars at St. John the Baptist Church

When Father Patrick Winslow became pastor of St. John the Baptist Church in July 2006, he found a simple altar and ambo in the sanctuary.

"The appointments weren't 'ecclesiastical,'" said Father Winslow. "The altar was made of something like particle board covered in cloth and the ambo could have been a lectern in any conference room."

Also, the tabernacle housing the Blessed Sacrament was on a sidewall of the sanctuary.

"The Blessed Sacrament needed to be put in the center of the church, in accordance with diocesan norms," said Father Winslow.

After a conversation with Bishop Jugis, Father Winslow announced to the parish a fundraising campaign to purchase the new altars and ambo.

"I held out lofty goals for the parish, and they responded," Father Winslow said.

Fundraising began in the fall of 2006, and in less than one year $110,000 had been collected, all in private donations.

"The money just poured in," said Karen Brunjes, office manager for St. John the Baptist Church. "We raised enough to have new flooring installed in the church as well."

"If we believe that the holy Eucharist is the source and summit of our Catholic life, then that ought to be expressed in both tangible and intangible ways," said Father Winslow.

"My hope and goal are that the graces we receive from the Mass will then animate people in their home lives and in the larger community," he said.

"This altar will provide spiritual inspiration for many years to come," he said.

Preschoolers collect books for first-time moms

GREENSBORO — Kids at St. Paul the Apostle Church in Greensboro recently helped make a positive difference in other children's lives.

Members of the Kingdom's Kids preschool class collected 70 books as part of a service project for the Healthy Start program at McDowell Hospital in Marion.

Healthy Start is an intensive home visitation program for first-time mothers that begins at birth and continues for three years.

Jane Schroeder, community outreach director at McDowell Hospital and a member of Our Lady of the Angels Church in Marion; and Shirley Wilson, family support worker with Healthy Start, visited the preschool class at St. Paul the Apostle Church Nov. 26 to collect the books.

They brought the students a thank you card from the hospital, as well as doctor and nurse hats to wear.

Embezzlement suspected at Belmont parish

EMPLOYEE SUSPENDED WHILE DIOCESE, POLICE INVESTIGATE

BY DAVID HAINS
SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

BELMONT — The Diocese of Charlotte and police are investigating possible embezzlement of parish funds at Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont.

Diocesan officials and Father Francis Cancro, pastor of Queen of the Apostles Church, met with Belmont police Dec. 4 after an audit of church financial records revealed a loss of more than $104,000 from the church.

In a statement to the news media, the Belmont Police Department reported: "An employee had been writing fraudulent checks that the church did not authorize. There were 85 fraudulent checks worth a total of $104,290.10. The embezzlement occurred during the past several years."

Concerns about financial irregularities were raised by parish finance council members in November to Father Cancro, who has been pastor since July.

Father Cancro requested the diocesan audit of the parish financial records. The diocese then reported its discoveries to civil authorities.

A parish employee has been put on administrative leave during the investigation. Because no arrests have been made, The Catholic News & Herald will not publish the employee's name.

The financial irregularities discovered at the church do not presently involve any member of the parish finance council or clergy who have served at the parish.

According to William Weldon, chief financial officer of the Diocese of Charlotte, the loss of funds at Queen of the Apostles Church appears to be an isolated incident and not part of a systematic attempt to defraud individual churches.

"The Diocese of Charlotte does not tolerate financial fraud, and anyone committing fraudulent acts is subject to civil and criminal prosecution," said Weldon.

"We remain committed to the highest standards of accountability, and are implementing new procedures throughout the diocese developed specifically in response to the situation at Queen of the Apostles Church," he said.

Diocesan insurance is expected to cover the loss of funds. A claim for the funds has already been submitted to the diocesan insurer.

Father Cancro explained the situation to parishioners at Masses celebrated the weekend of Dec. 8-9 and expressed regret over the incident.

"In this parish, we celebrate the good stewardship that is exercised over the resources parishioners entrust to us," said Father Cancro.

"The spirit of forgiveness requires us to move on with the important work of Queen of the Apostles," he said.

Catholics: Sri Lankan conflict increases, religious tension decreases

tension now than there was before the tsunami,” said Father Damian Fernando, national director of Caritas Sri Lanka, the local affiliate of the Catholic umbrella group Caritas Internationalis.

About 70 percent of Sri Lanka’s population is Buddhist, while only about 8 percent is Christian. In the years before the tsunami, tensions between the two groups had increased, with occasional attacks on Christian church buildings.

Hindus, mostly ethnic Tamils on the island’s North coast, make up about 15 percent of the population. Muslims comprise another 8 percent.

Since the Dec. 26, 2004 tsunami killed 35,000 people and left more than half a million homeless here, relationships have changed.

“In the minds of the Buddhist majority, especially the Buddhist clergy, proselytizing by some foreign groups had created suspicion. Overcoming that suspicion was a great challenge for us,” said Father Fernando.

“A similar fear existed with the Muslims in the East and Hindus in the North. They always think we’re coming just to convert people. So we had to win the confidence of the people,” he said.

“In communities where we worked on the south of the island, we involved the local Buddhist clergy. We put them on the steering committees for our projects, and only with their approval did we select beneficiaries,”

“They always think we’re coming just to convert people. So we had to win the confidence of the people.”

— Father Damian Fernando

Father Fernando said.

“And in the dedication ceremonies we’ve had in recent months, it’s the Buddhist clergy who have praised Caritas,” he said.

Sri Lanka’s political leaders have not matched the tone set by religious leaders, however. Renewed fighting between Tamil separatists in the North and the Sinhalese-dominated government in Colombo has killed more than 5,000 people since early 2006, making the death toll since the war erupted in 1983 around 70,000.

In addition, thousands of civilians, many just resettled after the destruction of the tsunami, have been uprooted from their homes by the renewed fighting.

“The tsunami was an opportunity for different religions to come together, and they’ve done so. It was a similar opportunity for our political leaders, and they’ve failed,” said Father Fernando.

“They didn’t make good use of the

A family displaced by Sri Lanka’s 2004 tsunami is seen outside a temporary housing refuge south of the Sri Lankan capital of Colombo. disaster for the good of the country. They put themselves ahead of the country,” he said.

According to a November report from the nonprofit International Crisis Group, a resurgence of Sinhalese nationalism in the South has emboldened extremists and handed “established politicians a diversion from their failure to address economic weakness, social concerns and pervasive corruption.”

The report also blamed the “brutality and intransigence” of the rebel Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam for the country’s deteriorating political climate and argued that the two competing nationalist movements “have sapped the ability of governments to develop a consensus for a negotiated settlement and power sharing” to the decadeslong conflict.

Father Fernando said both sides manipulate the truth.

“Nobody can win this war. Both parties know that, but they deceive people. They don’t tell the truth. The government doesn’t report exactly what’s happening on the battlefield,” he said.

The rebels do the same thing, he added.

“Neither wants the truth to come out, because if it did then the people would tell these two conflicting parties that they’ve had enough,” he said.

The government claims that it has driven Tamil rebel troops out of the East and is in the process of launching a major attack on rebel strongholds in the North. The government reported that 39 rebel fighters and six government soldiers were killed in fighting Dec. 3.

“The military is always giving the impression that they are on the way north. And anyone who speaks against this is branded as a terrorist and can be arrested,” said Father Fernando.

“The government is telling us now that in the next few months they are going to win the war. It’s the same song over and over. This isn’t heading anywhere. And a lot of people are undergoing tremendous suffering as a result,” he said.

In a Nov. 30 report issued in New York, Human Rights Watch accused both the Sri Lankan government and the rebels of deliberately targeting civilians.

Human Rights Watch also said neither side has taken adequate measures to facilitate humanitarian relief to the thousands of newly displaced people. Aid workers have been targets of threats and attacks from both sides, prompting fears that international humanitarian organizations will leave the country.

MINDFUL QUESTIONS FOR 'GOLDEN COMPASS'

Nun-critic offers media literacy guide for 'Compass' movie

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Sister Rose Pacatte, a Daughter of St. Paul who has written books on spiritual themes in movies, has developed a "media mindfulness strategy" for the new film "The Golden Compass."

"The Golden Compass" film challenges believing adults to articulate their faith and values and to brush up on church history, theology, and literature and literary forms to do so — not because the film deals with these issues but because of the culture surrounding the release of the film," Sister Pacatte said in her guide to the movie.

"This film is an opportunity for us to develop our critical thinking skills: to ask questions and seek and articulate the answers: the answers to 'why?'" she added.

She admitted, "This is a difficult assignment for busy parents and teachers, but an excellent way to engage in our culture rationally and faithfully and with relevance."

"To 'just say no' is not a valid option in today's media world. Let us respond, rather than react, to the world around us."

The movie, which debuted in theaters Dec. 7, stars Nicole Kidman and Daniel Craig.

It is based on the first book of British author Philip Pullman's trilogy of fantasy novels for young readers, titled "His Dark Materials," and considered by many to be an overtly anti-Christian work. Pullman describes himself as an atheist.

"His Dark Materials" recounts the adventures of Lyra Belacqua, a 12-year-old girl in an alternate universe that resembles our own.

With the assistance of several other characters, she sets out to overthrow the Authority, which is God in Pullman's work.

The novels depict him as a weak, false god and, in the final book in the trilogy, he actually dies.

Sister Pacatte's guide asks a myriad of questions about the movie and plot developments, but they are grouped around four central areas:

— "What's going on? What's the story? How is the film's reality created and why?"

— "What's really going on? Who is telling the story and why? (The film business; the author; the screenwriter)"

— "What difference does the film make? Is it really atheistic? Or does it evoke thoughtful conversation about things that matter?"

— "What difference can I make? What did the characters in the film learn?"

— "How did they grow and change? Did they?"

— "What, if any, light did the film shed on how I can live the Christian life in ways that respect human dignity?"

By addressing these questions, Sister Pacatte said, "families can make an informed decision about seeing the film and once they see it, talk about it in meaningful ways with young people."

This is the cover of "The Golden Compass," by Philip Pullman. Sister Rose Pacatte has developed a "media mindfulness strategy" for the film adaption of the story.

"Catechists and religion teachers can also use this strategy as a means to talk about theology and philosophy in the greater context of the books — presuming that they will choose the wise approach and read the books and see the film before entering into dialogue," he said.

Critics debate

religionist bent of both the novels and their author.

"Today, I saw the movie. And I'm not going to change a word of what I've written as a result," said a Nov. 20 online posting by Jeffrey Overstreet, author of the book "Through a Screen Darkly," a memoir and travelogue of "dangerous moviegoing," on his blog, the Looking Closer Journal.

"If the filmmakers tried to 'tone down' the anti-religious content, they pretty much failed," he said. "The Magisterium" is not a term invented by (book author) Philip Pullman. It's a reference to the Catholic Church, or at least to the truth that shines through Scripture and the history of the church. And it isn't hard to see that in the film."

The movie, which stars Nicole Kidman and Daniel Craig and debuted in theaters Dec. 7, is based on the first book of British author Pullman's trilogy

CATHOLIC

merits of 'Golden Compass' movie

titled "His Dark Materials." The other two volumes are "The Subtle Knife" and "The Amber Spyglass."

"His Dark Materials" recounts the adventures of Lyra Belacqua, a 12-year-old girl in an alternate universe that resembles our own. With the assistance of several other characters, she sets out to overthrow the Authority, which is God in Pullman's work. The novels depict him as a weak, false god and, in the final book in the trilogy, he actually dies.

Australian Sacred Heart Father Peter Malone, a film critic and author and former head of Signis, the worldwide association of Catholic communicators, said in a Nov. 25 statement on the movie:

"The Golden Compass' is well-made, with a lot of intelligent dialogue, including the word 'metaphysics' a couple of times. Much of the film requires attention as well as some developed vocabulary."

Father Malone acknowledged, "There are some aspects of the film that may raise a religious eyebrow." One is how "The Golden Compass" treats its parallel world.

"In our world, our souls are within us. In the parallel world, the soul is outside us, in the form of a symbolic animal called a daemon — not a devil but a 'spirit' according to the origins of the word," he said.

Another aspect is its use of "Magisterium" to describe "the all-powerful ruling body which is authoritarian and intent on eradicating free will," he said.

The Catholic Church uses magisterium for its teaching authority.

He added, "As with all controversies and campaigns, attack without the benefit of viewing a film undermines the credibility of a crusade whether it is justified or not."

"Nothing says 'dark irony' like a movie focused on blasting a 'Magisterium' using a group of, er, bishops, to sell itself," said Amy Welborn, a former Catholic News Service columnist, in a Dec. 4 posting on her blog, Charlotte Was Both.

Last year she wrote the booklet "The Da Vinci Code Mysteries: What the Movie Doesn't Tell You," which was published a month before the film premiered in theaters.

Welborn mocked the reaction of some critics that "The Golden Compass" "is so, so valuable because it will give parents and young people a great opportunity to discuss the important issues raised by Pullman about religious authority, human freedom and so on."

"After we finish with 'The Golden Compass,' shall we break out 'The Protocols of the Elders of Zion' to open up discussion on Judaism? Probably not," said Welborn. "Why? Because we recognize that the 'Protocols' are lies. ... So it is with 'The Golden Compass.'"

Good film, bad message

In a joint review by Harry Forbes, director of the U.S. bishops' Office for Film & Broadcasting, and John Mulderig, a staff critic for the office, "The Golden Compass" was classified A-II — adults and adolescents — for "intense but bloodless fantasy violence, anti-clerical subtext, standard genre occult elements, a character born out of wedlock and a whiskey-guzzling bear."

The now-withdrawn USCCB review rankled some in the blogosphere with its more positive than negative tone.

It said: "This film — altered, as it is, from its source material — rates as intelligent and well-crafted entertainment. ... Taken purely on its own cinematic terms, ('The Golden Compass') can be viewed as an exciting adventure story with, at its core, a traditional struggle between good and evil, and a generalized rejection of authoritarianism."

The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, headed by Bill Donohue, had earlier called for a boycott of the movie, and it maintained its position in a Dec. 3 statement.

"The Catholic League wants Christians to stay away from this movie precisely because it knows that the film is bait for the books: Unsuspecting parents who take their children to see the movie may be impelled to buy the three books as a Christmas present," it said.

"And no parent who wants to bring their children up in the faith will want any part of these books," said the statement.

Jesuit Father James Martin, associate editor of Jesuit-run America magazine, quoted an article by religion journalist and author Hanna Rosin saying that Christians were offended by the portrayal of religion in the books.

"In this case, I agree with Donohue," Father Martin said in a Nov. 27 posting on the magazine's blog.

"Rosin's article seems to warn that when parents buy their kids something they expect to mirror 'The Chronicles of Narnia,' they might be surprised — or appalled — when they learn that it's less like ('Narnia' author) C.S. Lewis than Christopher Hitchens," a high-profile anti-religionist who made the best-seller list this year with the book "God Is Not Great: How Religion Poisons Everything."

In his column in the Nov. 24 issue of the Clarion Herald, newspaper of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, New Orleans Archbishop Alfred C. Hughes alluded to "The Golden Compass" in his column, "The Lure of Atheism."

"I do understand that the film is less blatant than the books but may serve as an inducement to the purchase of the books. Atheism is alive and well!" he said.

Archbishop Hughes added, "There is a spiritual war going on. The kingdom of Satan is at war with the kingdom of God. Rebellion, from the beginning, has been Satan's goal. His weapons are violence and deceit. In some ways, violence is easier to fight against."

The Pullman trilogy is an "ode to the joy of living in a physical world, a hymn to flesh, to exuberance, to the here and now, to free thought, imagination and feeling, to nobility of spirit," according to a review by Washington Post book critic Michael Dirda.

"I happen to think that these positive traits are entirely compatible with organized religion and so I choose to focus on the positive rather than on any anti-religious themes in these books," said Paul Lauritzen, director of the Program in Applied Ethics at Jesuit-run John Carroll University in Cleveland, commenting on Dirda's review.

Lauritzen is a contributor to dotCommonweal, a blog run by the Catholic magazine Commonweal.

"Movies are cultural moments, and those who resist this movie are doing so to build up a culture of respect for the Catholic Church and in so doing militantly oppose those artists who insult and denigrate it," said a posting on the American Papist blog, run by Thomas Peters, who describes himself as "a young lay Catholic with a master's degree in theology" who is studying in Washington.

Culture Watch

A roundup of Scripture, readings, films and more

Some children's books suitable for giving at Christmas

REVIEWED BY BARB FRAZE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The following children's books are suitable for Christmas giving:

"The Twelve Days of Christmas" by Betty Ann Schwartz, illustrated by Judith Moffatt. Preschoolers and young readers will be delighted with this colorful, sturdy book that illustrates the Christmas carol of the same name.

The illustrations are multicultural and include collage-type paper-doll ladies dancing, cornhusk-doll maids-a milking, etc. In the middle of each double-page illustration is a large Christmas tree, with a ribbon imprinted with pears, golden rings, geese, etc. — for each of the 12 days. However, the ribbons make the book unsuitable for smaller children (ages 3-5).

"St. Francis and the Wolf" by Jane Langton, illustrated by Ilse Plume.

Langton retells in a very readable fashion the fable of St. Francis of Assisi taming the wolf that was terrorizing the people of Gubbio, Italy.

The typeface, which resembles calligraphy, adds to the historical tone of the story. But what makes this book extra special are Plume's colored-pencil illustrations, with extraordinary detail, down to the texture of the cobblestones or a wooden door on a house.

Nonreaders will enjoy the illustrations, but young readers will enjoy the recounting of this tale (ages 5-up).

"Great Joy" by Kate DiCamillo, illustrated by Bagram Ibatoulline. This magnificently illustrated, heartwarming book is a different kind of holiday tale, one that addresses Christmas' true meaning.

When an organ grinder and monkey appear on a nearby corner a week before Christmas, young Frances is full of curiosity about them — she even wonders where they sleep and what they eat. As Frances' mother prepares the child's angel costume for the church Christmas pageant, Frances discovers the man and monkey sleep on the street.

Ibatoulline's large, detailed illustrations are softened around the edges to help give the feeling of older times, when the story occurs. At the end of the book, when Frances announces tidings of great joy in the pageant, her face and eyes shine in the illustration (ages 7-12).

"The Aurora County All-Stars" by Deborah Wiles. This book has it all: baseball, friendship, boys vs. girls issues, humor.

In short chapters with occasional updates from The Aurora County News, Wiles weaves the tale of 12-year-old House Jackson, who tries to work out reasons for the death of a family friend and what that means for him, his friends and the children of Mabel, Miss.

The characters are well developed, the story line is a hoot and the final product is guaranteed to be a home run with readers (ages 8-13).

"Annie's War" by Jacqueline Levering Sullivan.

World War II is over, but young Annie Leigh is still fighting her own internal war, hoping her father can be found alive and wondering what caused her uncle to turn mean.

When Annie's mother sends her to Washington state to live with her grandmother, Annie meets a young African-American woman who helps her learn firsthand about love, bigotry and courage (ages 8-12).

"Bunker 10" by J.A. Henderson. This futuristic novel is a real action tale that might initially leave older readers asking, "What happened?"

It combines suspense, intrigue and science fiction with biotechnological issues that a group of teen geniuses on a military installation — or at least, it seems like that is where they are — are facing (ages 12-up).

"Shape Me a Rhyme: Nature's Forms in Poetry" by Jane Yolen, photographs by Jason Stemple. Stemple's beautiful double-page photographs capture shapes in nature while Yolen's poems — full of action verbs, metaphors and adjectives — look at the shape from a different point of view.

Yolen includes other nouns, verbs and adjectives — superimposed on the photos — so that readers might write their own poems on the shape. The result is a visual and aesthetic delight (all ages).

"Peek in My Pocket" by David A. Carter. Carter's animals pop right up out of this large square book, so toddlers will want to keep turning pages.

Each animal has a pocket, behind which lies a surprise associated with a shape: a square jack-in-a-box, a diamond-shaped kite, etc. Carter's colorful illustrations and clever designs will give toddlers hours of fun (ages 1-3).

Advent is a time to allow God's grace to sink in

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

About 10 years ago I wrote a meditation on "obedience" in which I wondered what it would be like if I could do as dog owners do and send my children to obedience school, thereby outsourcing some of the challenging work of parenting.

At the time I had lots of food for my musings — my children were 3, 8 and 12, and as I recall they were all testing parental boundaries in their own unique ways.

Many times I felt that if they just paid attention and listened more closely, they could understand why my instructions were so important for their wellbeing. Of course, the whole point of the reflection was that when it came to obeying God, I probably didn't do much better than they.

The root of the word "obey" is the Latin word for "paying attention" or "listening." Fast forward 10 years: The Scriptures for this Sunday are "still" about obedience, and I am "still" pushing the limits and wearying God, much like Ahaz is doing in the Isaiah reading when he refuses to ask the Lord for a sign.

Ahaz isn't obeying because he just doesn't "get it," which means he isn't really listening to God but is hiding behind his own misguided piety.

In the Gospel, Joseph doesn't "get it" either, at least not at first. He already has decided, with the best of intentions, to quietly divorce his pregnant fiancé.

Thankfully, he takes a nap that suspends his own thoughts and plans, giving God enough access to communicate an alternate and more marvelous way. It's to Joseph's credit and our eternal benefit that when he awakened, he not only "got it," he "did as the Lord commanded and took Mary into his home."

St. Paul tells us that the "obedience of faith" — our ability not only to "get it" but to act on what we've heard — is brought about by "grace," which is simply God's unobstructed presence accomplishing God's purpose in our lives.

Advent is a time to suspend our own agendas, "pay attention," and surrender ourselves to that grace, no matter how many years it takes to sink in!

Questions:

In what ways have you "wornied the Lord" by stubbornly choosing your own way over God's? What can you do this Advent to pay closer attention to the message of grace?

Discussing the 'Mystery of the Mass'

COURTESY PHOTO

Father Matthew Buettner, pastor of St. Dorothy Church in Lincolnton, is pictured with Jesuit Father Mitch Pacwa during a taping of "EWTN Live!" at the Eternal Word Television Network studios in Alabama Dec. 5.

Father Buettner discussed his book, "Understanding the Mystery of the Mass," a collection of his popular series of columns of the same name, which appeared in The Catholic News & Herald during the Year of the Eucharist in 2005.

Each column addresses an aspect of the Mass, from preparation to concluding rites. The purpose, as well as that of the collected works in the book, is to "assist the Catholic faithful to better understand the mystery of the Mass so we can better assist at holy Mass and participate more fully," said Father Buettner.

Also, he said, "it serves to introduce non-Catholics to the tremendous gift that we have been given in the holy Mass."

The 90-page book may prove to be a great resource for RCIA, adult education and confirmation classes, he said, as well as for those whose Catholic education could use refreshing.

Pope among 12 religious leaders on CBS documentary 'In God's Name'

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The genesis for a documentary on why people use religion and faith as justification for some of history's most horrible acts came from one recent horrible act: the World Trade Center attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Jules Naudet, who with brother Gedeon produced the upcoming CBS documentary "In God's Name," collaborated with his older brother on "9/11," which aired on CBS five years ago.

Until the terrorist attacks, the Naudets were planning on making a documentary on the lives of firefighters. What resulted was something entirely different. And the effects of that tragedy provided motivation for "In God's Name."

"It was the moment where I was filming in the lobby of the World Trade Center, and hearing that horrible roar coming from above," the Paris-born Naudet told Catholic News Service in a Nov. 30 telephone interview from New York, his home for the past 18 years.

He and his brother were at the trade center that day because they had begun work on their film about firefighters.

"Having the first World Trade Center tower coming down on us, me running for my life and thinking I was going to die," Naudet said, "this strange question popped into my head: Why am I here? What is the meaning of life?"

"I survived that day, and for a few months these questions were in the back of my head and nagging me. I talked it over with my brother," he said.

They decided "why don't we go to see the people who should have these answers? These are kind of the spiritual beacons on our planet," he said.

Pope Benedict XVI is one of 12 spiritual leaders, five of them Christian, featured in the documentary. Non-Christians include the Dalai Lama, the chief rabbi of Israel, a Hindu spiritual leader and a prominent Sunni Muslim leader.

The pope was the only one of the 12 who did not sit down with the Naudets for a private interview.

"The Vatican historically has not given interviews. A pope has not given a private interview because his exclusivity in a way would not be fair," Naudet told CNS. "But I think we worked very closely with him. We went through all the archives and found features of His Holiness to find answers to the questions we had: What is the meaning of life? What is the future, his hopes, his fears?"

Through the archival research, they were able to find images "that never had been seen before," Naudet said.

"I think people will look differently on the pope when you see him. ... That will give them another dimension that people would not previously see," he said.

The Naudets can't say yet exactly what viewers will see when "In God's Name" hits the airwaves Dec. 23, 9-11 p.m. EST. They're still in the editing room when they're not granting interviews.

Making a film, Naudet said, is like "putting together this amazing and beautiful puzzle. It's hard to do."

The brothers calculated that over 165 days of filming "we have 180 hours of footage to condense into a two-hour special. It's heartbreaking in a way. Every time you remove something you feel like you're tearing a limb from yourself," Naudet said.

The two have been a filmmaking team since boyhood.

"We see slightly different things. We are a body with two different heads. We arrive at the same conclusion but from two different points of view," he added.

Raised as an agnostic by their parents, Naudet said his beliefs didn't change when making "In God's Name."

"I don't think I can say at the end of the journey itself after meeting these people that I found God," he told CNS, "but I found hope — which is what I was wrestling with. I did not know what kind of answers we were going to get. It was a little frightening."

"The lesson I get from this is that we have more to unite us than divide us," he said. "That is what gave me great hope."

messages and the phone has been turned off since.

"There have been no substantial leads as to where he has gone; nothing really changed (since Nov. 9)," said Scagnelli, who is serving as the family's media contact for the search efforts.

Scagnelli said Fleischmann's family is concentrating on getting the Charlotte-Mecklenburg police to treat the case as a criminal one, rather than just a missing person.

The search goes on

Fleischmann's family and friends made a concentrated effort to put his story in the public eye soon after his disappearance.

"Most people don't know how to react in a situation like this," said Scagnelli.

"We didn't know either, but we pushed and pushed for attention (from police and media)," he said. "We will keep on pushing until we can put this to rest."

Within days of his disappearance, a Web site, www.helpfindkyle.com, was launched and a "Help Find Kyle" groups were set up on the social networking sites Facebook and MySpace. Press releases were sent to news agencies across the country.

As of Dec. 12, more than 70,000 members had joined the groups on Facebook and MySpace.

Soon Fleischmann's story was appearing on CNN, America's Most Wanted and local news stations as far away as San Diego.

Last month, the Kyle Fleischmann Foundation was incorporated as a nonprofit organization to coordinate fundraising and search efforts.

The Charlotte Catholic High School Foundation and the Charlotte Catholic Alumni Association have both made contributions to the Kyle Fleischmann Foundation. The school's annual fund is contributing 10 percent of the donations from November and December, and 50 percent of the donations made by members of the class of 2002.

"Everyone is so shocked that something like this could happen to one of our own," said Jennifer Johnson, director of development and alumni affairs for Charlotte Catholic. "We keep praying for Kyle and that this will come to some sort of resolution."

Scagnelli said a Mass was celebrated recently at Charlotte Catholic for Fleischmann.

Heartache and hope

"We cannot begin to describe the pain, sadness and heartache that we feel right now," Fleischmann's family wrote on the Web site. "However, Kyle has shown us how to be strong."

"He has shown us how to have faith," the letter continued. "We will never give up until we find him."

Scagnelli said Fleischmann's friends and family will continue in their fundraising efforts to finance the search and a $25,000 reward for information regarding the whereabouts of Fleischmann or what happened on the night of his disappearance.

"As the search goes on, people's prayers and support are greatly appreciated," said Scagnelli.

"We believe that God has a reason for this happening, and we hope that we will see that reason soon," he said.

Henry Hyde: Persistent defender of life

Purpose of Christian education is to help change world, said congressman

Henry Hyde, the long-serving U.S. congressman, died recently at age 83. There are many reasons to praise Hyde's public service, but the most significant was his unswerving defense of human life.

The Hyde Amendment that bars federal funding for abortions is an important and, one can hope, lasting legacy.

My fondest memory of Henry Hyde actually begins with Mario Cuomo in mid-September 1984 at the University of Notre Dame. Cuomo had been invited with much national fanfare by the chair of theology to give a major address on religion and politics.

Cuomo's talk was eloquent, but in my view, deeply mistaken. It basically argued that it was inappropriate to use faith-based argumentation in public debate.

In short, it was an intellectual rationalization for the "I'm personally opposed to, but ..." position on abortion.

Back then, I was director of Notre Dame's White Center on Law and Government, and I asked Henry Hyde if he would consider responding to Cuomo's address.

Less than two weeks later on Sept. 24, 1984, the ever-witty Hyde opened his presentation to an overflow crowd in the law school, observing wryly: "Someone has remarked that this must be an election year; everyone's talking about theology."

Continuing, he set the context.

"The great bulk of commentary in recent weeks has been to the effect that the new church-state debate was caused by the rise of the religious new right, and its allies in the Catholic hierarchy.

"This is too simple an analysis, and fails to take measure of a longer-standing phenomenon on our national life: the rise of a militant secular separationist perspective on the constitutional questions that seek to rule religiously-based values 'out of order' in the public arena."

Directly answering Cuomo with civility and respect, Hyde reasoned that "it is clearly insufficient for a Catholic public official to hold that his or her personal, conscientious objection to abortion is a matter of personal choice for himself or herself and that is the end of the matter.

"It doesn't make sense to say an abortion takes a life and it should be allowed. If a fetus represents a human life, its disposition cannot be strictly a private matter."

So what did Hyde want public officials to do?

What he would do all his life: namely, let people know that abortion was not, he said, "just a Catholic issue or a Mormon issue, but a moral and a civil rights issue."

Public officials must not bemoan the lack of consensus; they must build one.

"I have always believed," Hyde continued, "that the purpose of a Christian education is to help us change the world. I have never heard a commencement address admonish graduates to 'go out there and don't change the world!'"

"Forgive some unsolicited advice," Hyde observed, "but you will find it awfully hard to go anywhere in the world without your soul tagging along. ... And you needn't be too deferential if someone tells you a pre-born baby's life is too trivial to protect.

"St. Ambrose said it's 'not only for every idle word must man render an account, but for every idle silence.'"

There was a palpable sense of grace in that room as Hyde spoke that day. As the late afternoon sun streamed through the leaded, gothic windows, he would close with these words:

"There once was a just man who lived many centuries ago who tried to save Sodom from destruction. He ignored the warnings of people who mocked him with silence and who shielded themselves with indifference."

"The just man," said Hyde, "still persisted."

"Taking pity on him, a child asked, 'Why do you go on?' The just man replied that in the beginning he thought he could change man. 'Today,' he said, 'I know I cannot. If I still shout and scream, it's to prevent them from changing me.'"

Henry Hyde hardly ever shouted or screamed, but he would persist. And now at the time of his death, there is no question but that Henry Hyde's most profound witness was that he chose life.

Requiescat in pace.

Entitlement and ingratitude

Youths need reminder that gifts are undeserved

The weeks between Thanksgiving and Christmas provide me with an annual context for reflection on the relationship of entitlement to ingratitude.

Thanksgiving, of course, puts the accent where it should be — on giving, saying and doing thanks. Men and women of faith look to God first and foremost for expressions of gratitude on Thanksgiving Day.

Even nonbelievers, I suspect, welcome this American invention of a secular feast day for the occasion it provides to look left and right, if not up to heaven, to say thanks for benefits, if not blessings; and for good luck, if not the generosity of the good Lord.

Once in the thanks-saying, thanksgiving, thanks-doing mood of late November, it is quite literally a short step to Christmas, which, one might expect, should be a season of great gratitude.

However, I've noticed at Christmastime and in other seasons of the year a rising sense of entitlement in America, especially among the young. I've begun to conclude that ingratitude is the infrastructure of entitlement.

St. Ignatius of Loyola once remarked that "ingratitude is at the root of all sinfulness." He was on to something.

When ingratitude takes over one's outlook, there is an erosion of a sense of obligation, including moral obligation.

"Much obliged" is a way the old American vernacular had of saying thanks. If you have nothing to be thankful for, i.e., if you feel entitled to everything you have and might receive, you are unencumbered by a sense of any obligation.

You are free to be your selfish, solipsistic, narcissistic self. Total self-absorption is another word for sin.

A decade or more ago I found myself describing students I was then meeting in the college classroom as characterized by a sense of entitlement. They "deserved" good grades, good health, good jobs, the best of everything the world had to offer.

Cultural reinforcement for this attitude of entitlement came and continues to come through their entertainment and advertising, their words and music, their images and apparel.

There are cures for all their ills, solutions for all their problems, answers (with or without the help of a search engine) to all their questions.

It is all within reach. It is theirs for the taking. No need to say thanks.

This outlook has seeped down into high school and middle school — to the teens and "tweens" who never say thanks.

So, what did you get for Christmas? Now that you've got it, are you happier than before?

Are you disappointed that it wasn't what you really wanted or, worse, that it is not as good as something someone you know has received?

Many years ago I pressed a child for a working definition of the word gift. "A gift is when somebody gives you something," she said.

What if I had loaned you a dollar earlier and now I'm giving it back? Here, take the dollar. Is that a gift? It fits your definition. A moment's pondering prompted the youngster to revise her definition and say, "A gift is when you get something you don't deserve."

How true. How very appropriate for Christmas reflection. What a positive indicator that we have, through an awareness of gratitude, a way of protecting ourselves from the virus of entitlement.

Christmas will be a good deal merrier and happier for all if we realize that the gifts we exchange are not only undeserved, but symbols to remind us that Christmas is a worldwide celebration of the gift of salvation to which none of us has a claim, except through our faith in Christ Jesus the Lord.

Response to 'Compass' review

In the Dec. 7 issue, Harry Forbes and John Mulderig gave their critical opinion of the recently released movie, "The Golden Compass." While the movie itself may not be "blatantly anti-Catholic," the author and books from which it springs certainly are.

It is a danger to simply take the movie, as the reviewers suggest, only on its own cinematic terms because the movie encourages the book, which encourages the trilogy of books that are blatantly anti-Catholic and anti-Christian.

The reviewers go on to suggest that rather than banning the film or books, parents might instead talk through any thorny philosophical issues with their teens. Such philosophical discussions might better take place prior to contact with the material so children might realize the importance of avoiding those things that are not Godly and not in harmony with the Catholic faith.

It is unfortunate in a day and age when attacks on the church and Christianity are rather common that such a review would come from an office of the USCCB. Thankfully, the U.S. bishops appear to have recognized this and have since withdrawn the review.

The problems with the film and books have been highlighted regularly by the Catholic League. Its efforts may be behind the film's opening weekend being far less successful than expected.

More than just another day in paradise

'Spe Salvi' offers much to contemplate at Christmastime

Many people find the prospect of eternal life unattractive because living forever appears to be more a curse than a gift.

"To live always without end — this, all things considered, can only be monotonous and ultimately unbearable," one writer said.

What is this? Another religion-bashing article from a hostile press? The meanderings of a blogger or the vitriol of a shock jock?

None of the above. These are among the thoughts of Pope Benedict XVI expressed in his latest encyclical on the topic of Christian hope released Nov. 30.

Encyclicals rarely dominate the news nowadays unless they can be portrayed as positioning a pope to oppose something that has popular appeal in the world.

Presumptuous as it may be to say, "Spe Salvi" is really a good read.

Although some parts may be of particular interest to theologians and scholars, "Spe Salvi" is remarkably accessible with much to say to the contemporary individual in language and presentation that is serious but not ponderous.

The style is reminiscent of being in a classroom, with the pope much like the professor he is with language such as: "Let us summarize what has emerged so far," and, after a digression, "Let us return to our topic."

All encyclicals of course must be valued as serious teaching documents. But they can also be of the type that causes a reader to say, "Hey, listen to this."

There is enough rich, thought-provoking material in "Spe Salvi" to provide small-group discussions months of material.

The principle theme of this encyclical is the connection of faith and hope; Christians have a future and know that their life will not end in emptiness. Salvation is not individual. Coming to know God is to receive hope — if not to take it for granted.

"We who have always lived with the Christian concept of God and have grown accustomed to it have almost ceased to notice that we possess the hope that ensues from a real encounter with this God," the pope wrote.

In addition to his main theme, he offers some thought-provoking reflections: "Eternal life" is a term meant to describe the unknown for which we are hoping. The word "eternal" suggests interminable and thus frightening, Pope Benedict notes.

The word "life" is understood to be the life we know and love and do not want to lose.

But he suggests eternity is not an unending succession of days on the calendar but something more like a supreme moment of satisfaction "like plunging into the ocean of infinite love when time — before or after — no longer exists."

Just that should keep a faith-sharing group in business for some time.

Another "thought starter":

"Christians in the context of their knowledge and experience must learn anew in what their hope truly consists, what they have to offer to the world and what they cannot offer."

The Christian perspective is that hope makes sense as the human response to a loving God.

"This trust is reflected in the hearts of little ones, of the humble, who despite everyday problems and trials, they try to do their best and accomplish that little bit of good which, however in the eyes of God is a great deal: in the family, the workplace, in school and in various sectors of society."

A thoughtful, reflective reading of "Spe Salvi" is not only a good Advent exercise, it can be an early Christmas gift to remind us of the life-changing hope that Christ brought into the world.

Pope says unity in Christ makes friends out of strangers

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Being united in Christ makes friends even out of complete strangers, Pope Benedict XVI said at his weekly general audience.

"Without having met, we know each other because we are members of one body," the body of Christ and the church, he said quoting a letter by St. Paulinus to St. Augustine.

During his Dec. 12 general audience in the Vatican's Paul VI hall, the pope continued a series of talks on the teachers of the early church with a catechesis on St. Paulinus, the bishop of Nola in southern Italy.

The pope said St. Paulinus used his gifts as poet and lover of literature to serve the church. Pope Benedict quoted the saint as saying "for me, the only art — faith — is Christ, my poetry."

St. Paulinus' correspondence with many contemporary churchmen revealed his sense of communion, the pope said.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In our catechesis on the great teachers of the early church, we now turn to St. Paulinus, the bishop of Nola in southern Italy.

A native of Bordeaux in Gaul, Paulinus became the Roman governor of Campania, where, after encountering the depth of popular devotion to St. Felix Martyr, he was led to embrace the Christian faith.

After the tragic loss of their first child, he and his wife sold their goods and undertook a life of chastity and prayer. Ordained a priest and then bishop of Nola, Paulinus distinguished himself by his charity to the poor during the troubled times of the barbarian invasions.

A man of letters and a gifted poet, Paulinus placed his art at the service of Christ and the church. In his poetry and his vast correspondence, Paulinus expressed his deep faith and his love of the poor.

His letters to such contemporary churchmen as Sts. Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome and Martin of Tours, reflect his asceticism, his deep sense of the church's communion and his cultivation of the practice of spiritual friendship as a means of experiencing that communion within the mystery of Christ's mystical Body, enlivened by the Holy Spirit.

A Christmas gift for the Holy Land

Catholics can help broker peace in war-torn land

History — both ancient and contemporary — reveals that humanity has a powerful tendency toward war.

But in the first reading of the First Sunday of Advent, we heard Isaiah the prophet remind us that the way of God is peace:

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; one nation shall not raise the sword against another, nor shall they train for war again."

As we look around us today, however, it seems like God's way of peace is far off into the future. The sins of arrogance, nationalism, anger and selfishness continue to feed the insatiable appetite of the god of war.

Yet there's hope. Advent is the ideal time to remember that God — Emmanuel — is with us. And, therefore, all things are possible, even peace!

One hopeful sign was the recent Annapolis Conference in Maryland.

There Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas and Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert promised to "make every effort" to complete a total peace agreement by this time next year.

And the Bush administration promised to be robustly engaged in the negotiations. But a promise is one thing. Following through to its realization is yet another.

Father Jim Kofski, associate on Middle East issues for the Maryknoll Office for Global Concerns and a former longtime resident of Egypt and Palestine, explained to me that since Abbas is in a far weaker position than Olmert, it is essential that the United States be seen as a fair broker.

Father Kofski said that hundreds of Israeli military checkpoints in the occupied West Bank make normal Palestinian commerce impossible. Traveling from Ramallah to Bethlehem, for example, a journey that should take just half an hour, instead takes several hours.

"Many people trying to reach a hospital have died waiting at the checkpoints," said Father Kofski.

Making matters worse is the Israeli separation barrier which extends into Palestinian territory.

Fair access to water is another major injustice. Israeli settlements built on top of water aquifers in the occupied West Bank are causing water levels to drop for many Palestinians.

And yet Israel will not allow Palestinians to drill new wells.

Father Kofski said Catholics can help bring peace to the Holy Land by contacting Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, asking her to act as a fair broker by urging Israel to return the occupied West Bank to Palestine and to dismantle most of its settlements there.

Making a Difference

TONY MAGLIANO

Not only is this just, but it is necessary for the creation of a connected Palestinian nation.

Also request that she urge Israel to make Jerusalem an international city and allow the Palestinians to make East Jerusalem their capitol. Ask her to urge Israel to provide fair compensation to every displaced Palestinian refugee.

Although the militant Palestinian group Hamas is hostile toward Israel, peace will not happen without their cooperation. Therefore, urge Rice to open channels of dialogue with Hamas.

Finally, ask her to insist that both Israel and a future Palestinian state guarantee full religious freedom for all.

It would also be helpful to ask your congressional delegation to urge the Bush administration to push forward on the above points.

With our persistent prayers and actions we can help Israelis, Palestinians and neighboring Arab nations finally live together in peace.

Now wouldn't that be a wonderful 2008 Christmas gift!

Local resident Hilda Berkley prays near a painting of Mary breast-feeding the infant Jesus at the Milk Grotto chapel in Bethlehem, West Bank, Dec. 5. The grotto is believed to be a place where Mary fed Jesus as the Holy Family fled to Egypt. Pilgrims, especially women who want to conceive, have visited the grotto for centuries.

The power of 'milk powder'

Bethlehem's Milk Grotto brings faith, hope and sometimes babies

BY JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

BETHLEHEM, West Bank — The rows of framed letters and baby pictures are testimony that the Milk Grotto — where Mary is said to have nursed Jesus as the Holy Family fled to Egypt — has been much more than a pilgrimage to many couples.

One picture on the wall of the Milk Grotto's chapel shows a mother from Argentina happily nursing her newborn baby.

In another letter a mother from Spain wrote, "Carmen is a gift from heaven." A couple from Ireland wrote, "In thanksgiving and deep gratitude to Our Blessed Lady for our dear son Jamie."

Another mother from India described how she and her husband had given up on a child after nine years of trying to conceive. Now, she wrote, after the birth of their daughter, her "whole life will be a life of thanksgiving."

From Venezuela another woman wrote how after five miscarriages she gave birth to a "miracle baby, Leonardo Jose."

One after another, parents from such far-flung places as Sri Lanka, the United States, Canada, Bermuda and England have written about the miraculous birth of their children after having prayed using the "milk powder" from the grotto.

"Throughout the centuries this has been a place for special devotion for women ... who are trying to conceive," said Franciscan Brother Lawrence, an American who oversees the grotto and chapel for the Franciscan Custody of the Holy Land.

According to tradition, he said, a few drops of Mary's milk dropped onto the cave floor as she stopped to nurse her child.

"Women who can't have children have a very hard time. With this prayer they are filled," he said.

Some people have even brought their babies back to the small shrine inside the grotto to give thanks, he said.

The grotto is at least 2,000 years old and the early Christians came to pray here, he said, but the first structure was built over it around 385.

The faithful have venerated the spot for its powers as early as the fourth century, he said, and local women of all faiths and denominations come here to pray for children, taking with them bits of the "milk powder" from the soft limestone found throughout the grotto.

Holes the width of a finger can be found in several spots in the grotto ceiling of the newly renovated shrine, where over the years people have scraped out the fine dust to take home with them.

About 10 years ago when Brother Lawrence came to the grotto the Franciscans began preparing small packets of the limestone powder to give people for a small donation. They do not sell the powder online, he said, because the number of requests would be overwhelming and expensive to fill.

Plenty of limestone to last for years is in blocked-off places in the grotto, said Brother Lawrence.

Sometimes friends and relatives of a couple trying to conceive have visited the shrine and take back the powder with them, and people have written attesting to the powder's power to heal illnesses and reverse breach babies, he said.

The renovations on the shrine, which were started three years ago and completed at the end of 2006, have revealed sixth- and seventh-century Byzantine mosaic floors. The walls and ceiling were cleaned of soot from centuries of oil lamps and candle-burning.

The structure was made handicapped-accessible, and a larger chapel was added on the second level to accommodate pilgrim groups who want to celebrate Mass there.

A local Mass is held every Wednesday afternoon in the small church adjacent to the grotto.

The Sacramentine Nuns hold a round-the-clock prayer vigil in shifts at a special altar behind a glass window in a cordoned-off part of the shrine.

Faithful of all religions and denominations continue to venerate the grotto, said Brother Lawrence.

Every denomination has a different form of prayer with the powder, he said, but according to Catholic tradition both the husband and wife must drink a bit of the powder mixed with milk or water for nine days and recite the prayer for the third joyful mystery of the rosary, said Brother Lawrence.

"They pray from their heart asking Our Lady of the Milk for intercession in healing," he said, noting that he has heard of 1,700 babies born in the last 10 years and has read every one of the 400 letters that have been sent to the shrine, including 60 in the last six months.

"The joy is immense," he said. "When you have faith you can move mountains."

Brother Lawrence said he knows there are people who are skeptical about the powers of such holy relics, and the powder's mystery probably will not work on those who do not have faith.

"Faith is a gift from God," he said. "We who have been baptized have to be open to the Spirit. We need for our faith to be alive and that will enrich us."

CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — When Catholics fulfill their right and duty to share their faith with others, they are not engaging in proselytism or showing contempt for the beliefs of others, said a new document from the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

Sharing the Christian faith with the hope that another may accept it is a command given by Christ to his followers and is a natural result of wanting others to share something special, said the "Doctrinal Note on Some Aspects of Evangelization."

Cardinal William J. Levada, prefect of the doctrinal congregation, presented the document at a Dec. 14 Vatican press conference.

CHARLOTTE — Older Catholics wanting to re-experience the Catholic Mass as they remember it pre-1962, or young people curious about the "old Mass" will soon be able to attend such Masses in various churches throughout the Diocese of Charlotte.

In July 2007, in the long-awaited and much-debated document 'Summorum Pontificum,' the pope relaxed restrictions on the use of the Latin-language liturgy that predates the Second Vatican Council.

The pope said that Mass celebrated according to the 1962 Roman Missal should be made available in every church where groups of the faithful desire it. The Mass from the Roman Missal, in use since 1970, remains the ordinary form of the Mass,

GOD ON THE GRIDIRON

Faith helps football players on, off the field

INDIANAPOLIS (CNS) — After beating the Chicago Bears in Super Bowl XLI in February, the Indianapolis Colts stormed to another strong start, winning their first seven games of the 2007-08 season. Even with a faith-filled head coach like Tony Dungy, it might have been easy for players on the team to think they are invincible.

But the players know better. And consecutive losses to the New England Patriots and the San Diego Chargers helped bring that reality into perspective, as have serious injuries suffered by some of the team's star players.

Father Peter Gallagher, volunteer chaplain of the Colts, said coping with injuries is an opportunity for football players to grow closer to Christ.

"If we can't associate even those difficult things in our lives with Christ's experience of those same things, then we're really not fully trusting in his message and in his presence in our lives," he said.

Linebacker Rocky Boiman and former Colt Keith O'Neil have experienced the effects of injuries this season. Both have relied on their Catholic faith to keep them grounded through the many twists and turns of their football careers.

Although injuries make his profession a tenuous one, Boiman said they aren't part of his mind-set.

"I never try to focus on them because you get negative thoughts in your mind," he said. "And whatever happens, happens. Football or not, I know I'm going to be fine in life. I know I'd have another calling in life."

Being confident and striving for excellence despite the risks are principles instilled in Boiman at St. Xavier High School in Cincinnati and reinforced at the University of Notre Dame in Indiana.

"You always strive to be the best person and everything you can be," Boiman said. "I think that's something that Notre Dame always preached, in the classroom and outside the classroom. I think it was definitely something that helped shape who I am."

He added, "To those who have been given much, much is expected. I try to live up to that."

But success doesn't always come easily or stay around for long. O'Neil was on top of the football world last February as a reserve linebacker for the world champion Colts. But a series of lingering injuries contributed to his being cut from the team Aug. 26 — his 27th birthday.

As difficult as this was for O'Neil, it's been a part of his life from the very beginning — literally. O'Neil's father was cut from the New England Patriots on the day that Keith was born in 1980.

Such coincidences might have led O'Neil to think God was playing a cruel joke. But he doesn't view it that way.

"I kind of liked it," O'Neil said. "It's something between my father and God and my birthday. I kind of embraced that, knowing that my father got cut on the day I was born. Maybe I was supposed to play in the NFL because of that."

O'Neil's family ties go beyond football and extend to his faith.

"I grew up in a Catholic family that went to Mass every Sunday and had prayer at night," he said. "It was a very close-knit family who turned to God and to Jesus in times of need."

O'Neil hasn't been back on the field yet. But he hopes to play in the NFL again and has received calls from some interested teams.

"But if I can't (get back to playing), we just believe that it's in God's hands and we'll make the most of it," he said.

Pro-life official praises Senate bill aimed to help pregnant women

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A U.S. bishops' pro-life official gave high marks to a bill introduced in the U.S. Senate in December that would provide resources and support to pregnant women.

"The bill will empower pregnant women to make healthy choices for themselves and their children, born and unborn," said Deirdre McQuade, director of planning and information in the U.S. bishops' Secretariat for Pro-Life Activities.

Kristen Day, executive director of Democrats for Life of America, the group that helped craft the legislation, said it is designed to reduce the number of abortions by aiding women who feel they have no other option.

The Pregnant Women's Support Act mirrors nearly identical legislation introduced in the House earlier in 2007.

The measure "is truly a common-ground initiative to reduce the number of abortions in the United States," said McQuade Dec. 14, noting the bill includes "vital provisions supporting pregnant and parenting university students, a population particularly at risk for considering abortion."

The act would ensure that pregnant women are not denied coverage by insurance companies; establish a toll-free number for resources during pregnancy and after birth; and provide parenting education in maternity group homes.

It also would provide qualified new mothers with free home visits by registered nurses, and codify the current regulation allowing states to provide Children's Health Insurance Program coverage to unborn children and their mothers.

The bill also encourages adoption by expanding adoption-credit and adoption-assistance programs.

McQuade said the legislation gives Congress "a long-overdue opportunity to help make abortion rare."

FROM THE VATICAN

Papal nuncio satisfied with progress after Vatican-Israeli meetings

JERUSALEM (CNS) — The papal nuncio to Israel said he was satisfied with the outcome of two days of Vatican-Israeli meetings on taxation issues, social security and the status of church personnel, although no final agreement was reached.

"This meeting was not meant to be a conclusion. This is a process of ongoing meetings," said Archbishop Antonio Franco, papal nuncio.

"These are all difficult issues. Of course it is always a bit frustrating when you don't reach a 100 percent solution, but overall I am satisfied. Since last year there has been considerable progress," he said.

He said he had sensed a "spirit and a position" and a "political will" to find a solution.

"It is not easy for us or for them," he said.

Negotiations on the issues resumed last year after a long hiatus, and the nuncio said that, over time, agreements had been reached on several issues. The issues yet to be resolved are the "most sensitive," he said.

Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Aryeh Mekel said the Dec. 12-13 meetings were intense and no one left the room. The director-general of the Foreign Ministry, Aaron Abramovich, headed the Israeli delegation.

"Agreements were not met on the two core issues," Mekel said. "It is complicated but we made some progress. We presented some compromises."

Archbishop Franco said church officials had to be confident.

"We can find a solution and agreement on the most delicate issues. We have to be (hopeful) and pray," he said. "To (reach) a small achievement is also an achievement."

Vatican says al-Qaida criticism of pope shows fear of dialogue

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican said recent criticism of Pope Benedict XVI by an al-Qaida leader reflected extremist fears of interreligious dialogue.

Al-Qaida's deputy leader, Ayman al-Zawahri, said in a videotape that the pope had offended Muslims and that Saudi Arabian King Abdullah Aziz should not have met with the pontiff in November.

It was the first meeting between a pope and a reigning Saudi king.

Asked about al-Zawahri's comments, Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, Vatican spokesman, said Dec. 18 that the papal meeting with the Saudi Arabian leader and the ongoing dialogue between the Vatican and Muslim scholars "is a positive fact for the entire Muslim world."

"The fact that these voices that explicitly want to dialogue and work for peace have a growing importance in Islam is evidently something that worries those who don't want dialogue," the Vatican spokesman said.

Father Lombardi said al-Zawahri's negative reference to Pope Benedict "is not surprising, nor does it particularly worry us."

He said he thought the remarks should not be given great weight.

In October, 138 Muslim experts wrote a letter to the pope asking for new dialogue efforts based on shared values. In response, the pope invited a varied group of Muslim scholars to meet with him and Vatican experts sometime next year.

U.N. vote against death penalty seen as victory

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A Dec. 18 vote by the U.N. General Assembly to ratify a resolution calling for a moratorium on executions "with a view to abolishing the death penalty" was hailed as a "victory for the culture of life" by a Catholic activist opposed to capital punishment.

Although the resolution is not binding on U.N. member states, the vote has strong implications, according to Mario Maraziti, spokesman for the Rome-based Sant'Egidio Community and head of its campaign against the death penalty.

The resolution — approved

104-54, with 29 abstentions — states that "there is no conclusive evidence of the death penalty's deterrent value and that any miscarriage or failure of justice in the death penalty's implementation is irreversible and irreparable."

Maraziti said a vote in favor of the moratorium signifies capital punishment is not just a judicial matter for individual countries but a public issue that "concerns human rights," places capital punishment under a "higher moral and justice standard respectful of human life" and accelerates the process of abolishing the death penalty in more countries.

The feast day commemorates a brown-skinned Virgin Mary's miraculous apparition to St. Juan Diego at Tepeyac, Mexico, in December 1531. She left her image on his "tilma," or cloak. For 476 years her image has been a symbol of unity, peace, compassion and hope for people around the world. The apparitions are credited with the conversion to Catholicism of millions of indigenous people of Central and South America.

Father James Pereda celebrates the extraordinary form of the Mass at St. Pius X Chapel in Uniondale, N.Y., July 8. The Diocese of Charlotte is training priests to celebrate the Latin-language liturgy that predates the Second Vatican Council.

while celebration according to the 1962 missal is the extraordinary form.

"The main benefit of Pope Benedict's document is two-fold," Bishop Peter J. Jugis said. "It recognizes the beauty and legitimacy of the extraordinary form of the Mass and promotes the unity of the faithful because, as Pope Benedict has noted, there are people devoted to this form of the Mass."

"Both forms of the Mass are legitimate means of worship; we don't want to hurt or leave people behind because of their devotion to earlier liturgical forms," said Bishop Jugis.

"We've had a good response from our priests wanting to celebrate using the 1962 missal," said Bishop Jugis. "However, many of them need to learn the rubrics and details of the 1962 missal."

Therefore, 14 priests from the Diocese of Charlotte participated in a five-day training session on the 1962 missal in Hickory Dec 17-21. They studied the rituals of the missal and the prayers, which are recited in Latin.

But diocesan priests won't be the only ones brushing up on their Latin.

"Catechesis will be necessary for parishioners, as well, to fully appreciate the Mass of the 1962 missal," said Bishop Jugis. "The major differences between the ordinary and extraordinary forms of the Mass you'll notice are the priests' orientation during the liturgy and the use of Latin prayers."

In the extraordinary form, the priest and the people face the same direction in worship, as the priest leads his flock in prayer. Prior to the Second Vatican Council, a church's altar was placed against the wall at the back of the sanctuary. During the consecration of the Eucharist, the priest therefore faced away from the congregation.

The Second Vatican Council decreed that a church's altar should be placed in a central location in the sanctuary, allowing a priest to face the congregation during the consecration.

Bishop Jugis said that a priest celebrating the extraordinary form of the Mass will now stand in front of the altar, between it and the congregation.

The extraordinary form of the Mass will be offered in certain churches beginning in 2008. Catholics interested in attending a Mass should contact the office of their vicar forane — a priest who coordinates pastoral activities among groups of churches — to find out Mass times and locations.

"It will be up to each individual priest to determine when he is comfortable celebrating the Mass," the bishop.

Since his ordination four years ago, the bishop said he has received letters from all areas of the diocese requesting the extraordinary form of the Mass.

"These are individuals who are grateful that Pope Benedict XVI has encouraged the wider use of the 1962 missal," he said. "Going forward, Pope Benedict said we're not going to leave anyone behind. We're all going forward together."

Document: Catholics have duty, right to share Gospel

In addition to reminding Catholics of their obligation to share the Gospel with others, the document harshly criticized Catholics who believe that every religion offers salvation, and it defended Catholics in some Orthodox countries from charges of proselytism when they welcome into the Catholic Church people who freely ask to join.

"For a long time, the reason for evangelization has not been clear to many among the Catholic faithful," the document said.

"It is even stated that the claim to have received the gift of the fullness of God's revelation masks an attitude of intolerance and (is) a danger to peace," it said.

In reality, the document said, when Christians share their faith with another they are responding to the right and the need the other has to hear the truth and to accept or reject it.

Cardinal Levada said the document, which already was being prepared when Pope Benedict XVI was still prefect of the congregation, was the result of a growing "confusion about whether Catholics should give testimony about their faith in Christ," particularly to people who already belong to another religion.

Respect for another, he said, absolutely forbids any use of "coercion or tactics unworthy of the Gospel," but it also means sharing one's blessings, the greatest of which is the good news of salvation in Christ.

Growing 'seeds of truth'

Indian Cardinal Ivan Dias, prefect of the Congregation for Evangelization and a member of the doctrinal congregation, also participated in the document's presentation and spoke about the need to balance respect for other religions with the desire to lead others to faith in Christ.

When talking with members of other religious traditions, "Christians must try to discover the action of the Holy Spirit, that is, the 'seeds of truth,' as the Second Vatican Council called them," that are present in those religions, he said.

— Cardinal Ivan Dias

At the same time, one must try "to lead them, without any superiority complex, to a full understanding of the truth in Jesus Christ."

"Even if the various non-Christian religions possess seeds of truth planted in them by the Holy Spirit and the people who follow them may be saved, that does not mean that the proclamation of the good news of Jesus Christ is irrelevant," Cardinal Dias said.

"It is our task to help the seeds of truth grow so that they find their fullness in Christ," he said.

Nigerian Cardinal Francis Arinze, prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments and also a member of the doctrinal congregation, told reporters, "The sharing of our Catholic faith with others who do not yet know Christ should be regarded as a work of love, provided that it is done with full respect for their human dignity and freedom."

"Indeed, if a Christian did not try to spread the Gospel by sharing the excellent knowledge of Jesus Christ with others, we could suspect that Christian either of lack of total conviction of the faith or of selfishness and laziness in not wanting to share the full and abundant means of salvation with his fellow human beings," Cardinal Arinze said.

The universal mission

Archbishop Angelo Amato, secretary of the doctrinal congregation, said the document is a practical follow-up to the 2000 document "Dominus Iesus," on the uniqueness of Christ and universal salvation in him.

Despite the 2000 document's insistence on the importance of proclaiming salvation in Jesus Christ alone, he said, "there still exists a coolness toward missionary activity" in many parts of the church.

In addition, he said, the document is an affirmation of the right and duty of Catholics to share their faith with others who ask to know more, whether those asking belong to other religions or to other Christian communities.

He said that when non-Catholics are free to minister to their members in predominantly Catholic countries, it only makes sense that the Catholic Church would have the same right to offer pastoral care to Catholics in predominantly non-Catholic countries.

Besides China, where all religion is restricted, and some Muslim countries where Christians cannot openly practice their faith, the issue also involved some parts of the former Soviet Union, where the Russian Orthodox Church has accused the Catholic Church of proselytism, or trying to convince members of the traditionally Orthodox population to become Catholic.

The document said: "The mission of the church is universal and is not restricted to specific regions of the earth. Evangelization, however, is undertaken differently according to the different situations in which it occurs."

Asked specifically about the Russian Orthodox claims, Cardinal Levada said, "Especially in a country like Russia where there were long years of atheistic communism, one must respect the sensitivity of the Orthodox, who are concerned about rekindling Christianity in the life of their people."

While some evangelical groups have launched proselytism campaigns in Russia, he said, the Catholic Church is there to offer pastoral care to Catholics.

"We do not proselytize, but it can happen that someone has an encounter with the Catholic faith and wants to join the Catholic Church," the cardinal said.

In such situations, the Catholic Church must respect the individual's conscience and help him or her to follow it.

Christmas joy comes from Jesus' presence, says pope

anointing its altar with oil.

While the third Sunday of Advent, called Gaudete Sunday, includes a special invitation to rejoice, he said, "in truth, all of Advent is a call to joy because 'the Lord is coming,' because he comes to save us."

Preparing for Christmas, the pope said, the Mass readings "constantly repeat that we must wake from the sleep of habit and mediocrity; we must abandon sadness and discouragement; we must strengthen our hearts because the Lord is near."

Pope Benedict told the parishioners that all their hard work and sacrifice in building the church and worrying over every detail should be a symbol of the sacrifice and care with which they prepare their hearts for the Lord's coming and their lives for living as Christians.

Returning to the Vatican for the midday recitation of the Angelus, the pope told people in St. Peter's Square that the joy of Advent and Christmas comes from knowing that God, in Jesus Christ, became one of us.

"Christian joy arises from this certainty: God is near, he is with me, he is with us in joy and sorrow, in health and sickness, as a friend and faithful spouse," the pope said.

Pope Benedict said the fact that Christian joy remains despite sorrow and struggle can be seen in the life of Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta, who had long periods of feeling that God had abandoned her, but she continued to smile and to take God's love to the poor and the dying.

"Yes, joy enters the hearts of those who place themselves at the service of the small and the poor. In those who love that way, God takes up residence and the soul rejoices," he said.

"If, instead, one makes happiness an idol, he takes the wrong path, and the joy of which Jesus speaks is truly difficult to find," the pope said.

At the end of the audience, Pope Benedict blessed statues of the baby Jesus that children brought to the square in preparation for placing them in Nativity scenes at home and at school.

While he wished the children a Merry Christmas, he asked their parents, priests and teachers "to collaborate with enthusiasm for the Christian education of the little ones."

Children build faith through Bethlehem Village

NEWTON — First-century Bethlehem recently came alive in Newton. Children in the faith formation program at St. Joseph Church took part in a Bethlehem Village group program this month.

Bethlehem Village was one of the Holy Land group adventures typically used in vacation Bible school programs, but parish faith formation director Kris Mulligan adapted the format for her class for the Advent season.

The 200 children participating in the program recreated Bethlehem in the time of Christ's birth and got hands-on experience with first-century Bethlehem foods, crafts, jobs and games.

Parish catechists and youth group members played the roles of shopkeepers, actors, song leaders and census takers. The children were separated into groups representing the 12 tribes of Israel to learn and teach each other about their respective tribes.

They also studied the Sabbath traditions in which the Holy Family would have participated.

The main points emphasized that they were to be prepared for the coming of the Savior, Jesus Christ.

"The children are given 'chores' to do each week to enforce that week's point, such as to pray, to do a random act of kindness, to tell a friend about how much God loves them, and so on," said Mulligan.

"This is a great program that gives children the opportunity to think about what it might have really been like in Bethlehem 2,000 years ago and this helps to build their faith," said Father James Collins, pastor of St. Joseph Church.

Mulligan said the program was exciting not only for the children, but also for the teens and adults involved "who are not just hearing about the birth of Jesus in class but are getting to experience the tastes, smells, sounds and traditions that surrounded the birth of our Messiah."

"The Bethlehem Village really makes us think about the culture at the time of Jesus — what people wore, how they lived," said Terri Schell, a youth group volunteer.

"It made me think about how different things were then and how much more work it took to do the things that we take for granted today, such as making clothes, grinding food — just simple everyday things," said Schell.

"I can't think of a better way to prepare ourselves in this season of Advent," said Mulligan.

Since the parish adopted the SPRED program four years ago, persons with developmental disabilities have formed a small faith community and now participate more fully in the life of the parish.

SPRED members and their families participated as lectors and liturgical ministers during the Mass.

"Being able to celebrate the Eucharist for the members of our SPRED community and for our other parish members who were present was a beautiful experience for me as a new priest," said Father Toole.

"The St. Matthew SPRED program is an incredible witness to the Gospel message. It is our special friends who are the greatest gifts that have been given to our church," he said.

The Christmas Shoppe, which ran Nov. 25-28, allowed students to purchase gifts for loved ones while helping people beyond their community. The shop offered gifts from Ten Thousand Villages, an organization that helps artisans in poor countries around the world; Heifer International, a charitable organization that provides livestock to the poor; and free-trade coffee.

Two books worth reading about black Catholics

REVIEWED BY CAROLE GREENE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Sharon C. Knecht's "Oblate Sisters of Providence: A Pictorial History" is an irresistible read, boasting remarkable photographs of the sisters and their young students from 1879 to 2007.

This book is the story of "the first sustained order of women religious of African descent in the world."

It tells of trials, togetherness and deep faith that began in the spring of 1828 when four Catholic women of African descent formed a women's religious order "expressly for the purpose of educating young girls of color."

Knecht blends photographs of those first Oblates with those of current members whose motherhouse has been in Baltimore since the 1930s. Of approximately 16,000 historical photographs in the Oblates' archives dating from the 1850s, more than 250 were selected for publication.

"The images record Oblate-related and secular life in at least 20 states, Cuba, several Caribbean Islands, Central America and Europe," Knecht says.

The book is organized by subjects, rather than chronologically. The majority of the photographs range from the 1880s through the 1960s and speak broadly of the Oblates' ministry and the countless people whose lives they impacted.

Camille Cosby, a major benefactor of the sisters along with husband Bill Cosby, remembers in the foreword her days attending one of the sisters' schools, St. Cyprian's in Washington, with her brother, Guy A. Hanks Jr.

"The sisters want their students to be educated, but they don't want educated fools," Cosby writes. "The sisters love tranquility for introspection and prayer, but they know that particular circumstances invoke loud activism."

Among the photographs are those of Mother Mary Elizabeth Lange, the Oblates' founder and a candidate for sainthood, and a painting of the co-founder, Sulpician Father James Mary Hector Nicholas Joubert.

He is described as having "stood boldly against his many contemporaries who were holding that blacks had neither souls to be saved nor minds to be instructed."

"Sweet, Sweet Spirit: Prayer Services From the Black Catholic Church" is another significant liturgical contribution by and pertaining to black Catholics.

Jesuit Father Joseph Brown, with the support of Franciscan Father Fernand Cheri III, compiled the prayer services in response to Pope Paul VI's exhortation to the African church to offer its "gift of blackness" to the world, one that, according to the U.S. black bishops, should be reflected in liturgies that are "authentically black" yet "truly Catholic."

Father Brown, a professor in the black American studies program at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, says the "explosion of the black Renaissance of the 1960s shook the foundations" of what blacks thought they knew both as Americans and as Catholics.

When brought into the church after the Second Vatican Council, black sacred songs "captured the determined among us who knew how to be Catholic and who were discovering just how rich and vast was the heritage of blackness welling up everywhere."

Most of the prayer services featured in the book, said Father Brown, were selected because "something special happened" during them — "people claimed a power from sharing in" each service.

Among the prayer services offered in "Sweet, Sweet Spirit" are those for Black History Month, Good Friday, reconciliation and healing, celebrating the saints, anointing for evangelization, youth retreats, funeral services, dedications of children, commitments to religious or priestly vocations, general intercessions, blessing the home, women's and men's services, and honoring Thea Bowman, a Franciscan Sister of Perpetual Adoration, for how she modeled women's discipleship.

Path to holiness takes patience, compassion

BY JEFF HEDGLEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

When I was 16, I shared a car with my 19-year-old sister. We split the cost of the car payment and insurance down the middle.

The plan was that we also would have equal use of the vehicle. She was older and had a job around the corner; I was younger and had a girlfriend who lived 30 minutes away. Naturally this caused a lot of problems.

Nothing in my life with four other siblings could compare with the fights we had about the use of that car. Doors would slam; very un-Christian words would fly; and feelings were shredded.

One day, after a typical display of mutual selfishness, I slammed the door to my room and said to no one in particular: "Why won't she even try?!"

A few minutes later after the steam stopped billowing from my ears, I heard a small voice in my head say: "Are you trying?"

God in his fashion had challenged my self-righteousness — and I lost. When I came out of my room, my sister was in the bathroom. I wrote her a note that simply said: "I'll try if you will."

From that point on I don't think we had another fight.

On the feast of the Holy Family, the church gives us a passage from St. Paul that calls us not just to put up with each other but to bear with one another in compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness and patience.

It was only when God's prompting toward these graces broke through my bitter, angry resentment of my sister that peace came to our relationship.

Being a family of holiness takes work, prayer, submission and selfless behavior. It is not unlike the family who had a virgin teenager say yes to God; a fiancé, who initially wanted to cut and run but submitted to God's plan; and a son who had no idea what lay ahead of him, but when his hour came took the cup his Father handed to him.

One of the steps to holiness is to take our eyes off of ourselves and put them on those we love. It is this kind of action that paves the road to being a holy family.

Questions:

What are some ways we can "bear with one another" when the other is hard to get along with? Do you have a story that shows how you or someone you know has grown in holiness?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"Put on, as God's chosen ones, holy and beloved, heartfelt compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness and patience, bearing with one another and forgiving one another" (Colossians 3:12-13).

'Water Horse' offers intense encounter

Alex Etel stars in "The Water Horse: Legend of the Deep," an engaging but, by the end, surprisingly intense fantasy adventure. Set during World War II, a forlorn Scottish boy (Etel) discovers an egg in the waters of the local loch that hatches a rapidly growing dinosaur-like creature which he eventually identifies as the "Water Horse" spoken of in Celtic legends. The screen version of the 1990 children's book, like its title character, starts off unthreateningly but gets steadily more ominous as it moves toward a turbulent climax that would likely frighten most young children.

Fantasy violence, one crass expression and one profanity; acceptable for less sensitive younger viewers. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-II — adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG — parental guidance suggested.

Vatican's clergy congregation unveils Web site with important texts

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican's Congregation for Clergy unveiled a Web site offering the Bible in nine languages, the Code of Canon Law and commentary on Sunday liturgy.

The congregation's new site, www.bibliaclerus.org, is part of its www.clerus.org Web site that also has increased the number of resources available in its electronic library, said a Dec. 8 letter by the congregation's prefect, Cardinal Claudio Hummes.

While the Web sites are open to everyone, they are geared toward serving the world's priests, deacons and catechists, the letter said.

The resources on the new Web site already had been available from the congregation on a CD and had been distributed to 140,000 clergy around the world. People accessing the new site will be able to read Scripture along with its interpretation in light of tradition, the teachings of the church and papal commentaries.

Biblical texts are available in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, English, Italian, Spanish, French, German and Portuguese.

The English text comes from the New American Bible, produced by members of the Catholic Biblical Association of America under the patronage of the U.S. bishops' Committee of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine.

God and the 'Google-generation'

Seminarians minister with MySpace and more

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — An ocean away from family and friends, some U.S. seminarians at the Pontifical North American College in Rome are bridging the divide with online communities and digital means of communication such as Skype, instant messaging, Facebook, MySpace and more.

But while it may have begun as simple e-mails and Web log, or blog, entries meant to keep loved ones in touch, their notes from Rome to home have blossomed into a whole new way these students preparing for the priesthood can share their spiritual journey with the rest of the world.

"It's a great witness when we share our stories, our experiences in (the) seminary" that include "our hopes, our joys, our fears, our anxieties about" the journey toward the priesthood, said Johnny Burns, 27, of Milwaukee.

Burns, Jacob Bertrand of San Diego and Michael Bruno of Brooklyn, N.Y., took a break from their busy schedules as second-year theology students to speak with Catholic News Service about how some seminarians from today's so-called "Google generation" are helping other people find God and the church through the Internet.

"There's a lot of junk on the Internet and we have to fix it," said Bertrand, 23, who seems the savviest of the group with a blog, accounts on two social networking sites on the Web — MySpace and Facebook — and plans for broadcasting practice homilies on YouTube, a video-sharing Web site.

"We need to integrate ourselves into these online communities and in a sense baptize the way these things work," he said.

"Everyone's opinion gets expressed and published, but nobody's opinion necessarily has any truth to it," the California native said.

Well-formed Catholics and church leaders have a golden opportunity to move into the World Wide Web like any new mission territory and point people to the truth and to Christ, the seminarians said.

Bruno, 22, said one of the things he loves most about the networking power of Facebook is "I put down I am a Mets fan, that I follow Notre Dame football" as well as his favorite books and movies.

Other young people may be drawn to his profile because they have a shared interest in the New York Mets baseball team or because they went to the same high school, but then they see that he is also a seminarian studying for the priesthood in Rome.

Very few people actually know a seminarian, and meeting one online and discovering he has many of the same interests as other young people can wipe away some preconceived notions about the kind of person who is drawn to a priestly or religious vocation, the three men said. Being a presence in these online communities almost acts as a sort of accidental advertising for the church.

On the one hand, some people may be drawn to vent their frustrations or anger about the church, but Burns said, "on the flip side it's also easier for a young man or young woman who's considering a vocation to the priestly or religious life to send a quick question or two or even enter into a relationship of counseling with a priest or a seminarian who can give some advice on the discernment process."

He said his answering questions and engaging people in reflection in these "electronic communities" have provided him with valuable opportunities to experience ministry work.

"We are ministering to these people in many ways, both in sharing our stories, in helping them along their way answering their questions, and providing them another avenue for their own personal faith exploration," the Milwaukee denizen said.

But while the three men see that they are helping people learn more about the church and Christ, they also see it helps strengthen their own love for God and priestly calling.

Bruno said often he is asked by curious online visitors what led to his decision to become a priest.

He tells them it wasn't something "abnormal like a lightning bolt coming down and throwing you on the floor" or a loud voice calling your name.

The reasons, he said, were rooted in the people who raised, loved and taught him throughout life.

"The vocation to be a priest is one that is nourished first in the family, but also in all your relationships, your friends, teachers and parish priests," he said.

Bruno said relationships are crucial and are "the nourishment of one's vocation." Now because of Facebook, instant messaging and Skype, he is able "to keep those relationships alive and vibrant" so that they continue to sustain him both as a person and as a future priest.

"So many people have the idea that the life of a priest is a lonely life, that it is without relationships. Well, that couldn't be farther from the truth," Bruno said.

On the one hand these young men are sent away from their families and friends to complete their studies and formation, but in the end, Bruno said, "we're also sent back to them to minister to them, to be a comfort, to be a guide, to be a priest to them."

All of them emphasized the aim of their online presence was not to point people to their site or to create a perfect or popular Christian community; it is to be a signpost of sorts to show people the way back to God and to a real physical community that involves human interaction, face to face.

Burns said online communities are "a helpful means of evangelization and can be a very successful tool for the church if, at the end of the day, it's bringing people to the sacraments and especially to the Mass."

"You cannot experience Jesus Christ on the Internet no matter what you do," Bertrand said; it has to be a "personal experience of Christ," and "they won't get that on the online community."

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrates a Mass honoring Catholic Heritage Society members at St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte Nov. 18. The society recognizes those individuals who have designated an entity of the Catholic Church as a beneficiary in their estate plans.

Ensuring the future church

The ornament symbolizes not only the Christmas season, but also the generosity of the many people who have pledged to ensure the future of the diocese.

Hundreds of such ornaments were given to members of the Catholic Heritage Society by the diocesan Development Office in appreciation of their planned gifts to the diocese.

"The Catholic Heritage Society is the diocese's way of honoring Christian generosity of Catholic friends who are providing for the future of the church," said Judy Smith, director of planned giving for the diocese.

Membership in the Catholic Heritage Society is open to anyone who agrees to make a planned gift to the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte, the diocese or any of its churches, schools, agencies or organizations.

Society members were honored at a Mass celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis at St. Thomas Aquinas Church in Charlotte Nov. 18. Following the Mass, members were invited to a reception and dinner with Bishop Jugis.

There are currently more than 850 society members, some of whom will leave their gifts to the foundation, which has more than $17.7 million in assets. Most of the endowments in the foundation are designated for churches.

According to Smith, for each society member, there are seven more people who have designated the church as a beneficiary in their estate plans, but have not yet informed the development office.

"It makes me happy to be able to bequeath a legacy gift to the Catholic Church, God's family on earth," said Nancy West, a member of the Catholic Heritage Society and a parishioner at St. Ann Church in Charlotte.

"This is a way of returning thanks to God, giver of all gifts," she said.

Smith said planned giving can be a painless method of giving.

"You don't have to be person of great wealth to give a planned gift to the church," she said. "Many members of the Catholic Heritage Society are people of ordinary means."

"Whether you are single, married, raising a family or planning for your retirement years, it is important to reflect on the kind of legacy you would like to leave for the future," said Smith.

'From Many, One Family of God'

Upcoming week a chance to show Christ's love

Recently churches in the Diocese of Charlotte received a packet of materials from the U.S. bishops' Committee on Migration regarding the upcoming 27th annual National Migration Week Jan. 6-12, 2008. The theme is "From Many, One Family of God."

In an accompanying letter, Salt Lake City Bishop John C. Wester, committee chairman, said the theme "reminds us that though we come from many cultures and places, we are all part of one human family and members of the one Body of Christ."

"Sadly, rather than embracing newcomers to our land whose circumstances have compelled them to seek new lives among us, we too often respond in fear and harbor attitudes of resentment and suspicion."

Leaders of the U.S. bishop's Justice for Immigrants campaign also have encouraged dioceses to put forth efforts to put civility into the national immigration debate, which is becoming more hostile as the election year approaches.

Father Shawn O'Neal, pastor of St. Joseph Church in Bryson City and the diocesan liaison for the Justice for Immigrants campaign, joins with the diocesan Hispanic ministry and peace and justice offices in inviting Catholics to reflect on the church's positions on immigration. We encourage you to study the immigration situation in our diocese with an open mind.

During the Christmas season, we as Catholics remember Jesus' birth as a poor one, away from the home of his parents and unwanted by the citizens of Bethlehem.

In Christ's description of the Last Judgment, we learn that when we ignore the poor and the stranger, we ignore Christ himself. Christ says: "Amen, I say to you, what you did not do for one of these least ones, you did not do for me." (Mt. 25:44-45)

We also hear the oft repeated quote from the Old Testament: "You shall treat the alien who resides with you no differently than the natives born among you, have the same love for him as for yourself, for you too were once aliens in the land of Egypt" (Leviticus 14:34).

Packet materials sent to churches include petitions for the liturgy, prayer cards and guides for reflection in the family as well as in schools and faith formation classes.

As Bishop Wester concludes in his letter, "When we set aside our concerns and share our resources, God's blessings extend to all of us. United as one family of God, let us commit ourselves during this year's observance of National Migration Week to work together to create a truly welcoming community for migrants and strive to achieve justice for them at all levels of our American society. Then they can take their proper place alongside us at the Lord's banquet that He has prepared for all of His family."

Sister Inkrott is director of Hispanic ministry for the Diocese of Charlotte. Contact her at (704) 370-3269. National Migration Week resources are online at www.usccb.org/mrs/nmw.shtml.

'For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory ...'

Q. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory now and forever" is the ending of the Lord's Prayer for most Protestant faiths, but I am unable to find it as part of the Our Father as given by Christ in the Gospels or in the King James Version of the Bible.

I realize we have a similar prayer now as part of Mass, close to the Our Father. Where did that prayer come from? Is it biblical? (Connecticut)

A. That doxology (prayer of praise) concluding the Lord's Prayer is found very early in Christian liturgy. It goes back to apostolic times.

Jewish prayers and liturgical worship greatly influenced the gradual development of Christian worship. The doxology we're speaking of entered Christian worship that way. Similar prayer formulas had been common in Hebrew worship for centuries. Eventually, long before the printing press was invented and monks copied the Bible by hand, one or more of these scribes began adding these words after the Lord's Prayer in Matthew (6:9-13) as a gloss — a marginal interpretation or pious note.

As time went on, when it became difficult to distinguish these glosses from the original wording, many of them found their way into the Bible text itself. This was the situation when the King James Authorized English translation was published in 1611.

The doxology is, in fact, in the King James translation, though the scholarly (Protestant) "Interpreter's Bible" notes that it was added in later manuscripts to round out the Lord's Prayer liturgically.

Since the King James Version of Scripture was in general use among Protestant denominations for nearly 300 years, the addition became part of what is often referred to as the Protestant Our Father.

As scholarship developed, it became clear that this attachment was not really part of Scripture but was added later. Thus, Bibles translated under Protestant auspices after the King James edition generally eliminate that sentence, mentioning it at most in a footnote as an unauthentic addition to the Bible text.

In 1990 the "New King James Version" of the Bible was published, reflecting some of the profound changes in the English language since 1611. Interestingly, in their desire to remain as faithful as possible to the original, the translators retained the doxology, making it perhaps the only more modern translation of the Gospels to do so.

As you observe, Catholics continue the ancient liturgical tradition even today by proclaiming this prayer of praise at Mass shortly after the Our Father.

Obviously, there is nothing wrong with the prayer, whenever it may be used. The Eastern Catholic churches and Catholics in other cultures around the world still include it regularly as a conclusion to the Lord's Prayer.

Years ago this column recommended the book "Catholic Household Blessings and Prayers." Many readers praised it and used it in their homes.

The U.S. bishops' Committee on the Liturgy just published a revised and greatly enlarged edition, containing prayers for numerous occasions, Scripture passages and blessings that members of families can minister to each other.

The book is distributed by the USCCB publishing office. Visit www.usccbpublishing.org, or call (800) 235-8722.

Catholic and Lutherans: One religion?

It was with great joy that I read of the reaffirmation of the Catholic-Lutheran covenant ("Two religions, one goal — unity," Dec. 7). I was appalled, however, to see "two religions, one goal" in the headline. It is my understanding that Christianity is the religion and that both Catholics and Lutherans are Christians. I appreciate how theologically difficult it is for the Catholic Church to apply "denomination" to the Catholic Church or to apply the word "church" to most other Christian bodies. One might have been ecumenically more sensitive and more accurate to use "two faith communities, one goal" as the headline.

As a sociologist of religion in western North Carolina for 40 years, I have detected trends in our vocabulary that are problematic. In the 1950s we spoke accurately of "Protestant, Catholic and Jew." Today new realities call for new terminology, but recent usage often makes things worse rather than better.

Frequently I see or hear reference to "Christians, Muslims and Catholics," "our Catholic religion" and "Christian and Catholic" cooperation regarding abortion. I recommend an editorial review of policies related to the choice of words and terms by which we refer to ourselves and others.

— Dr. Kenneth Sanchagrin
Mars Hill

Regarding "Two religions, one goal — unity," I have to ask: What does this propose ultimately to do?

If you strip everything away, either Lutherans are to become Catholic, Catholics are to become Lutheran, or we are to mash together into something that is neither.

We must not forget that Christ founded one church, and Martin Luther founded a heretical sect. Sure, we have some things in common, but it is the differences that count. All this "unity" talk sounds nice, but at the end of the day we are different. And differences do count.

For the past 40 years there has been all of this unity talk, but unless the goal is for all the non-Catholics to convert to the one church, it is a big waste of time.

In 1991, a few Lutheran churches in western North Carolina wanted to evangelize high school youth more effectively. They heard that the Teens Encounter Christ (TEC) Catholic retreat movement worked well in the Midwest. I, along with other Lutheran church members, began Lutheran TEC 16 years ago in Hickory. Today Lutheran TEC continues to grow here.

Most of the theology between Catholic and Lutherans is the same. I am happy that the Lutheran church chose a Catholic retreat program for our teenagers. Two months ago, I took a small group of Lutheran Christians to the perpetual adoration chapel in St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte. They knelt down and prayed in front of the Blessed Sacrament.

Letters to the Editor

Thankful for 'milk powder'

I would like to thank you for running the article and picture on Bethlehem's Milk Grotto ("The power of 'milk powder,'" Dec. 14).

Our culture is so saturated in sexual images that unfortunately it is difficult for many to see the beauty in the biological functions of the human body. Sadly, some people may feel squeamish with the article or see the picture. But Our Blessed Mother did use her own body to nourish the Christ child and she did so because that is the way God designed it.

Regardless of feeding method, the bond between mother and child is a strong and beautiful connection. To see Mary depicted in such a way should inspire us not only to more deeply honor her for her care of Christ, but also to thank our Lord for designing our human bodies in such a magnificent way.

Stand up — God's grace may be knocking at the door

Editor's note: This column first ran Dec. 17, 2004.

The child was 2 years old when he lost his ability to walk. He had been walking since 11 months, but one day he began to wobble and fell down, unable to get up.

The child was diagnosed with Legg-Calve-Perthes Disease, which is, in simple terms, the unexplained interruption of blood to the head of the femur (thighbone). The result is degeneration and deformity of the thighbone area. When the doctors showed the X-rays, the parents saw blackness — nothingness — where their child's thighbone and hips were supposed to meet.

The wobble was probably the result of inflammation of the joint lining, resulting in a painful limp developed suddenly over a few hours. The only course of action was to establish a new blood supply to the affected areas.

The child's legs were placed in metal braces with a rod to hold them apart and motionless while the damage repaired itself hopefully over the next 18 to 24 months.

Although much about the disease was unknown at the time, the doctors were optimistic because the child was diagnosed early; if treated early and correctly, 60-70 percent of children with the disease recover with no long-term disability. The only thing the parents and family could do was pray their only child would recover.

The boy remained in the braces for two years, unable to stand or walk. At 4 years of age, he still crawled around on the floor, dragging his metal-encased, useless legs behind him.

At Christmas, he and his parents gathered with their family at the grandparents' home in Brooklyn, N.Y. A dozen people were around the table, enjoying a feast prepared by the grandmother, who sat at the head of the table.

The grandmother had always been religious; always active in her church, always saying countless prayers for her family and friends. She was sitting quietly, seemingly looking down at her plate, when there were three loud, distinct knocks at the front door.

Nobody seemed to hear them, except the child's mother. She glanced at her mother-in-law, who, still looking down, nodded in silent satisfaction. The child's mother was confused — no one else had reacted to the knocks — so she leaned across the table.

"I think there's someone at the door," she whispered. "Do you want me to answer it?"

The grandmother looked up. "No," she said softly. "I'll tell you about it later."

When the mother and grandmother were finally alone, the grandmother explained she had just finished a novena — a nine-day series of prayers — to St. Martin de Porres. The saint, the grandmother said, had just given her his response.

"Your son will be healed within six months," the grandmother said.

The mother wasn't sure what to think, but couldn't deny hearing the knocks.

X-rays of the child were taken several months later. The parents rejoiced when they saw that the hip areas — formerly black holes — were replaced with bone. Within six months of the knocks on the door, the child was out of his braces.

He was not only standing on his own, but walking, running. He became one of the fastest runners at his school.

That Christmas miracle happened 30 years ago. That was my grandmother, my mother. I was the child.

My grandmother, Katherine Murray, died in 1987. They say she died peacefully, sitting in a chair while praying the rosary. The paramedics said they had never seen anyone so at peace.

Unfortunately I didn't learn about St. Martin de Porres' involvement in my condition until after my grandmother's death. The saint, born in Lima, Peru, in 1579, became a lay brother at the Dominican friary at Lima where he served, among other duties, over the infirmary and became known for his tender care of the sick and for his spectacular, often miraculous cures (including raising the dead).

St. Martin had a great desire to go on foreign missions but instead made a martyr out of his body, devoting himself to ceaseless and severe penances. In turn, God endowed him with many wondrous gifts, including aerial flights and bilocation.

Since moving to the South, I've heard many people scoff at the notion of "praying to saints" and intercessory prayers. One Baptist, who didn't know my story, told me Catholics wasted their time praying to dead saints who were "no better than anybody else." Perhaps. And perhaps the metal braces clamped to my legs would have worked without St. Martin's intervention.

But two people heard those knocks on the door, and they believed. I don't need any more convincing than that. But whenever I'm in doubt, all I have to do is stand up. The power of heaven always seems a little bit closer when I do.

It's a pity there are so many people without faith, who don't or refuse to know the effect a simple prayer can have, or the grace our Lord is willing to give. God does listen to our prayers. But do we always listen when he speaks to us?

We had better start listening — we don't want to miss the knocking at the door. You never know who it might be.

I don't run quite like I used to, but before I gather with my family this Christmas, I think I'll go for a quick sprint around the block. I know my grandmother will be smiling down as I dash about. And while I'm out there, I think I'll have some grateful words for a certain Dominican saint and offer some prayers for those I love.

Life would be dark without Christ's birth, pope says

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Without the birth of Christ who brought the light of truth to the world, life would be dark and without direction, Pope Benedict XVI said at his last general audience before Christmas.

Born in a grotto in Bethlehem, Jesus has "shown the world the light that lights up our life (and) revealed the way that leads to the fullness of our humanity," the pope said Dec. 19, dedicating his talk to "the meaning and value" of the Advent and Christmas seasons.

He said Christians are called to prepare the way for the Lord's coming by creating a dignified setting "not only in our immediate surroundings but above all in our souls."

Sometimes the faith and hope that Christ will bring to the world "unfortunately seem too far removed from everyday life today," he said.

"If the light of God, the light of truth is turned off, life becomes dark and without a compass," Pope Benedict said. "If one does not recognize God became man, what sense is there in celebrating Christmas?"

In this Advent season, the church invites us to reflect on Christ's birth and to prepare ourselves, in watchfulness and prayer, for his second coming.

Advent is thus a time of joyful expectation that our hope, and indeed the hopes of all humanity, will find fulfillment in the peace and salvation which only God can give.

"Waiting in joyful hope" for the Lord's coming also means preparing his way and welcoming him as the incarnate Son of God, the truth which gives meaning to every human life.

How important it is, then, to proclaim this mystery in all its saving power: the Son of Mary, born in Bethlehem, is the Light which illumines our life, the Way that leads to human fulfillment.

The Good News of our salvation in Christ must be made known to a world which longs for this message of reconciliation, solidarity and hope. May this Christmas be for everyone a celebration of peace and joy: joy at the birth of the Prince of Peace.

Together with Mary and Joseph, let us contemplate the new-born child lying in the manger. Through the prayers of the Virgin Mother, may we grow in the knowledge and love of Christ the Savior.

A happy Christmas to you and your families!

Christmas surprises

Be ready to be surprised this Christmas. Be ready to be surprised just as Caesar Augustus, Quirinus, Joseph, Mary, the shepherds and the angels were surprised. And rightly so. They experienced something unusual — the birth of Jesus Christ. Our God is the God of surprises.

We heard Isaiah's readings in the Advent season about the hopes and fears of humankind. There is no surprise there — we will always have hopes and fears as long as we live. The surprise is how well we will handle the hopes and fears coming up in the year 2008.

There will always be war and social and economic uncertainty, and yes, we still advertise happiness and fulfillment through diamond rings, flashy new cars, the latest electronic games and gizmos.

No real surprises there, unless we try to put those before God — then our lives will head toward an eternal surprise that's not necessarily good.

And it is useless to try and play God — it has never worked before and it will never work in the future.

We will do well if we let God be God in our lives. Just let God be God, because he is always full of surprises.

Let God be your fulfillment, not the latest technological tools, for only he can fill the emptiness in your life; only he can fill your heart with love.

When we let God be God, he will surprise us with real fulfillment and real meaning.

Sometimes in order to be surprised, we must yearn for something good, we must try to reach for the unreachable and dream the impossible. We must take our dreams to the limit, not limit our dreams.

Without longing or yearning, the shepherds would not have looked to the sky and noticed the angels leading them to Jesus; nor would the magi have wandered so far from home to follow the star leading them to Jesus.

Without longing or yearning, Mary would never have said "yes" to become the Mother of Christ. (What a surprise for her indeed.)

So be ready to be surprised this Christmas. And if you let God be God, you will experience pleasant surprises throughout the coming year.

Faces of the frozen

Plains states still struggling to recover from devastating ice storm

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — As wintry weather bombarded a swath of the United States from the Great Plains to New England over a five-day period, residents of hard-hit Oklahoma were still struggling to rebound from a massive ice storm that paralyzed much of the state Dec. 9.

At the peak of the storm an estimated 348,000 Oklahoma households were without power after the accumulated ice from freezing rains that drenched the state snapped power lines and utility poles.

By Dec. 14 more than 100,000 still had no power in the state.

More than two dozen deaths throughout the Great Plains were attributed to the ice storm, which initially left 1.2 million households in the region without power.

As Oklahomans were coming out of the grip of the icy weather in their state, they girded for an expected two to six inches of snow expected to fall over the Dec. 15-16 weekend.

"We can handle the snow. It's the ice that's the problem," said Ray Dyer, editor of The Sooner Catholic, Oklahoma City's archdiocesan newspaper.

"It's the largest power outage we've had in the state," Dyer said, adding that one parish in the southern part of Oklahoma City was still trying to get its power back.

Apart from power outages, no ice-related damages had been reported in the Oklahoma City Archdiocese through Dec. 12, Dyer said.

But individuals who lost power during the storm faced a far different reality.

Thousands took refuge in the Cox Center, the city's main indoor stadium. There, Catholic Charities staff from the archdiocese worked with other aid agencies such as the Salvation Army and the Red Cross to develop a "one-stop" system for those adversely affected by the ice storm to get them both short- and long-term help, according to Connie Blaney, Catholic Charities' spokeswoman.

The system "was pretty effective a couple of years ago when so many people came from New Orleans on account of Hurricane Katrina," she said.

In trying to help families, Blaney added, aid agencies learned one hard truth: "We found out that FEMA (the Federal Emergency Management Agency), in an ice storm, does not give out personal assistance."

"It's more (for) business and nonprofits. So people aren't going to get the personal assistance they might have gotten during a flood or a hurricane," she said.

The headquarters of Catholic Charities itself was not affected by the ice storm.

"We have power at Catholic Charities," Blaney said. "We're close to downtown, about two miles from downtown. A lot of the downtown businesses do not have power."

Other Catholic Charities activities have been delayed somewhat to take care of the pressing needs resulting from the ice storm.

"We adopted 315 families in an adopt-a-family program" before the ice storm, Blaney said.

They were supposed to have had Christmas gifts delivered to them the weekend of the ice storm.

"We'll get those Christmas gifts delivered," she added. "I'm sure we'll get them delivered in the next few days."

Other dioceses in the Plains reported some power problems.

Power outages resulted in production of the Dec. 15 issue of The Register, newspaper of the Diocese of Salina, Kan., to be delayed one day, according to editor Doug Weller.

But the newspaper and its printer have a one-day buffer in the production schedule, so most subscribers were expected to receive their paper on time, Weller added.

Power went out at the cathedral church in Jefferson City, according to Jay Nies, editor of The Catholic Missourian, diocesan newspaper.

Cold weather brought up to a dozen inches of snow to Massachusetts Dec. 13, while surrounding states also got socked with several inches of the white stuff.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The national debate over immigration issues was the top religious news story of 2007 and Pope Benedict XVI was the top newsmaker, according to the annual poll of client editors of Catholic News Service.

Catholic response to the war in Iraq took second place among the 30 news stories on the ballot, while developments in the stem-cell field came in third.

Pope Benedict dominated the newsmakers list, with 20 of the 24 first-place votes cast. U.S. President George W. Bush was a distant second, followed by Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

Defending the 'cradle of life and love'

*Pope Benedict, marking new year,
reiterates support for traditional families*

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Ushering in the new year, Pope Benedict XVI said attempts to weaken the traditional family inevitably undermine social harmony and world peace.

"The natural family, founded on marriage between a man and a woman, is the cradle of life and love and the first and indispensable teacher of peace," the pope said at a Mass Jan. 1, which the church marks as the World Day of Peace.

The family thus constitutes the primary agency of peace, and attempts to deny or restrict family rights "threaten the very foundations of peace," he said.

Later, at a noon blessing, the pope returned to the theme of the family and what he called its "strict connection" to social peace.

He quoted from his World Peace Day message on the theme "The Human Family, a Community of Peace."

"Whoever, even unknowingly, circumvents the institution of the family undermines peace in the entire community, national and international, since he weakens what is in effect the primary agency of peace," he said.

In his homily, the pope said people should recognize that true peace is not merely the result of human efforts or political agreements.

Above all, he said, peace is a divine gift that people need to continually implore.

CRAFTING A CASKET

Trappist Brother Felix Leja prepares a piece of wood for a casket at New Melleray Abbey in Peosta, Iowa, in late October. Brother Leja, the first monk designated to make caskets at New Melleray, has made somewhere between 800 and 900 caskets since the venture was officially launched in 2000. He and his co-workers take great care in producing the finest in old-world craftsmanship.

Iowa Trappists expand casket factory due to increased demand

PEOSTA, Iowa (CNS) — For the craftsmen and artisans at New Melleray Abbey in Peosta, a relatively new ministry has expanded into a new state-of-the-art, 40,000-square-foot factory, almost five times larger than their previous facility.

"Because of increasing demands for caskets, we were unable to keep up with production to satisfy demand, so we had to develop a new woodworking facility," said Sam Mulgrew, the operation's general manager.

"It's not a highly automated factory. It has good dust collection, air quality and other features," he said.

In their work, the monks strive to produce burial caskets and urns that reflect their values of integrity, simplicity and reverence for nature. They try to nourish a return to a dignified spirituality of death.

Trappist Brother Felix Leja, the first monk designated to make caskets at New Melleray, has made somewhere between 800 and 900 caskets since the venture was officially launched in 2000.

For him, the focus is on doing the work of God, not on his new surroundings.

"Work is work," he said, noting that the monks know God loves them no matter where they are working.

The Trappists at New Melleray Abbey follow the ancient monastic rule of St. Benedict, striving for simple living through contemplative prayer, community worship and manual labor.

Mulgrew sees the casket-making business as an ideal fit for that lifestyle.

"They consider this work to be a corporal act of mercy," he said of the monks. "Our casket is a serious product in high demand that has sacramental value to it."

About 30 people work at the factory — 12-15 monks and 15-18 laypeople.

Wood for the caskets and urns comes in part from the monastery's own sustainable forests. The monks own 1,300 acres of forestland — the second largest privately-owned forest in the state of Iowa, according to Mulgrew.

As young monks 55 years ago, some of those now working in the new factory planted the pine trees now used to make caskets.

The new factory, designed for the production of 10-12 caskets per day, includes various workstations for making caskets and urns, staining, attaching lids and handles, adding upholstery, custom-engraving and storing.

In addition, a separate workstation has been designated for those monks who prefer to work uninterrupted, allowing them to be reflective and contemplative on the job.

The Trappists have brokered business relationships with various organizations across the country, including Catholic cemeteries, dioceses and the University of Notre Dame in Indiana.

With the growing demand for the company's product comes an ongoing sense of urgency to produce more and more caskets and urns.

"We continue to sell more caskets than we're manufacturing," Mulgrew said. "There's a slight grace period there because half our sales are pre-need, but that gap is closing, so we really need to make more caskets."

Catholic leaders in Pakistan, pope condemn assassination of Bhutto

THRISSUR, India (CNS) — Catholic leaders in Pakistan and Pope Benedict XVI have condemned the assassination at an election rally of former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, leader of the opposition Pakistan People's Party.

"We condemn this dastardly act. It is a terrible tragedy for Pakistan," said Bishop Anthony Lobo of Islamabad-Rawalpindi, secretary-general of the Catholic Bishops Conference of Pakistan, in a Dec. 27 telephone interview with Catholic News Service from Rawalpindi, where Bhutto was assassinated.

Bhutto, 54, and several others were killed Dec. 27 in a suicide attack.

Hundreds of thousands of Bhutto's supporters wept, chanted and paid their last respects at her burial Dec. 28 in the town of Garhi Khuda Bakhsh.

Demonstrators protesting her death in cities and towns throughout the country clashed with police and burned buildings and train stations.

A telegram of condolence from Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, Vatican secretary of state, described the killing as a "brutal terrorist attack" and said, "The Holy Father expresses sentiments of deep sympathy and spiritual closeness to the members of her family and to the entire Pakistani nation."

"He prays that further violence will be avoided and that every effort will be made to build a climate of respect and trust, which are so necessary if good order is to be maintained in society and if the country's political institutions are to operate effectively," the cardinal said in the message sent Dec. 28 to Archbishop Lawrence Saldanha of Lahore, president of the Pakistani bishops' conference.

In the CNS interview, Bishop Lobo said, "Obviously, this is a setback for democracy."

"The forces that were opposed to it have succeeded this time," he said.

Vatican official expects new level of dialogue with Muslims in 2008

VATICAN CITY (CNS) —The Vatican official in charge of interreligious dialogue said he is confident a new level of dialogue with Muslims will take place in 2008.

"There is good will on both sides," said Cardinal Jean-Louis Tauran, president of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue.

After 138 Muslim scholars sent a letter to Pope Benedict XVI and other Christian leaders in October outlining a proposal for a new dialogue and greater understanding, the pope invited a representative group of the scholars to meet with him at the Vatican.

At the same time, the pope suggested the scholars hold a working session with officials from Cardinal Tauran's office, the Pontifical Institute for Arabic and Islamic Studies and the Pontifical Gregorian University.

Jordan's Prince Ghazi bin Muhammad bin Talal, the architect of the Muslim scholars' project, wrote back to the Vatican in December suggesting that representatives meet in February or March to work out the details of the dialogue.

"I am very confident in the outcome of this meeting," Cardinal Tauran told Vatican Radio Dec. 28.

He said he expected the meeting to deal with "the dignity of the human person and his rights, first of all the right to freedom of conscience and religion," with the need for believers to "have an objective knowledge of the religion of the other," and with the need to educate young people in tolerance and respect for the beliefs of others.

Vatican agency names church workers who died for others in 2007

VATICAN CITY (CNS) —From the war-torn lands of Iraq and Sri Lanka to violence-ridden neighborhoods around the world, at least 20 Catholic Church workers were murdered or sacrificed their lives for others in 2007, the Vatican's Fides agency said.

Each year, Fides, the news agency of the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples, publishes a list of pastoral workers who died violently.

The 2007 list was released Dec. 29. The Fides report included a priest whose death was found most likely to be self-induced and accidental.

While Fides does not refer to the missionaries as martyrs — technically a term reserved for those the church formally recognizes as having given their lives for the faith — it said it was important to remember their sacrifices and to recognize that "each one of them, in a different way, contributed to the growth of the church in various parts of the world."

The list included Father Ragheed Aziz Ganni and three subdeacons who were shot outside a church in Iraq in June; and Father Nicholaspillai Packiyaranjith, a diocesan priest who worked with the Jesuit Refugee Service in Mannar, Sri Lanka, and was killed in September when a roadside bomb exploded as he was driving to a refugee camp.

Fides also highlighted the case of Sister Anne Thole, a member of the Franciscan Sisters of the Holy Family, who died in April trying to rescue three patients trapped in a fire in an AIDS clinic in Ratschitz, South Africa.

The Fides' list included 14 priests, the three Iraqi subdeacons, a Marist brother, Sister Thole and a seminarian from the Society of St. Paul.

Besides the four killed in Iraq, two died in Mexico, three died in the Philippines, two died in Colombia, two in Spain, two in South Africa and one each in Brazil, Guatemala, Kenya, Rwanda and Sri Lanka.

"I invite Christian families to experience the loving presence of the Lord in their lives."

Ex-British Prime Minister Tony Blair received into Catholic Church during private ceremony

LONDON (CNS) — Former British Prime Minister Tony Blair became a Catholic during a private ceremony in London. Blair, previously an Anglican, was received into full communion with the Catholic Church by Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor of Westminster.

Blair was sponsored at the Mass of reception by his wife, Cherie, a Catholic. The Dec. 21 Mass, at the cardinal's private residence, was attended by Blair's family and close friends.

Cardinal Murphy-O'Connor said Dec. 22 that he was "very glad" to welcome Blair into church.

"For a long time he has been a regular worshipper at Mass with his family and in recent months he has been following a program of formation to prepare for his reception into full communion," the cardinal said.

Blair, 54, served as British prime minister from May 1997 until June 2007.

Back to a 'life in Christian service'

Priest cleared of wrongdoing, reinstated to ministry at Our Lady of the Rosary Church

LEXINGTON — A priest who was placed on administrative leave due to an allegation of sexual abuse has been cleared of charges and returned to ministry.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis has reinstated Oblate Father Albert Gondek as pastor Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington. Father Gondek resumed his duties Dec 23, 2007.

"My job is Christian service and leadership," said Father Gondek. "It is a tremendous joy for me to return to my friends at Our Lady of the Rosary parish, and I look forward to finishing my career and my life in Christian service."

Father Gondek and Bishop Jugis met with parishioners after the 10:30 a.m. Mass Dec. 23 to explain the process leading up to the reinstatement. Parishioners were excited and thankful to have their pastor back; some welcomed him with hugs.

The Diocese of Charlotte placed Father Gondek on administrative leave Oct. 12, 2007, under provisions of the U.S. bishops' Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People, after receiving the allegation of sexual abuse.

The allegation, made by a 59-year-old Delaware man, involved an incident he said took place 47 years ago at a summer camp in Maryland. Father Gondek, pastor of Our Lady of the Rosary Church since 1998, was a seminary student at the time and denied the allegation.

Father Gondek was cleared of any wrongdoing after an investigation by his religious order, the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales, and an inquiry by the Diocese of Charlotte's review board.

Bishop Jugis decided to reinstate Father Gondek after reviewing the findings of both investigations.

"It is a great joy to return Father Al to ministry. The Diocese of Charlotte will make every effort to restore Father Gondek's good name and reputation," said Bishop Jugis.

"While this case does not diminish the suffering that sexual abuse causes people in our society, it is proof that the system in our church works to protect everyone," said the bishop.

At the request of the Oblates, the allegation against Father Gondek was investigated by retired Chief Judge Joseph H. H. Kaplan of the Eighth Judicial Circuit/Circuit Court for Baltimore City, Md. Kaplan has no connection to the Oblates, the Diocese of Charlotte, the Catholic Church or any of the parties involved.

Part of Kaplan's investigation included a polygraph examination conducted by Barry Colvert, a forensic polygrapher and former FBI agent. Colvert reported Father Gondek's answers had a high degree of reliability and were "not indicative of deception."

Kaplan's investigation repudiates claims made in an Oct. 12 press conference by Delaware attorney Thomas Neuberger on behalf of the accuser.

The accuser alleged that when he was 12 years old, he was fondled by Father Gondek, then a seminarian, while both were swimming at a summer camp in Maryland in 1960.

The camp did not open until 1961, and Father Gondek was not assigned there until 1962. The investigation and polygraph examination also confirmed Father Gondek's statement that he does not know how to swim.

Kaplan's attempts to interview the accuser in the presence of Neuberger were unsuccessful.

In his report to the Oblates' Wilmington-Philadelphia Province, Kaplan described the allegation as "without basis in fact." The report was later examined by the Diocese of Charlotte's review board, established to review cases of sexual abuse.

"God tests each of us, sometimes in ways we don't understand," said Father Gondek.

"I don't feel that my faith has been tested, but I know I have been tested over these past weeks as a result of these false allegations," he said.

The parish is holding a welcome-back reception for Father Gondek Jan. 6.

One more step toward the priesthood

Seminarian ordained to transitional diaconate by Bishop Jugis

BY KAREN A. EVANS
STAFF WRITER

CHARLOTTE — Sometimes what a mother wants for her children isn't exactly what she gets.

"I wanted a doctor and a lawyer, and I got two priests," JoAnne Jones joked following the Mass celebrating the ordination of her son Brandon "Brad" Jones to the transitional diaconate Dec. 22, 2007.

The Mass, celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte, marked one of the final steps along the circuitous route Deacon Jones took toward becoming a priest.

Deacon Jones and his identical twin brother, Chandler "Chad," were born in Greensboro and grew up outside of Elkin attending a Baptist church. Chad Jones is now a clergyman for the Anglican Province of America.

"My parents have always been completely supportive of my decision to enter the priesthood," Deacon Jones said.

At age 17, Deacon Jones was received into the Catholic Church at St. Stephen Church in Elkin. A few years later, while studying Latin at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Deacon Jones first considered joining the priesthood.

"Father Conrad Kimbrough, who was the pastor at St. Benedict Church in Greensboro, was my mentor and guide," Deacon Jones said. "There are seven or eight of us who entered the seminary because of his encouragement."

Deacon Jones began his studies for the priesthood in 1993 when he entered the Theological College at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. Two years later, then-Bishop William G. Curlin assigned him to the Pontifical North American College in Rome.

Deacon Jones said meeting Pope John Paul II in 1996 had a profound influence on his discernment.

"There was a palpable presence when he walked into the room," Deacon Jones said. "I'm grateful for this experience — it was the greatest blessing."

In the following years, Deacon Jones considered a vocation with the Dominican order of priests; worked as a Latinist, editing and annotating documents; and earned licentiate degrees in philosophy and theology.

In 2006, he decided to return to the diocesan priesthood track and recently completed his studies at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in Pennsylvania.

"My experiences demonstrate the seriousness with which one must approach the priesthood," Deacon Jones said. "I've been blessed with a plethora of experiences and education."

During the rite of ordination, Bishop Jugis called forth Deacon Jones to make the promise of celibacy and the vow of obedience. The candidate lay prostrate on the floor while the bishop, the concelebrating priests and deacons serving knelt and prayed the litany of the saints.

Following the litany, the bishop laid his hands on Deacon Jones' head and asked the Holy Spirit to descend upon him. Father Eric Kowalski, pastor of Holy Angels Church in Mount Airy, and Father Christopher Davis, pastor of St. Joseph Church in Asheboro, then vested him with the dalmatic and stole.

Deacon Jones has been a parishioner of Father Kowalski's parish for the past several years. Father Davis was a classmate at UNC-Greensboro.

Finally, Deacon Jones knelt before the bishop, who placed the Book of Gospels in his hands. The new deacon then assisted with the Liturgy of the Eucharist.

Deacons are permitted to preach, to assist priests at the altar during the Liturgy of the Eucharist; to officiate at weddings, baptisms and funerals; and to administer blessings during certain liturgical rites. Transitional deacons are men enrolled in seminaries who intend to be ordained as priests.

Deacon Jones and Deacon Tri Vinh Truong, who was ordained as a transitional deacon in February 2007, will be ordained to the priesthood in June 2008. Until his ordination, Deacon Jones has been assigned to the staff of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte.

Although Deacon Jones doesn't know exactly what the future holds for him, he is looking forward to the challenges and opportunities ahead.

"This is an exciting time to be Catholic in North Carolina," he said. "I look forward to serving the people during this time of rapid growth of Catholicism."

Ups, downs mark ecumenical, interfaith relations in 2007

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The year 2007 marked a year with some progress for the Catholic Church in its relations with other Christians and in interfaith dialogue, although the year was also beset by some setbacks on the path to unity and understanding.

One positive move, in November, was what Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, called a "real breakthrough" in a new Catholic-Orthodox dialogue document in that the Orthodox were willing to discuss how authority was shared and exercised on a universal level in the early church.

The document was finalized during a meeting in Ravenna, Italy, attended by members of the dialogue commission.

One negative came along with the breakthrough, though: The Russian Orthodox Church delegation to the meeting walked out.

In July, the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith reaffirmed that the Catholic Church is the one, true church, even if elements of truth can be found in separated churches and communities. The document said some of the separated Christian communities, such as Protestant communities, should not properly be called "churches" according to Catholic doctrine because of major differences over the ordained priesthood and the Eucharist.

Protestant leaders worldwide voiced dismay over the document, which was published in response to critical reaction given "Dominus Iesus," the doctrinal congregation's 2000 declaration on the "unicity and salvific universality of Jesus Christ and the church."

Also in July, Pope Benedict's apostolic letter to widen access to the Latin-language extraordinary form of the Mass provoked a sharp reaction among Jews because of an unresolved dispute over anti-Semitic language in the rite's Good Friday liturgy.

While the term "perfidious Jews" was not part of 1962 Tridentine rite authorized for use by the pope, it still contained a prayer for the conversion of Jews that asks God to end "the blindness of that people."

Abraham H. Foxman, U.S. director of the Anti-Defamation League, called the papal decree a "body blow to Catholic-Jewish relations."

Ecumenism remained on the front burner in top church circles. Prior to the November consistory at the Vatican, the world's cardinals and cardinals-to-be met and discussed ecumenism.

Cardinal Kasper said the opportunity to examine ecumenical themes with all the world's cardinals was particularly important because "ecumenism is a mandate from Our Lord. It is not an option, it is an obligation for the church."

In the United States, dialogue continued on many fronts:

— Catholics and Sikhs discussed spirituality, holiness and the saints during a three-day bilateral retreat in September in Washington.

— In Los Angeles, Catholics and Orthodox met for three days in October in an ongoing dialogue on church structures. A joint committee of Catholic and Orthodox bishops also met in October in St. Augustine, Fla., to discuss evangelization.

— Also in October, an annual dialogue held in Michigan for Catholics and Muslims in the Midwest stressed the need for dialogue.

— Anglicans and Catholics met for three days in October in Alexandria, Va., to discuss the role of Mary and the progress in ecumenical relations.

The Anglican-Roman Catholic International Commission issued a statement in September saying that "difficulties in the life of the Anglican Communion," particularly the tensions caused by the ordination of openly gay Bishop V. Eugene Robinson of New Hampshire in 2003, the blessing of same-sex unions in British Columbia and the acceptance of women bishops in some Anglican provinces, have forced Anglicans and Catholics to recognize that progress toward full unity will be slower than many of them had hoped.

In the area of Catholic-Muslim relations, Pope Benedict XVI in November invited a group of Muslim scholars to meet with him and with the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue. The dates for the meeting have yet to be set.

The invitation was a response to a letter from 138 Muslim scholars to the pope and other Christian leaders calling for new efforts at Christian-Muslim dialogue based on the shared belief in the existence of one God, in God's love for humanity and in people's obligation to love one another.

2007: Beginning of the end for the stem-cell wars?

WASHINGTON (CNS) — In the years ahead, 2007 may come to be remembered as the beginning of the end for the debate over embryonic versus adult stem cells.

In November, separate studies from teams in Japan and the U.S. showed that human skin cells can be reprogrammed to work as effectively as embryonic stem cells, thus negating the need to destroy embryos in the name of science.

"I do not know if those who have invested money and passed laws precisely to allow this (embryonic stem-cell research) will be able to recognize their error and turn back, but at least the scientists who want to achieve results will go looking where they have been proven to be found," said Bishop Elio Sgreccia, president of the Pontifical Academy for Life, in a Vatican Radio interview.

Embryos have long been touted by some scientists as the only source of stem cells capable of becoming any of the 220 types of cells in the human body, but church leaders have said no possible scientific advance could justify the destruction of human embryos.

But that has not kept supporters of embryonic stem-cell research from seeking money at the federal and state levels to continue their research.

Even before the results of the new studies were announced, voters in New Jersey rejected a ballot proposal that would have authorized $450 million in state bonds for stem-cell research projects over the next 10 years.

Catholic leaders in other states were gearing up to fight similar battles. In Michigan, for example, every registered Catholic home received a DVD and other information in October as part of a statewide educational program to explain the church's support for adult stem-cell research and its opposition to embryonic stem-cell research.

The N.Y. State Catholic Conference criticized the Legislature and governor for deciding to spend $600 million on life sciences research aimed chiefly at human embryonic stem-cell research.

In Iowa, Archbishop Jerome G. Hanus of Dubuque reacted with "deep sadness" after the Legislature there approved a measure to allow the cloning of human embryos for research.

Challenges also came at the federal level. In June, President George W. Bush vetoed a bill to expand federal funding for medical research on human embryonic stem cells and issued an executive order calling on federal agencies to strengthen the nation's commitment to research on adult stem cells.

Researchers working with umbilical-cord blood, placenta blood and amniotic fluid also were making progress in deriving stem cells from those byproducts of live birth.

"With 4 million live births every year in our country alone, an ample supply of these cells lies readily at hand," said Richard Doerflinger, deputy director of the bishops' pro-life secretariat.

In a study reported early in 2007 by the journal Nature, scientists at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., and Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., said they had used stem cells derived from amniotic fluid to create muscle, bone, fat, blood, nerve and liver cells in the laboratory.

Doerflinger also expressed the bishops' support for full funding to collect and store cord blood for the National Cord Blood Inventory, which would enable doctors to match patients with compatible donors through a centralized computer data bank.

At their November meeting in Baltimore, the U.S. bishops authorized their Committee on Pro-Life Activities to prepare a brief policy statement explaining why the church opposes embryonic stem-cell research. The document will be voted on by the bishops in June.

Strong statements, violence, displacement mark Iraq in 2007

State of refugees a 'disaster,' says cardinal

BY REGINA LINSKEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — For Iraq's Christians, 2007 was marked by increased violence and displacement.

A report released in June by the founder of the Assyrian International News Agency recorded in depth the deaths of Christian children — including babies — laypeople, priests and nuns who were burned, beaten or blown up in car bombs throughout the past few years.

The report said al-Qaida terrorists had moved into Dora, a predominantly Christian neighborhood in Baghdad, and had begun enforcing "strict Islamic law" and forcing residents to pay a "jizya," a poll tax once levied on Christians and Jews living in Muslim countries.

On June 3 in the northern Iraqi city of Mosul, a Chaldean Catholic priest and his three subdeacons were killed. Father Ragheed Aziz Ganni, the three men, and the wife of one of the men were driving away from a church when their car was blocked by a group of armed militants, who forced the woman out of the car.

The militants opened fire on Father Ganni and the three subdeacons, then placed explosives around the car to prevent anyone from retrieving the four bodies.

The deaths evoked strong messages of sympathy from Pope Benedict XVI, who said Iraq's Christians are experiencing an "authentic martyrdom," and Bishop Thomas G. Wenski of Orlando, Fla., chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on International Policy.

In October, the pope called for the release of two priests kidnapped in Iraq.

They later were released.

The violence has forced many Christians to leave. More than 1.2 million Christians lived in Iraq before the 2003 U.S.-led invasion. Compared to the prewar percentage of Christians in Iraq, a disproportionate number of all Iraqi refugees are Christian.

No refuge for refugees

Bishop Antoine Audo of Aleppo, Syria, said Iraqi refugees in Syria, Lebanon and Jordan suffer great hardships; many have lost family members, jobs and homes.

"They have no legal protection by law and they are not recognized as refugees," said the bishop, who ministers to approximately 60,000 Iraqi Christian refugees in Syria.

"They feel that they can't go home because of the war, and at the same time they can't get a (work) visa," he said.

In July a delegation of church leaders toured Middle Eastern countries that host Iraqi refugees.

Describing the state of the refugees as "a real man-made disaster" and "emergency situation," Cardinal Theodore E. McCarrick, retired archbishop of Washington and a consultant to the U.S. bishops' Committee on Migration, expressed concern for the safety of two groups of Iraqi refugees: Christians and those who have worked with the U.S. military or government.

The church leaders returned from their trip urging the United States to cut through bureaucratic tape and open its doors to Iraqis.

In September, a senior U.S. State Department official told the U.S.

Commission on International Religious Freedom that the United States has been slow to admit the thousands of Iraqis referred by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

The United States has "a moral obligation" to protect Iraqi refugees, "particularly those who belong to persecuted religious minorities, as well as those who have worked closely with the United States government," said Ellen Sauerbrey, assistant secretary of the Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration.

The following month, Sauerbrey said that the United States would resettle 12,000 Iraqi refugees by the end of 2007.

Many Iraqi refugees are finding a new home in metropolitan Detroit with the help of the Archdiocese of Detroit. The refugees, many of them Chaldean Catholics, started arriving in the metro area this summer.

Bishop Audo told Catholic News Service that unless security improved in Iraq, the Chaldean diaspora may become permanent.

He said the country's Chaldean Catholics were too scared to go home.

Solidarity and support

During the U.S. bishops' meeting in November, they released a statement saying that some U.S. policymakers "seem to fail to recognize sufficiently the reality and failures in Iraq and the imperative for new directions."

It said the bishops "are convinced that the current situation in Iraq remains unacceptable and unsustainable."

"Our country needs a new direction to reduce the war's deadly toll and to bring our people together to deal with the conflict's moral and human dimensions," it said.

Throughout the year, Pope Benedict reassured Iraqi Christians of the church's solidarity, and he urged material as well as spiritual support.

While meeting with U.S. President George W. Bush in June, the pope expressed concern for the Iraqi Christian minority. Bush said after the meeting that the pope "was concerned that the society that was evolving would not tolerate the Christian religion."

"I assured (the pope) we were working hard to make sure" Iraqis would respect "that modern constitution voted on by the people that would honor people from different walks of life and different attitudes," Bush said.

In September, the pope met with Syrian Vice President Farouk al-Sharaa to discuss the exodus of Iraqis, many of whom have fled to Syria.

But perhaps the strongest signal of solidarity with Iraqis came when Pope Benedict put a red hat on Cardinal Emmanuel-Karim Delly of Baghdad during a Nov. 24 consistory.

The patriarch said the pope told him, "I hope this gesture will be a sign of reconciliation not only among the people, but especially among Sunnis, Shiites and Christians, because Iraq is a country dear to me."

2007 a year of growth, blessings for diocese

year, the diocese published a book, "Voices and Places of the People of God — The Diocese of Charlotte." More than just a historical record, the 160-page coffee table book includes color photographs and spiritual reflections on Catholic life in the 46-county diocese.

"I hope this book will inspire all of us to continue together to play a part in advancing the Kingdom of God in the 21st century," wrote Bishop Peter J. Jugis in his introductory letter in the book.

On June 2, Bishop Jugis ordained five men as priests — the largest number ordained since 2000 — during a Mass at St. Matthew Church.

A few days prior, on May 30, Bishop Jugis dedicated the new St. Joan of Arc Church in Candler. The new church, which seats 300 worshippers, replaced the original building in Asheville.

On Sept. 30, Bishop Jugis dedicated the new St. John the Evangelist Church in Waynesville. The new 299-seat church replaced the older church, built in the 1940s.

Earlier that month, Sept. 1, Bishop Jugis blessed the diocese's newest Catholic cemetery on the site of the future Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury. At the time, the cemetery already had 660 plots designated and room to expand to accommodate more.

Bishop Jugis blessed the expanded parish hall of Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Lexington March 18. The new hall was built to accommodate ministries of the growing parish community.

On Dec. 7, Bishop Jugis dedicated the new altar at St. John the Baptist Church in Tryon. The relics of three saints are sealed in the new marble altar.

As another sign of the ever-growing diocese, four missions were elevated to parish status. Our Lady of Guadalupe Church and St. Joseph Church in Charlotte, St. Joseph Church in Kannapolis and Our Lady of the Americas Church in Biscoe-Candor were designated as parishes July 1.

Their new status was a result of a study that took into consideration the church's registered households, Mass attendance and recommendations from the diocesan strategic plan and the presbyteral council.

For all parishes in the diocese, Bishop Jugis promulgated new guidelines for parish pastoral councils Nov. 1. The guidelines replaced those issued in 1991 and reflect the changing role of pastoral councils in the 21st century.

Also during 2007, St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte and Our Lady of Mercy School in Winston-Salem celebrated their 50th anniversaries, with special celebrations held in September. Bishop Emeritus William G. Curlin celebrated his 50 years of priestly ministry with a Mass and reception at St. Gabriel Church May 27.

Also celebrating 50 years of priestly ministry were Msgr. Joseph Kerin, Franciscan Father Conall McHugh and Father Joseph Waters. They were honored at a Mass June 1, along with nine priests celebrating 25, 55 and 60 years as priests.

Jesuit Father Joseph Kappes, parochial vicar of St. Therese Church in Mooresville, celebrated 50 years as a Jesuit with a Mass and reception Sept. 9.

After 44 years of priestly ministry, Father Edward Sheridan retired and celebrated his 70th birthday during 2007.

In January and June, Bishop Jugis and Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Raleigh called on Catholics in both dioceses to help defeat a bill to approve public funding for embryonic stem-cell research in North Carolina.

"The bill violates a fundamental church teaching on the sanctity of life," said Bishop Jugis June 21.

The bishops called on their flocks to contact their N.C. legislators to oppose House Bill 1837, which was approved by the N.C. House Science and Technology Committee to go before the House Appropriations Committee.

In addition, Bishops Jugis and Burbidge joined with Bishop Leonard H. Bolick of the North Carolina Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in December to reaffirm a covenant of unity set forth 16 years prior.

The bishops signed the covenant during a formal ceremony at a Lutheran church in Winston-Salem Dec. 2.

Another historic moment for the Diocese of Charlotte was the visit of Catholicos Karekin II, the head of the Armenian Apostolic Church. The diocese sponsored an ecumenical lunch in Charlotte Oct. 12 during the patriarch's month-long pontifical visit to Armenian churches throughout the United States.

The diocese's third annual Eucharistic Congress was held in Charlotte Sept. 21-22. Approximately 9,000 people attended the congress, which featured a eucharistic procession through uptown Charlotte, nationally known speakers, spiritual music and Mass.

Other highlights included the Office of Economic Opportunity in Murphy winning Catholic Charity USA's Family Strengthening Award, and St. Pius X Church in Greensboro winning the International Catholic Stewardship Council's Parish Stewardship Certificate of Recognition, both in September.

In reflecting on 2007, Bishop Jugis said he was grateful for the five new priests and two new transitional deacons. "They are gifts from God for the future of our diocese," he said.

"I am grateful for the presence of men and women religious who witness to Christ by their consecrated lives, and I thank God for the ministry of our permanent deacons. The laity, who involve themselves in all parish ministries, have contributed immensely to the joy and vitality of our parishes this past year," said the bishop.

"I am grateful for the blessings God gave our diocese in 2007 through our Eucharistic Congress. It brought our entire diocese together as one, and strengthened our faith and love for the eucharistic Lord," said Bishop Jugis. "I am grateful for the blessings of Christian joy, charity and faith that I see present everywhere I go in the diocese."

*A will is your answer to the question. 60-70% of Americans die without a valid will. If you die without a will, the laws of the state you live in will determine how your assets are divided including assets to your family. Without a will or other charitable estate plan, charitable desires you may have for your parish, Catholic school, agency, diocese or the diocesan foundation will be ignored. ## Priest's personal stories of World War II Europe make horrors more real

VIEWED BY RACHELLE LINNER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

To understand a period as complex as World War II and the Holocaust, we need to read both trained historians and ordinary men and women.

Historians provide a broad overview and an understanding of context but it is only individuals who can communicate the intimate details of what it is like to endure the suffering of mind, body and soul that is the reality of war.

Personal narratives can elicit the empathy and identification that move the reader to compassion and insight. One book under consideration, while not among the central Holocaust narratives, is important in fleshing out our knowledge of those terrible years.

Luxembourgian Father Jean Bernard (1907-1994) was a prisoner in the Dachau concentration camp from May 1941 to August 1942. "Priestblock 25487" was originally published in a newspaper series in 1945 and was loosely adapted into the acclaimed 2004 German film, "The Ninth Day."

Father Bernard's factual narrative is direct and explicit reportage and as such it gives a brutally honest recitation of what it was like to endure the clergy barracks of Dachau.

It is difficult to imagine how people managed to endure these depths of misery: physical and emotional torture, starvation, disease, unceasing cold, hard physical labor and merciless guards.

Moreover, conditions could, and often did, change radically. At the whim of sadistic guards and the camp commandant, rations were cut and prisoners were assigned to more dangerous or useless work details, or forced to undergo collective punishment exercises.

Father Bernard does not offer theological reflections on his experience but in a luminous passage he describes participating in his first Mass at Dachau.

"Hoc est corpus meum." I look at the two bits of bread in my hand, and as the one for whom we are suffering all this comes into our midst, as in their hearts hundreds of priests join their offering with that of the Savior, tears roll down my cheeks.

"It becomes a single offering that certainly creates new ties between heaven and earth."

It is because of his suffering that Father Bernard has the right to call on us not to forget, but to forgive.

"We must forgive while remaining conscious of the full horror of what occurred, not only because nothing constructive can be built on a foundation of hatred ... but above all for the sake of him who commands and urges us to forgive, and before whom we, victims and executioners alike, are all poor debtors in need of mercy."

SUNDAY SCRIPTURE READINGS: JAN. 13, 2008

Jan. 13, The Baptism of the Lord

Cycle A Readings:

- 1) Isaiah 42:1-4, 6-7
Psalm 29:1-4, 3, 9-10
- 2) Acts 10:34-38
- Gospel: Matthew 3:13-17

Our baptism calls us to be Jesus' light in the world

BY JEFF HENSLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Just before the Holy Spirit descends on Cornelius and his household (in the Scripture that follows the Acts reading for this week), Peter asks if they know "about Jesus of Nazareth beginning in Galilee with the baptism that John preached, of the way God anointed him with the Holy Spirit and power. He went about doing good works ...."

Pretty exciting stuff, this proclamation of the person of Jesus and the power that flows from this living connection to God.

Though all of us are not called to pursue all of the ministries Jesus exercised, we are all called to help him in his role, as Isaiah puts it, to be "a light for the nations, to open the eyes of the blind, to bring out prisoners from confinement" in one small way or another.

My friend who is an authority on immigration law helps others do this quite literally. When the lawyers he was allied with failed to keep certain matters of immigration law from being decided by judges not schooled in that field, it fell to him to write a handbook to help inform them of the appropriate laws.

His efforts could literally be used to bring prisoners from confinement.

A friend who is a writer went to Haiti to write about the horrible conditions in the slums of Port-au-Prince. She later followed up with mission visits as part of her own parish's efforts to help Haitians make a decent living.

They worked hand in hand with local Catholics in the poor but faith- and generosity-rich Haitian countryside.

My wife Susan has made a career in education, at first working with poor inner-city children, helping them raise their reading scores.

For more than 15 years, she has worked with immigrant children from every continent, providing for their transition into regular studies while providing that same home base of security and acceptance in her classroom.

A friend who is a doctor has served the poor with the healing arts. Most recently, he and his wife have run a Christian-based hospice where people's faith is respected and encouraged as they and their families prepare for their return to the giver of all good gifts, the one of whom David in the psalm for today says, "Give to the Lord the glory due his name."

There's power in baptism, and it all began with Jesus submitting to John the Baptizer.

Questions:

Is there some small way God is calling you to be a light for others, to call out prisoners from darkness? Are you called to the support of others who engage in more active ministries?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"Behold the heavens were opened [for him], and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove [and] coming upon him" (Matthew 3:16b).

Keys2Heaven Web site connects personal stories to faith

ERIE, Pa. (CNS) — Tami Kimet died — and lived to tell about it.

“I’m not afraid of dying, I’ve been there. All those people are waiting for us,” said Kimet, a married mother of two who attends St. Luke Church in Erie.

Her incredible journey to the afterlife during a heart operation is the first of a series of inspirational stories set to music in a new project titled Keys2Heaven.

Ryan and Tim O’Neill, who honed their keyboard skills at the University of Notre Dame in Indiana, have sold more than a million compact discs. Now they have teamed with Greg Schlueter, a video producer in Erie with extensive background in Catholic projects, to ask, “What’s your story of faith?”

Kimet shared her story and now the O’Neills and Schlueter would like to know the stories of others. They invite people to visit the project’s Web site, www.Keys2Heaven.com, and add a personal faith story.

Once a month they plan to select a new story and set it to music, leading up to completion of a 12-track CD titled “Stories of Faith: 12 Songs Inspired by You!” A companion booklet containing the corresponding stories will be included.

“Everyone has a story, and the project aims to help people intimately connect with God in their personal story,” Schlueter said. “Piano keys can literally be keys to heaven, a way of connecting people to God through music.”

The O’Neills, siblings who are known as the Piano Brothers, say music offers a unique window to God and opens the senses to the different ways in which God shows love and compassion.

“It is a blessing to provide the music to help make that happen,” Ryan said.

The O’Neills are no strangers to success. They have six Billboard hits, songs appearing on HBO, PBS, NBC and ESPN, and an Emmy nomination.

But, they said, an abiding faith in God is at the heart of their piano playing.

“For us it has always been a prayer and an occasion for others to connect with God. If it does that for just one person, we’ve succeeded. Piano for us has always been keys to heaven,” Tim O’Neill said.

Both brothers are members of Our Lady of Grace Church in Edina, Minn.

Those visiting the Keys2Heaven home page can view a trailer in which Kimet shares her story as the O’Neills softly play the song “On the Other Side.”

Visitors to the Web site are invited to register and download the first track for free. They also can go to the “K2H Theater” and view Kimet’s entire story, which Dr. Christopher Strzalka, her surgeon, describes as “chilling.”

Catholics Ryan and Tim O’Neill, pictured in an undated photo, link their music to personal faith stories people post on a special Web site, www.Keys2Heaven.com. Keys2Heaven is a new project started by the brothers, who have sold more than a million compact discs as the “Piano Brothers.”

The story includes an encounter with angels and Kimet’s belief that she was sent back to this life to comfort those who have a life-threatening illness.

The theater also features other inspiring clips and an opportunity to receive a monthly e-mail newsletter titled “The Story.”

“Keys2Heaven is a comprehensive mission,” said Schlueter, whose companies have contributed to the success of “The Chronicles of Narnia” from Disney and Walden Media, “God or the Girl” on the A&E cable network, the baseball film “Champions of Faith,” and “Superman Returns” for Warner Bros.

Schlueter said a portion of all proceeds from their CD sales will go to faith-based, nonprofit groups.

Polish cardinal’s book about late pope made into miniseries, film

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Polish Cardinal Stanislaw Dziwisz’s book about Pope John Paul II and his 39 years as the pope’s personal secretary is being made into a three-part television miniseries and a film simultaneously.

“A Life With Karol,” which begins with the day Polish Archbishop Karol Wojtyla of Krakow, the future pope, asked then-Father Dziwisz to be his secretary, will be narrated by both the cardinal and British actor Michael York.

Producer Przemyslaw Hauser said he has 16 hours of taped interviews with the cardinal, now archbishop of Krakow, and was shooting on location in Gdansk, Poland, as well as at the Vatican.

“The idea is that we wanted to know more about John Paul II, which we got from the cardinal’s book, but in the interviews he told us many more things,” Hauser said.

Despite a standard Vatican prohibition against allowing commercial projects to film inside the Vatican, the crew of “A Life With Karol” received permits to film in St. Peter’s Square and in the Sistine Chapel.

Taking a break in the square Dec. 11, York, who played Basil Exposition in the three Austin Powers movies, told Catholic News Service: “I am doing a film in Russia and had two weeks free. They coincided exactly with this shooting in Krakow and Rome. It was destiny.”

York, who played St. John the Baptist in Franco Zeffirelli’s 1977 film, “Jesus of Nazareth,” is not Catholic, but he said he felt “very privileged” to be part of the project.

“Whether you are Catholic or not, you certainly are aware that Karol Wojtyla was remarkable. Reading the cardinal’s book made me realize how remarkable he was,” York said.

Christine Hurley to receive NCEA distinguished teacher award

WINSTON-SALEM — Christine Hurley, assistant principal at St. Leo the Great School in Winston-Salem, has been selected as a distinguished teacher by the National Catholic Educational Association.

Principal Georgette Schraeder announced during a school Christmas celebration Dec. 18, 2007 that Hurley will be a recipient of the NCEA Sister Miriam Joseph Farrell Distinguished Teacher Award.

Twelve teachers are selected each year to receive the award at the annual NCEA convention. Hurley, who won for the South Atlantic States Region, will receive the award at the next convention, to be held in Indianapolis, Ind., March 25.

In a letter to Hurley, Nancy Genzel, the NCEA's regional representative for its Department of Elementary Schools, said Hurley's contributions to Catholic education were "truly impressive."

"Your principal, colleagues, parents and students attest to your outstanding service to them and your commitment to Catholic education," she wrote.

Schraeder called Hurley "a source of great inspiration to all at St. Leo Catholic School."

"Christine, you are loved and a treasure for your students ... you are appreciated by the parents and your principal and diocese," Schraeder said during her presentation speech.

During the gathering, Father Brian Cook, pastor of St. Leo the Great Church, presented Hurley with a dozen roses.

Schraeder told Hurley the roses were "in testimony to your outstanding 12 years of service based on faith and love to St. Leo School."

The award, presented by the NCEA's Department of Elementary Schools, was established in 1981 in honor of Sister Farrell, a Sister of the Presentation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, who served as the department's executive secretary until her illness and death in 1970.

The award is presented to one teacher in each of 12 geographic regions determined by the department. In honoring the 12 teachers each year, the department said it also honors the tens of thousands of outstanding teachers in all Catholic elementary schools.

The Alpha and the Omega of 2008

Baptismal reflections will help guide us

Every year begins with the Solemnity of Mary, the Mother of God; the baptism of the Lord and the Epiphany. What a beginning! It seems that the liturgy wants to remind us who is in charge for the rest of year: "Here I am," says the Lord, "I manifest myself to you through my mother, and bring you back to your own baptismal promises."

By beginning the New Year with a day of peace and prayer under the guidance of Mary, it is a startling reminder that peace is not the absence of war but the presence of love.

Looking back at the past year, we may feel sad, defeated and disappointed, or happy and thankful. Looking forward is an opportunity to be filled with faith and hope. We may wish to ponder, as Mary did, all the good things God has given and will give to us.

It is fine to celebrate the New Year with cheers and champagne and fireworks, because a new year is another blessing in our lives. The Catholic Church, however, wants to remind us that the internal celebration goes well beyond the external celebration; the church reminds us to look at the "story beyond the story."

It's no coincidence that the symbols used at our baptisms — water, a white garment, a candle — are also used at our funerals. After all, Jesus is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and end.

While many people can remember their first Communion, confirmation and confession; their graduation; their engagement and wedding; or their ordination, few people can recall their baptism (except those who were baptized as youngsters or adults).

Baptisms are not private, but public, ceremonies, because during our baptisms we become public witnesses of our faith. It really doesn't matter if you were baptized by the pouring of water or immersion in water.

If the water was poured, it meant the descending of the Holy Spirit. If you were immersed, it meant the death of sin; it meant cleansing and resurrection.

To think of our baptism as a one-day event or as a piece of paper, a baptismal certificate, then we may risk our own identity as a Christian. Baptism is so important that even Martin Luther, when he was overwhelmed by the challenges of his sinfulness, would remind himself: "I am baptized."

Let our baptism set the pace for the coming year by our reflecting on that celebration of life.

With the New Year, Christmas is not over or fading away; instead, it is now that the work of Christmas really begins. Jesus' message was love, and that love will be felt in our hearts throughout the new year if we realize that we are baptized in, through, with, by and for Jesus Christ.

So do not wonder how 2008 will be. It will go and end the way you want it to — because the Alpha and the Omega are in your hands, and you are the hands of God.

New Jersey ends the death penalty

Catholics play crucial part in historic victory

Dec. 17, 2007, was a Monday that will go down in history. That day, New Jersey Governor Jon S. Corzine signed a bill repealing the death penalty in the state.

His action marked the first time in nearly 32 years that a state repealed capital punishment as the way to deal with the heinous crime of murder.

In 1976, the U.S. Supreme Court reaffirmed and set death by execution as the way America would deal with those guilty of this ultimate crime. With that decision, 37 states chose to be death-penalty states.

It is now down to 36, thanks to New Jersey! As Catholics who are pro-life, we must celebrate the great news.

Since 1976, executions in the U.S. have totaled 1,099. Some who were hanged, shot by firing squads, electrocuted or poisoned may have been innocent.

With scientific advances, now we can be more certain of evidence used to convict or free. Thanks to DNA testing, 125 death-row inmates were found innocent of the crimes for which they were convicted.

Many Catholics can be credited for doing faithful work in the cause of replacing the death penalty in New Jersey with life-in-prison sentences with no chance of parole.

"Catholics played an important role" in ending the death penalty in her state, said Celeste Fitzgerald, director of New Jerseyans for Alternatives for the Death Penalty. She added that "the New Jersey Catholic Conference and the bishops have been tremendous in their support" of ending state-sponsored killings.

Ending the death penalty in New Jersey became a bipartisan issue, and something of a grassroots movement with some unexpected supporters, Fitzgerald said. "Many family members of victims — 62, in fact — signed letters calling for an end to the death penalty, which they felt only added to their pain."

The Bottom Line

ANTOINETTE BOSCO
CNS COLUMNIST

"Many law enforcement officials signed. During the hearings, a pro-death-penalty police chief, moved by what he heard, changed his mind" and supported abolition of capital punishment.

"It was clear that the death penalty just failed as a policy," said Fitzgerald.

Her own commitment began when she was young; she was raised by Catholic pro-life parents.

"I'll never forget when Pope John Paul II was in the United States in 1979," recalled Fitzgerald. "He was so clear on where he stood on opposing the death penalty."

Pope John Paul espoused the position of the Community of Sant'Egidio, based in Italy, which has long called for a global moratorium on capital punishment.

As spokesperson Mario Marazziti affirms, the death penalty "is not a deterrent, it does not reduce the number of crimes, but it lowers the state to the level of those who kill, and it affirms a culture of death at the highest level."

Governor Corzine deserves the greatest respect for saying outright that he has believed for most of his adult life "that capital punishment is wrong."

The New York Times quoted him saying that he believed "from my heart and from my soul" that ending capital punishment in New Jersey was the right decision.

I asked Fitzgerald what she believed made the difference in ending the death penalty in New Jersey.

Without hesitation she said, "We won because we believed we could."

RCIA: A pattern for our journey in faith

One of the best things to happen to the church since the Second Vatican Council has been the RCIA. The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults is a much-improved way to help people along the path to conversion.

More than just "rites" of initiation, it is about a lifelong journey in faith. The process of RCIA should begin a lifetime of continuing education for everyone, convert and cradle Catholic alike.

In our parish we call RCIA the "Journey in Faith."

In the old days, "converts" to Catholicism might have met privately with a priest for a few sessions of instruction. They might read a book together. The whole process was solitary and in some ways unnoticed by the whole parish. The adult convert was a very rare bird in many parishes.

Today, adult converts are more common and more publicly celebrated and welcomed. Many of the most active members of my parish are people who came into or back to the church as adults.

Many have spent a lifetime wandering in a spiritual wilderness. For them, RCIA is a discovery of faith and community. Some have lived on the fringe of the church for years; RCIA is a sort of homecoming.

Parish Diary

FATHER PETER
DALY
CNS COLUMNIST

Like most parishes, our "Journey in Faith" is not just me instructing the converts. We have about a dozen people on our team. Many of them are converts themselves. The team approach tells the convert that the whole community is involved. The church as a whole, lay and clergy, are involved in teaching and welcoming new members.

Faith is not just a gift of the clergy; it is of the entire community.

Other than the Easter Vigil, the most important moment of our RCIA is a weekend retreat we host for our catechumens and candidates. They hear stories of faith and realize that this faith engages not only the head but the heart.

RCIA increases the joy of passing on the faith and is also a pattern for what we do in continuing adult education.

Next year our parish will take the next step by offering regular adult instruction for people who want to go further. It will also be a journey of 35 weeks, with instruction not just for converts but for any Catholic with questions.

We will use RCIA as a pattern. The Second Vatican Council saw the church as the people of God on the march to our salvation.

For a parish priest, it is great to have so many helpers on that journey.

Membership eligibility in the Knights of Columbus

Q. Can a man belong to the Knights of Columbus if he is divorced? Does it matter any more if he is living with someone else? (New York)

A. Knights of Columbus regulations state that only practicing Catholics are eligible for membership. There was a time when those known not to have fulfilled their Easter sacramental obligations, or who were divorced and remarried, were expelled from the Knights of Columbus, generally with the consent of the local pastor or chaplain.

One spokesman for the Supreme Council of the Knights told me, unless it is a case of serious scandal, "there is more concern about bringing an individual back to church and to the sacraments so he will indeed be a practicing Catholic rather than rejecting him from our society."

National Knight of Columbus officials have concluded it is nearly impossible to establish a rule which would govern every case and still be fair to everyone. Consequently, they ordinarily leave such decisions to the local grand knights and chaplains.

Polygamy and the Catholic Church

Q. In connection with a polygamy trial recently in the news, I was told the Catholic Church formerly allowed a man to have more than one wife until the Middle Ages. That's hard to believe, but is it true? (Florida)

A. There's no evidence that the Catholic Church either in its various theologies or in official teachings ever approved a husband having more than one wife at the same time.

The confusion you encountered could have several explanations. In the Old Testament the Hebrew people clearly believed that God approved of polygamous marriages, at least in some instances, and particularly among higher social classes and political leaders.

Christian theologians have speculated on why having more than one wife should enjoy divine approval in one age and not in another. Some said polygamy is only illicit today because of a command from God.

A more common explanation is that having several wives is against the natural law but was once permitted by God for special reasons. In either case, none has defended polygamy as a morally lawful option since the time of Christ.

Several hundred years ago the church made some strong declarations against polygamy that could seem to imply that the teaching was something new.

These statements were made, however, to repudiate a stand taken by some Protestant reformers that leaned heavily toward occasional permission to have more than one wife.

Philip, Landgrave (prince) of Hesse in Germany, for example, who had made his court a Lutheran center, consulted Martin Luther and Philip Melancthon about his desire to take a second wife.

They gave their approval since "what was permitted in marriage in the law of Moses, the Gospel does not take away." The Council of Trent in 1563 opposed that position.

Even into the 20th century some writers unfriendly toward the Catholic Church claimed that Pope Clement VII (died 1534) declared himself prepared to grant a dispensation to England's King Henry VIII for bigamy.

While Pope Clement's procrastination in the matter of Henry's divorce from Catherine of Aragon contributed to the spread of Protestant teaching during his pontificate, to my knowledge no historian today seriously suggests that he contemplated authorizing polygamy for anyone.

Pope calls on Christians to turn to Mary for help in building peace

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI called on Christians to turn to Mary, the mother of God, for help in being true friends of Jesus and courageous builders of peace.

In his first general audience of 2008, the pope greeted thousands of pilgrims Jan. 2 in the Vatican's Paul VI hall, bestowing upon them his "prayerful good wishes" for the new year.

He said the new year had been ushered in "under the sign of the Virgin Mary" as the church celebrated the Jan. 1 feast of Mary, Mother of God.

He invited the faithful to "carefully consider the importance of the presence of Mary in the life of the church and in our own personal life" and prayed that Mary would help "make us more keenly aware of her maternal presence."

Mary's divine motherhood, her Immaculate Conception, and her assumption, body and soul, into heaven are privileges that do not remove Mary from her children, but rather bring her closer to the faithful, he said.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

At the beginning of this New Year, I offer prayerful good wishes to all of you and to your families.

Yesterday, the church joyfully celebrated the solemnity of Mary, Mother of God. This ancient title of Our Lady — Theotokos — reflects the truth that Jesus, her Son, is true God and true man.

The confirmation of this title at the Council of Ephesus in the fifth century led to ever greater devotion to Mary and the dedication of numerous churches in her honor, including the Basilica of St. Mary Major here in Rome.

During this Christmas season, we can sense the close relationship between the Incarnation and Our Lady's dignity as the Mother of God. Indeed, the title "Mother of God" expresses Mary's special mission in the history of salvation and her particular role in the mystery of Christ and the church.

Our Lady's divine motherhood is in fact the basis of every other title by which the church honors her. Mother of God and mother of the church, Mary was also entrusted by Christ to be the mother of each of his disciples (cf. Jn 19:27).

In this New Year, may we turn to her with confidence and, through her protection and prayers, be strengthened in our love for Jesus her Son and our service to the coming of his Kingdom.

The game plan for overcoming toxic thoughts

Liberation stems from willpower and pure prayer

Jim wanted to quit smoking. Whenever the New Year came around, he felt discouraged. Having broken so many resolutions in the past, he was afraid of trying again. He just couldn't kick the habit.

It wasn't because he was weak that Jim couldn't quit. He would climb Mount Everest in a snowstorm to get a smoke if he needed to.

What Jim lacked was a game plan. He needed to know more about the human psyche.

The soul is made up of intellect and will. The will is the center of the personality. The will says "yes" or "no."

The will can only control the thoughts; the thoughts in turn control the feelings, and these emotions in turn control the actions.

The will says yes or no to your thoughts. It has no direct control over your actions. To get to your actions, the will has to go through the thoughts, which make the feelings change.

Feelings and cravings can drive you to act against your own best intentions. Learn to condition your feelings by working hard to control your thoughts.

You are not your thoughts. You are the observer of your thoughts. Thoughts come and go willy-nilly; some are healthy and some are toxic.

You are the center of your personality. You control your will to say yes to healthy thoughts and no to toxic ones. Toxic thoughts create toxic feelings.

Here is a typical toxic thought: "I need a fix, no matter what!" This is a false belief that will upset your emotions.

You have to reject it with all your heart. Contradict your toxic thinking with positive thoughts.

Decide to crave good health. Decide to be happy. Decide to become your own best friend.

Decide to love yourself by believing that you are called by God to be an instrument of joy.

Decide to rise to the highest aspirations of the human spirit.

Smoking, for example, will damage your health, make you angry with yourself and interfere with your vocation. The more you think about being healthy, the less you will want to fill your lungs with poisonous smoke.

Controlling your thoughts is at the very heart of all spiritual progress.

Most people live by their feelings, but feelings are ultimately shaped by their thoughts. Control your thoughts and you will control your feelings, your actions, your personality and your destiny.

Spirituality for Today

FATHER JOHN CATOIR
CNS COLUMNIST

Dwell on clean, healthy thoughts, and your emotional life will become healthy. If you still find yourself entertaining toxic thoughts despite your best efforts, then begin to pray as never before.

Pray for the grace to make your good intentions a reality.

Grace builds on nature.

Twelve-step programs, for example, have saved millions of people all over the world.

Step One: The addict realizes he (or she) is powerless over some problem or some chemical substance.

Step Two: He also realizes that God has the power to help him.

Step Three: He turns his life and his will over to the God of his understanding, believing that God will do for him what he is not able to do for himself.

People have been liberated from their addictions by following this game plan that involves pure prayer and training of the will.

Pure prayer is nothing more than the will to give yourself to God. You never have to force feelings of any kind. Feelings will follow thoughts at their own pace.

Patience obtains all.

People take shelter Jan. 2 in a police station after ethnic violence in Eldoret, Kenya. An explosion of tribal violence over a disputed presidential election has claimed the lives of more than 300 people, including 30 burned alive at a Pentecostal church in Eldoret.

Kenyan Catholic bishops appeal for dialogue to resolve violence

BY FRANICS NJUGUNA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NAIROBI, Kenya — Following days of violence and death after the announcement of disputed election results, Kenya's Catholic bishops appealed to political leaders to make every effort to engage in dialogue to resolve the crisis.

A church official also said a bishop in one of the areas with the worst violence had appealed for help for the local humanitarian crisis.

"We appeal specifically to the political leaders ... to reach out to one another through dialogue in order to seek a solution to the present situation," said a Jan. 2 statement signed by 24 Kenyan bishops, including Nairobi Cardinal John Njue, chairman of the Kenya Episcopal Conference.

The four-page statement, "My Peace I Give You," emphasized that Kenya needs peace based on justice and true brotherhood. The bishops offered to mediate the crisis and proposed a review of the election results.

"We make an appeal to all responsible to seek ways like establishing a commission to audit and specifically review the tallying of the parliamentary and presidential polls," said the bishops, noting allegations of electoral irregularities.

"We urge that everything possible should be done in order to investigate and establish the truth of these claims by means other than violence and destruction of property," they said.

The Kenya Human Rights Commission and the International Federation for Human Rights said more than 300 people had died since the Dec. 27 presidential election in which President Mwai Kibaki was declared the winner.

Among those dead were up to 50 people burned alive in an Assemblies of God church where they had sought refuge in the city of Eldoret.

Property damage throughout Kenya has been estimated in the millions.

Raila Odinga, the opposition candidate, claims the election was rigged. The head of the country's electoral commission said both sides pressured him to announce the results quickly, and he is not sure he announced the correct results.

The bishops urged Kenyans — especially youths — to exercise restraint in their behavior and remarks and to refuse to take part "in any form of destruction, looting or even receiving stolen goods."

"Do not think you are powerless," they said. "You can do something. Talk to relatives, friends, neighbors, people you know who can help resolve the current situations."

Father Vincent Wambugu, secretary-general of the Kenya Episcopal Conference, said the current crisis had affected close to 75,000 people of various faiths.

"Half of this figure is being sheltered within the Eldoret Catholic diocese," he said.

Ugandan official told The Associated Press that more than 5,000 people had fled to Uganda, and AP reported several hundred had fled to Tanzania.

Father Wambugu told Catholic News Service that churches in the Eldoret Diocese had established an interreligious coordinating committee, while the local Catholic Church has told the Kenyan branch of the charitable agency Caritas Internationalis and the U.S. bishops' Catholic Relief Services to coordinate the humanitarian crisis.

The priest said Eldoret Bishop Cornelius Arap Korir had appealed to his fellow Catholic bishops to come to the aid of the diocese "at this hour of need."

Father Wambugu said the bishop asked for food, bedding, tents and anything else necessary for sheltering the rapidly increasing number of needy people.

Marianist Brother Francis "Frank" Deibel is pictured at Mercy Siena Gardens assisted living facility in Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 9. The 99-year-old spends three to four hours every day on his computer, exchanging e-mails with more than 100 contacts. He has been a Marianist for 81 years, professing his first vows in 1926.

At 99, tech-savvy Marianist uses computer three to four hours a day

DAYTON, Ohio (CNS) — "Maybe I should be reading more," mused Marianist Brother Francis Deibel.

The 99-year-old brother may have a point. Each day he spends up to four hours at his computer exchanging e-mails with more than 100 contacts.

"Lately I've been getting too many e-mails," added Brother Deibel, who thinks too many older people are afraid of technology and computers.

"I try to open and read all of them, but sometimes they are too numerous," he said.

He begins his computer time by forwarding readings about the saint of the day.

"I send this information to all my Marianist contacts," he said.

He then spends hours answering personal e-mails and deleting junk e-mails.

Brother Deibel has been a Marianist since 1926 — one year before the first "talkie" feature film.

"I began using a computer when it was just a bunch of wires put together," he said.

He refined his skills in classes at the University of Dayton, where he worked for 48 years as a librarian. He also credits 86-year-old Marianist Brother Bill Callahan, whom Brother Deibel calls his "young" friend, with teaching him additional skills.

Brother Deibel started e-mailing in 1990 and he says he has used his computer daily ever since. His e-mail address book has four groups: Marianists, relatives, "something else," and "all."

The size of his groups are growing, too.

"When I learn of a new e-mail address for someone I know, I'll add it to my list, if it is OK with that person. It doesn't cost extra to add them, so I go ahead and do it," he said.

Brother Deibel said it's possible for all of his fellow senior citizens to pick up the technological tricks of the trade.

"I would encourage old people not to be afraid of the computer," he said. "Too many old people are, but there is nothing to be afraid of. It's just like a typewriter. It won't talk back at you! Learn how to use it."

"Don't lose time watching TV. Using the computer is much more personal and enjoyable," he said.

Christians, Muslims pray at memorial services for Benazir Bhutto

LAHORE, Pakistan (CNS) — Christians and Muslims joined in memorial services for former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto in churches around the country as they called for an independent inquiry into her assassination.

More than 300 people — including nuns, human rights activists and political leaders from Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party — gathered at Sacred Heart Cathedral in Lahore for a special Mass Jan. 6.

They placed garlands, bouquets and candles near large portraits of Bhutto in front of the altar and at the entrance of the cathedral.

Banners read: "We salute Benazir Bhutto for struggling for the restoration of minorities' rights and prosperity for the poor," "She was a hope for minorities" and "We demand immediate arrest of the killers of Bhutto."

The All Pakistan Minority Alliance, a Christian political party, called for a National Prayer Day Jan. 6 to honor Bhutto, 54, who was killed in Rawalpindi, near Islamabad, Dec. 27.

Archbishop Lawrence Saldanha of Lahore, president of the Pakistan Catholic Bishops' Conference, and Father Andrew Nisari, vicar general of the Lahore Archdiocese, concelebrated the memorial Mass at the cathedral.

Similar gatherings took place in other churches, where Catholic and Protestant leaders as well as political workers — both Christians and Muslims — prayed together.

Father Nisari said the killing of a woman of Bhutto's caliber was the worst example of social illiteracy and ignorance. He urged all present to pray for change in the minds of terrorists.

Jehangir Badar, general secretary of the Pakistan People's Party, said: "We vow, in this holy assembly, to continue the mission of our courageous leader, who respected the Christian community and considered them equal citizens."

Spokesman says care of environment common theme for Pope Benedict

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The obligation to care for the environment and protect the earth as the “common home” of all humanity is a theme that increasingly is found in the teaching of Pope Benedict XVI, his spokesman said.

Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi told Vatican Radio Jan. 5 that ecology “is an argument which comes up with more frequency in the words of the pope, mirroring the growing ecological concerns of humanity.”

Concern for the environment was a major theme in Pope Benedict’s message for the Jan. 1 celebration of World Peace Day.

“Until recently, the theme of the environment seemed like a concern of the rich rather than the poor, of developed countries rather than developing nations for whom economic growth is an absolute priority,” said Father Lombardi.

GASTONIA VICARIATE

BELMONT — A study series, “Living the Questions 2.0,” will be offered at Queen of the Apostles Church, 503 N. Main St., Tuesdays in January, 7:30-9 p.m. This series is for the serious Christian who is concerned with and committed to the way of Jesus Christ in the world and journeying with God through the labyrinth of human experience. For more information, call Dennis Teall-Fleming, director of faith formation.

GREENSBORO VICARIATE

GREENSBORO —The Greensboro Council of Catholic Women will host a covered dish luncheon at St. Paul the Apostle Church Jan. 23 (snow date Jan. 30) 12-2 p.m. Program will be presented by Jane Hamlin, storyteller. For more information, please contact Carmen Wood (336) 545-9266.

HIGH POINT — Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, 4145 Johnson St., will host an Open House Jan. 30 at 7:15 p.m. for the general public, parishioners and anyone else with questions regarding or interest in the Catholic faith. We extend our invitation to Catholics and non-Catholics, parishioners or anyone who has fallen away from the church for any reason. Father Jack Kelly will open the evening, and then the directors of RCIA, HOSEA, adult faith formation and Bible studies will introduce their programs. The event will include a tour of the church, refreshments and a question-and-answer session. Written information will also be available. SMOKY MOUNTAIN VICARIATE

SYLVA — Dr. David Dorondo, professor of history at Western Carolina University, will present “The Myth of Hitler’s Pope”

Now, people are realizing that ecological exploitation and destruction worsens the effects of natural disasters and mortgages the future of the poorest countries, he said.

Pope Benedict’s approach, Father Lombardi said, is “a strong moral appeal to solidarity on the basis of a recognition of the universal destination of the goods of creation, which belong also to the poor and to future generations.”

In his World Peace Day message, the pope wrote, “We need to care for the environment: It has been entrusted to men and women to be protected and cultivated with responsible freedom, with the good of all as a constant guiding criterion.”

“The problems looming on the horizon are complex and time is short,” he said, suggesting new international agencies may be needed to help promote and coordinate global efforts.

Jan. 21 at 6 p.m. at St. Mary, Mother of God Church, 22 Bartlett St., in the fellowship hall. Dorondo will give the facts about Pope Pius XII, Adolf Hitler, the Catholic Church and Nazi Germany. A potluck supper will be followed by the presentation. For more information, call Matthew Newsome at (828) 586-1747 or the church office at (828) 586-9496.

WINSTON-SALEM VICARIATE

WINSTON-SALEM — Franciscan Sister Kathy Ganiel will present “Primacy of Christ (Scotus)” Jan. 13, 3-5 p.m. as part of a series of free talks offering an exploration into some of the major contributions of Franciscan men and women of faith. The talk will take place at the Fatima Chapel, 211 W. Third St. For more information and registration, e-mail spiritofassisi@bellsouth.net or call (336) 723-1092.

WINSTON-SALEM — Spirit of Assisi presents the Wednesday Lunch Series, 12:30-1:15 p.m., through Feb. 27 (except Feb. 6), at the Fatima Chapel, 211 W. Third St. Enjoy a light lunch and free presentations from a variety of faith traditions addressing the topic of peacemaking. Imam Khalid Fattah Griggs (Islam) will speak Jan. 16 and Judith Dancy (Friends Meeting) will speak Jan. 23. You may call ahead to indicate your attendance, but walk-ins are welcome. # Vatican to encourage greater caution in opening sainthood causes

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Vatican is preparing to issue a set of instructions to promote “greater caution and more accuracy” in the opening of new sainthood causes by local dioceses, a top Vatican official said.

Cardinal Jose Saraiva Martins, head of the Congregation for Saints’ Causes, said the instructions were needed to reflect the “new spirit introduced by Pope Benedict XVI in beatification procedures.”

The cardinal spoke in an interview published Jan. 8 by the Vatican newspaper, L’Osservatore Romano, under the headline: “More precision will be asked in diocesan canonization processes.”

Cardinal Saraiva Martins said the new document will be addressed to all resident bishops, instructing them on procedures regarding the opening and advancement of sainthood causes.

It will underline how the “theology of the local church” is manifested in such causes, he said.

The cardinal said the beatification of a local member represents an intense moment of faith and joy for church communities.

“But precisely because of this new value and this additional fervor implied by such events, it is necessary to proceed with even greater caution and more accuracy,” he said.

He said the new document would probably be formally presented to journalists at the Vatican press office.

The congregation also intends to bring the new instructions to the attention of the hundreds of postulants who guide sainthood causes, possibly through a day of study, he said.

Asked if the new instructions would help put an end to stories about the church’s “saint factories,” Cardinal Saraiva Martins said the term does not even merit a response.

The church does not make saints; it merely follows procedures so that they are recognized, he said.

DIOCESAN REQUIREMENTS FOR REPORTING MINISTRY-RELATED SEXUAL ABUSE OF A MINOR

1. Any individual having actual knowledge of or reasonable cause to suspect an incident of ministry-related sexual abuse is to immediately report the incident to the Chancery.
2. The Chancery will then report the incident to the proper civil authorities. The individual reporting the incident to the Chancery will be notified of the particulars regarding the Chancery’s filing of the incident with civil authorities.
3. This reporting requirement is not intended to supersede the right of an individual to make a report to civil authority, but is to ensure proper, complete and timely reporting. Should an individual choose to make a report to civil authority, a report is still to be made to the Chancery.

Pilot program develops students' language skills

create a classroom for students with special educational needs. Surveys were sent to about 40 Catholic households with children and adults with learning disabilities.

"Language skills was the major issue we saw in the responses," said Pat Murphy, director of government programs and diversity for Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools.

The pilot program opened its doors in September 2007 with two co-teachers: Lannie Davis, a recent graduate of the University of Dayton, Ohio; and Dorian Settín, who has a master's degree in special education and 15 years' teaching experience at ABC Educational Services, which offers language-stimulation and other tutoring programs.

"This opportunity was so rare — to find a special education classroom in a Catholic school, to be able to be so close to my students and their parents — I couldn't pass it up," said Davis.

"We love these kids and we know God has a plan for them."

— Lannie Davis

The program can accommodate eight children, ages 7 to 11. A sixth student and a teacher's aide are expected to join the class soon.

The program couldn't have come at a better time for 11-year-old Megan Walton, who communicates largely through sign language. Last year she was the oldest student at ABC and had outgrown their language-stimulation program; her parents were considering homeschooling her.

"This been like a real school for her, and it's everything we hoped for," said her mother, Laura Walton.

Both Settín and Davis stressed how important it is to their students' self-esteem that they have the same experiences as their siblings and schoolmates.

Three of the students have siblings in Catholic schools, including Megan, whose twin brother and another brother and sister, also twins, are enrolled at St. Matthew School in Charlotte.

"It means so much to them to wear the same uniform and to bring home the same report card as their siblings," said Settín.

Settín and Davis strive to give their students a full Catholic school experience, particularly their religious instruction; three of the students are preparing to receive first Communion.

"We try to take each individual child — where they are academically, spiritually — and continue their progress," said Settín.

"Being able to spend 45 minutes with one student on a task is wonderful," Davis said.

One of the biggest victories for the program has been the students' interactions with each other and with other St. Ann School students.

"Matthew is Megan's biggest advocate," Davis said. "He helps me interpret her signs when I don't understand her."

St. Ann School's students have embraced their new schoolmates as well. Some students have learned enough sign language to ask Megan to play with them, and the pilot program's students sit with their friends from other classrooms during lunch.

"What is so unique about our program is that we're both part of a larger school community and we're still a self-contained class," Davis said.

To prepare the St. Ann student body to greet their new schoolmates, Settín and Davis visited each classroom last fall and read a story about how every student learns differently.

"It's been wonderful for our students to see that there are children who are not necessarily handicapped, but who learn in a different way," said Sister of St. Joseph Helene Nagle, principal of St. Ann School.

Murphy said she hopes the pilot program will grow as the children grow, so they can have a similar program in middle school.

"We've watched these kids grow from some of them not talking at all (in September) to all of them communicating now," said Sister Nagle. "They've opened up like flowers, each in his or her own way."

Settín expects most of her students will eventually be able to join regular classrooms.

"When they're ready, we will mainstream them into as many programs as possible," she said.

"We love these kids and we know God has a plan for them," said Davis.

Southern Catholic leaders helpful in ending segregation

Marianist-run University of Dayton, in Ohio, identified Bishop Vincent Waters of Raleigh, N.C., and the Society of Christ Our King, which had a convent in Danville, in her presentation, "Living With Jim Crow in Virginia and North Carolina: Black and White Catholic Experiences of Racial Segregation."

The two-hour panel focused on race, religion and gender issues in the South in the 35 years following World War II.

At the time of Bishop Waters' episcopal ministry, Moore said, North Carolina had the lowest percentage of Catholics of any state in the nation, hovering at about 1 percent.

Yet the bishop of what was then a statewide diocese decreed in 1954 that there would be no more segregation in Catholic high schools.

A year later, he ordered that Catholic elementary schools also be opened to African-American students.

Earlier, Bishop Waters — who was in charge of the Raleigh see for nearly 30 years — had decreed that the diocese would no longer build separate churches for black and white Catholics.

With these mandates, Moore said, "equal rights would be in effect in the church in North Carolina" and "racial prejudice would be a heresy in North Carolina."

The nuns in Danville took seriously the charge in the 1931 papal encyclical "Quadragesimo Anno" to "reconstruct society in the name of Christ," Moore said.

Their efforts, she added, were a combination of high-profile visibility and subterfuge.

When Hazel Carter, a black woman and the only Catholic in her Baptist family, started attending Sacred Heart Church in Danville — the only Catholic church in a 35-mile radius, Moore estimated — she took on the custom of sitting in the back of the congregation.

The sisters took note of this and, one Sunday, sat where black worshippers tended to sit. Carter sat in the pew in front of the sisters, according to Moore. The following Sunday, the sisters all moved up one pew, prompting Carter to do the same.

This continued for several weeks until Carter was in the middle of the congregation on Sundays.

Moore said Carter responded in part by serving as the godmother for eight baptisms in the late 1950s and early '60s — five adult blacks and the first three African-American children to be enrolled at Sacred Heart's grade school.

Because Catholics were so scarce in southern Virginia, the sisters were immediately recognizable — helped in part by a habit redesign that made the pages of Time magazine.

But after they participated en masse in a civil rights demonstration, Moore said, they were told by Bishop John Russell of Richmond that all clergy and religious were forbidden from taking part in public demonstrations.

movement from their convent, he added.

That they did. At the convent, they hosted teach-ins by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, one of the many civil rights groups springing up in the civil rights era in the South.

Committee members stayed at the convent when participating in a civil rights march in Danville, the last capital of the Confederate States of America.

Later, Dorothy Day, co-founder of the Catholic Worker Movement, also gave a teach-in at the convent and spent the night there prior to a march.

Moore said Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. stopped by the convent late one night to thank the sisters for all their efforts.

The story cannot be verified; only the mother superior was awake at the time, "and she didn't wake any of the sisters" to meet Rev. King, Moore said.

Pope warns diplomats that conflicts threaten global stability

Pope Benedict XVI greets an ambassador to the Vatican during a meeting at the Vatican Jan. 8. The pope condemned violence throughout the world and said that respect for the human rights and legitimate aspirations of peoples is the only path to peace.

"At present, terrorist attacks, threats and violence continue, especially against the Christian community, and the news which arrived yesterday confirms our concern," he said.

Church officials said Jan. 6 that bombs had damaged four churches and three convents in Baghdad and Mosul in what appeared to be coordinated attacks.

Several people were reported injured.

In Iraq, the pope said, "it is clear that certain difficult political issues remain unresolved. In this context, an appropriate constitutional reform will need to safeguard the rights of minorities."

He said those affected by the Iraq War — including refugees and their host countries — need generous aid from the international community.

Turning to Iran, Pope Benedict expressed his support for "continued and uninterrupted pursuit of the path of diplomacy" in resolving the issue of Iran's nuclear program.

On the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, he praised the results of the recent Annapolis, Md., peace conference, which he said pointed toward the "abandonment of partisan or unilateral solutions."

The important thing now is to implement the commitments that were made, he said.

In Lebanon, a country shaken by trials and violence, the people need to be able to freely decide their future, and political leaders should put aside selfish interests and pledge themselves to dialogue, he said.

The pope pointed to several "crisis situations" in Asia, including Pakistan and Afghanistan, two countries torn by violence, and Sri Lanka, where he said there can be no further delay in ending the "immense sufferings" caused by continuing civil strife.

He offered a prayer for a "season of dialogue" and respect for human rights in Myanmar.

He did not mention China in his speech. Last year, he wrote a lengthy letter to Chinese Catholics promoting greater church-state cooperation.

The pope began remarks on Africa by expressing his "deep anguish" at the ongoing cycle of hunger and death in Darfur, a western region of Sudan where hundreds of thousands have perished, and he said he hoped a new aid effort there can bring some relief.

He urged an end to military operations in Somalia to allow the delivery of humanitarian supplies, and said he was worried about the abrupt outbreak of ethnic violence in Kenya.

In Europe, he said, a definitive status for Kosovo needs to be determined in a way that respects the rights of all the inhabitants and avoids a return to "the specter of violence" in the Balkans.

Addressing the danger of nuclear armaments, the pope urged the international community to make "a global commitment on security" that can deal in particular with new threats from terrorism.

"Diplomacy is, in a certain sense, the art of hope."

— Pope Benedict XVI

"A joint effort on the part of states to implement all the obligations undertaken and to prevent terrorists from gaining access to weapons of mass destruction would undoubtedly strengthen the nuclear nonproliferation regime and make it more effective," he said.

The pope also encouraged the reduction of conventional weapons and cluster bombs, considered a particular threat to civilians.

Dignity of life, family

In a passage that hinted at a potential theme for his planned U.N. visit in April, the pope noted that 60 years ago the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which enshrined human dignity.

"In every continent the Catholic Church strives to ensure that human rights are not only proclaimed but put into practice," he said.

"The church willingly undertakes this service to the true dignity of human persons, created in the image of God. And on the basis of these considerations, I cannot but deplore once again the continual attacks perpetrated on every continent against human life," he said.

In bioethics, new discoveries or technological progress should not require people to choose between science and morality — "rather, they oblige us to a moral use of science," he said.

He said he rejoiced at the recent U.N. support for a moratorium on the death penalty and added: "I earnestly hope that this initiative will lead to public debate on the sacred character of human life."

Echoing a number of speeches to political and other groups over the last two years, the pope defended the traditional family.

"I regret, once again, the disturbing threats to the integrity of the family founded on the marriage of a man and a woman. Political leaders of whatever kind should defend this fundamental institution, the basic cell of society," he said.

He said religious freedom is still not fully respected in many parts of the world.

The pope closed his talk with a reflection on peace, which he said must involve various areas of human development: food, water and energy resources, access to medicine and technology, and even the monitoring of climate change.

In confronting these serious problems, diplomats should build on the positive, he said, telling them, "Diplomacy is, in a certain sense, the art of hope."

Maryland pastor explores Asian saints in new book

BY GEORGE P. MATYSEK JR.
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

BALTIMORE — Not long before he was to be ordained a Jesuit priest in 16th-century Japan, St. Paul Miki was captured and forced to march with his companions more than 1,000 miles as part of a national campaign of persecution of Christians.

Sentenced to die by crucifixion, the young man was said to have described the cross as "the noblest pulpit" he ever filled.

While hanging on a cross on Nagasaki Hill, the saint was heard forgiving the emperor and begging the Japanese leader and his executioners to "seek baptism and be Christians themselves."

The heroic martyrdom of St. Paul Miki is just one of many stories of bravery and faith recounted in "Saints of Asia, 1500 to the Present," a new book by Vincentian Father Vincent J. O'Malley.

The 220-page reference book is the fifth book on saints written by the pastor of St. Joseph Church in Emmitsburg, Md. It is the culmination of three years of research.

"What most impressed me are those saints who are renowned for their courage in venturing into new geographical territories and new cultural and spiritual territories," said Father O'Malley, who visited many shrines, museums, religious communities and diocesan offices across Asia while researching the book.

For all the canonized saints who were martyred, there are tens of thousands of Catholics who have never been canonized who also died for their faith in Asia, Father O'Malley said.

"They died without rancor," he said. "They suffered very ritualistic torture and they accepted it and died forgiving their persecutors."

Father O'Malley said he was happy to discover that many Asian saints, especially missionaries, made attempts to incorporate elements of Asian culture in Christianity.

St. Matteo Ricci, for example, shared Western learning with the Chinese and was received as a "revered elder," Father O'Malley said.

The Jesuit priest translated the Ten Commandments into Chinese and wrote a catechism in that language, the author said.

"He respected the Chinese wisdom, learning and religious insights," said Father O'Malley, noting that St. Matteo wore Chinese silk robes.

The pastor said it was very difficult for the church to make inroads in Asia because sophisticated religions like Confucianism, Buddhism and Shintoism preceded Christianity by many hundreds of years.

Today, only 3 percent of Asia is Catholic, Father O'Malley said.

"Saints of Asia" includes biographies of canonized saints and those who are being considered for canonization by the Vatican. The profiles are arranged chronologically by feast day and include representatives from 21 countries.

Two authors get top books awards from Catholic historical association

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Two books about the exploits of Jesuits in very different times and places took the top awards during the American Catholic Historical Association's annual meeting in Washington.

Liam Matthew Brockey, an assistant professor of history at Princeton University in New Jersey, received the John Gilmary Shea Prize and $750 for his book, "Journey to the East: The Jesuit Mission to China, 1579-1724," judged the best work on the history of the Catholic Church published in the 12-month period that ended June 30.

Jesuit Father Gerald McKevitt, professor of Jesuit studies at Santa Clara University in California, won the Howard R. Marraro Prize and $500 for "Brokers of Culture: Italian Jesuits in the American West, 1848-1919."

The Shea prize is named for a famous historian of American Catholicism who died in 1892; the award is given annually to the American or Canadian author who has made the most original and significant contribution to the historiography of the Catholic Church.

In presenting the award, Father Charles Talar of St. Mary's Seminary in Houston called Brockey's work "an ambitious undertaking" that required "a grasp of Chinese, European and Catholic history."

The Marraro prize is named for an author and professor at Columbia University in New York who died in 1972.

The award is given annually to the author of a distinguished scholarly work dealing with Italian history or Italo-American history or relations.

"The book shows how the missionaries' Italian cultural background helped to shape their efforts at conversion and ... their interactions with others in a rapidly changing multicultural environment," said Kenneth Gouwens, professor of history at the University of Connecticut, in presenting the award.

When God communicates, we must listen, respond

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

A few years ago I had the pleasure — and the challenge — of teaching 3-year-olds. Their inquisitive, energetic nature sometimes made it difficult to get their attention or maintain their focus.

For instance, one particularly active little boy simply did not respond when I called him from across the room.

What I had to learn early on is that the best way to communicate with people half my size was to get down on their level. For one thing, crouching or sitting down while talking to a toddler makes it easier for both parties to hear.

But more importantly, establishing eye contact at the child's level helps him or her to feel respected and important. I found that with my rambunctious toddler boys, specific instructions were best given after I had taken the time to truly listen, face-to-face, eyeball-to-eyeball.

In this Sunday's readings there are several examples of God's special call to different people and their responses to that call.

But before the call can be issued, before a response can be returned, there is the assurance that God has surely listened to our cries. Indeed we are able to have "ears open to obedience" because God models what it means to be a good listener.

In much the same way that I crouch to a toddler's level in order to converse more effectively, God meets us halfway by "stooping toward us," not merely with eyes and ears, but in the person of his son, Jesus, who makes possible our communication with God at its most profound level.

The waiting of Advent is at an end and the feast of Christmas has passed. But the ongoing exchange between God and humanity depends in part upon our predisposition — our willingness to place ourselves in a posture of obedient listening.

Questions:

How has the Lord heard your cry lately? In what way can you predispose yourself to hear what God's call is to you?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"He stooped toward me and heard my cry" (Psalm 40:2).

Catholic rock duo dedicates new single to Pope Benedict XVI

BY KAT WAGNER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

MADISON, Wis. — In their first release since a self-titled album in 2006, Oremus, a Catholic rock duo from Madison, is hoping listeners will find the truth in their new single honoring Pope Benedict XVI.

"If you're looking for the truth, the church has got it," said Chris Reitz, the guitarist and co-vocalist for Oremus, of the message contained in "The Song of Benedict."

In a world where truth often gets lost, Chris Reitz, 23, and his brother Tom, 20, say they are trying to reach out to their peers with a Catholic counterbalance to heavy metal bands like Metallica and Guns N' Roses.

"We're trying to show there's a better alternative out there," Chris Reitz said.

Through an infusion of rock with faith, they show that "you can be Catholic and cool at the same time," Tom said.

The brothers, regular Massgoers at Madison's downtown parishes who often participate in perpetual adoration at Holy Redeemer Church, have been performing music since their childhood and were members of a church choir for several years.

They officially started their band in 2004, naming it Oremus, Latin for "let us pray." Chris Reitz is the guitarist and Tom plays the keyboard, though both do the vocals on the various songs.

They work together to compose and write the lyrics for their music.

"A theme in our band has been that you can be Catholic and be cool," said Tom Reitz. "Cool guys can go to Mass and be Catholic; it's not something you should be ashamed about."

They played their first gig at the Schoenstatt Heights festival on the west side of Madison and have performed at several other venues, including the Elizabeth House Walk for Life, the Madison diocesan family picnic and the St. Ann Fall Festival in Stoughton.

They have also been highlighted on Relevant Radio.

In 2006 the duo released their self-titled debut album, which featured their take on modern Christian songs and older Catholic standards such as "Let All Mortal Flesh," as well as several songs composed by the brothers.

The compact disc, like the band, was dedicated to the new evangelization of the late Pope John Paul II.

The new single is dedicated to his successor. The song imagines him "speaking from my window, hope someone will hear. Listen to the truth, now. Romans, lend me your ear."

The duo decided to release the single instead of waiting to include it on their next CD because the message is so important.

"I think everyone is looking for the truth, whether you know it or not," said Tom Reitz.

But the culture at large, the "dictatorship of relativism," says there is no standard, Chris Reitz said.

"And for someone who's looking for a benchmark, saying 'what should I do with my life?' that's not a very satisfying answer," he said. "We're trying to say, well, you might want to check out the church — they might have some answers for you."

"Here you've got a rock song, and you're portraying the pope in a very good way in this song, so maybe, if they haven't realized it before, it'll make people realize that he's a good guy, and it'll also open up a discussion about the truth," he said.

"Music is a very powerful medium," Chris Reitz said. "Why not use it to make that point?"

Animated characters Princess Eloise, Elliot, George and Sedgewick are seen in the movie "The Pirates Who Don't Do Anything: A VeggieTales Movie," a breezy computer-animated children's adventure in which a trio of self-doubting anthropomorphized vegetables who work at a pirate-themed dinner theater get the chance to prove their mettle when they're transported back in time and given the chance to save a prince and princess.

It is a wholesome, thoroughly enjoyable film that, despite some technical limitations, manages to convey its message about the real nature of heroism quite effectively. Some mild bathroom references. The USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification is A-I — general patronage. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is G — general audiences. All ages admitted.

Nun, described as Poland's best cook, releases DVD with culinary tips

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — A Polish nun who thought up her best cake recipe in a dream has released a special DVD with tips on her culinary masterpieces.

"When I first joined my order, I asked to work in the kitchen," said Sister Anastazja Pustelnik, a member of the Daughters of Divine Love.

"I spent years cooking for the Jesuit fathers in Krakow, and they liked my recipes so much they proposed publishing them. I thought they meant some kind of brochure," she said.

"I never suspected it would lead to several books," she said.

Sister Pustelnik spoke at a specially convened press conference at the Polish bishops' conference headquarters in mid-December.

The nun, whose four recipe books already have sold 850,000 copies, spoke at the release of "Sister Anastazja's Cookery School," which shows her preparing some of her tastiest delights.

She said she had inherited some recipes from her parents and others from older nuns, but had thought up most herself, including the very best, "A Nun's Secret," which came to her in a dream.

"I made the cake in my sleep," Sister Pustelnik said. "When I woke up in the morning, I wrote it all down and then cooked it in the kitchen, and it turned out rather nicely."

The nun said most of her cakes had been given their names by voracious Jesuits. One cake, "The Happy Mountaineer," is noted for its high alcoholic content.

She said she personally preferred traditional Polish fare, such as sour soup and steamed cabbage, but added that she also had up to 100 different cheese recipes.

In a statement, Poland's Jesuit-run WAM publishers described Sister Pustelnik, whose books include "103 Cakes" and "100 New Cakes," as "the republic's greatest cook."

The publishing house added that it planned a follow-up DVD featuring the nun's wackiest dinners "if the current DVD meets with approval from clients."

Father Francis Connolly: 1927-2008

Diocesan priest served churches across N.C.

HIGH POINT — Father Frank Connolly, a retired priest of the Diocese of Charlotte, died Wednesday, Jan. 2, at Pennybyrn at Maryfield in High Point.

A memorial Mass was celebrated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis at St. Elizabeth Church in Boone Jan. 11.

Born in Plainfield, N.J., on Jan. 22, 1927, he served in the U.S. Navy during World War II and the Korean War. Following his military service, he attended Rutgers University in New Jersey, graduating in 1950 with a degree in forestry before pursuing post-graduate study at Duke University in Durham in 1952.

After a short career in North Carolina's furniture industry, he entered Christ the King Seminary in New York in 1955. A year later, he transferred to the Pontifical North American College in Rome. He was ordained to the priesthood on Dec. 20, 1959.

After further study in Rome, Father Connolly returned to North Carolina in July 1960. He served as an assistant pastor and pastor at churches throughout the state — including churches in Asheboro, Boone, Concord, Franklin, Greensboro, High Point, Lenoir and North Wilkesboro — during the 1960s and 1970s. After the Diocese of Charlotte was established in 1972, he also served as vicar forane of its Greensboro and Boone vicariates.

While serving as pastor in Durham, he was campus minister at Duke University. He also served as a diocesan consultor, a member of the presbyteral council, director of the Diocesan Support Appeal, assistant spiritual director and coordinator for the Cursillo movement, and an executive board member of Catholic Social Services.

During most of his pastorates, Father Connolly also served as a member of ministerial associations and was involved in ecumenical activities. He was a founder of the Coalition of Churches and Hospitality House of Boone, a service provider for the homeless.

He also held statewide positions as president of the Yokefellow Prison Ministries and member of the Pastoral Ministry Task Force on Alcohol and Drug Abuse and N.C. Department of Corrections Advisory Commission on Pastoral Ministry.

Father Connolly retired to Boone in 2000 before moving to Pennybyrn last year. During his illness, he received hospice care and was attended by loving friends from Boone and Greensboro.

To show their appreciation for his years of dedicated service to the parish, Father Joseph Mulligan, current pastor, and parishioners of St. Elizabeth Church announced the establishment of the Rev. Francis Connolly Endowment Fund Jan. 21, 2007, during the parish celebration of Father Connolly's 80th birthday.

Father Connolly is survived by two cousins, Msgr. William Toohy of New York and Mary Hyson of Greenwich, Conn.

Mercy Sister Mary de Montfort Stilwell: 1930-2008

Sister remembered for devotion, humble nature

BELMONT — Sister Mary de Montfort Stilwell, 77, died Saturday, Jan. 5, at Mariah Center at Sacred Heart Convent in Belmont. She was received as a Sister of Mercy on Aug. 15, 1960, and was in her 48th year as a Sister of Mercy.

A Mass of Christian burial was held at the Cardinal Gibbons Memorial Chapel Jan. 8, with burial following in the Belmont Abbey Cemetery.

Sister Stilwell was born Joyce Mary Stilwell Nov. 4, 1930 in Lynchburg, Va. She took her religious name upon entering the Sisters of Mercy Aug. 21, 1959. After taking her vows as a woman religious, she studied at Gaston College, Sacred Heart College and the University of North Carolina at Asheville where she earned her nurse's aide certification.

During her years of service, she ministered at Nazareth Orphanage in Raleigh and worked as an elementary educator at Sacred Heart School in Salisbury, St. Michael School in Gastonia and St. Eugene School in Asheville.

She ministered at Holy Angels in Belmont before returning to teaching at St. Gabriel School in Charlotte through 1994. In 1996, following many years of ministry in diocesan schools, Sister Stilwell transitioned to ministry as a respite coordinator at Little Flower Retirement Center in Charlotte.

In 2002, she then became a caregiver at Eldercare Convalescent Service in Charlotte, where she continued her ministry until recently.

Throughout her life, Sister Stilwell exhibited an incredible loyalty and devotion to her family and her fellow women religious, and approached her ministry as an extension of her religious community and family.

During a 2001 interview on high quality assisted living centers, Sister Stilwell was asked about her ministry at Little Flower.

"We have a lot of sorrow, a lot of joy. There's a bondedness. It's more a family than a nursing home, assisted living or workplace," she said.

Always humble and unassuming, very few people outside of those at Little Flower realized she was honored by the North Carolina Assisted Living Association in Raleigh as a nominee for their 2002 Caregiver Award.

Her devotion to the Blessed Virgin and her active participation in local prayer circles were well known to her community, friends and family, as was her affinity for gardening. Her dahlias frequently reached the size of dinner plates and certainly graced more than one dinner table.

The heirloom roses beloved by her predecessors, Sisters Mary Magdalen Becker and Mary Jarlath McGarry, continued to receive tender, loving care during Sister Stilwell's watch.

Sister Stilwell was the daughter of the late Elmo Harris Stilwell and Thelma Beatrice Layne Stilwell. She was preceded in death by a sister, Doris Stilwell Staton; and three brothers, Cecil Stilwell, Stephen Stilwell and Claude Stilwell.

She is survived by her regional community; by three sisters, Sandra Stilwell Boatright, Barbara Ramsey and Frances Stilwell Mayberry; a brother, Vincent Stilwell; and numerous nieces and nephews.

Memorials may be made to the Sisters of Mercy Regional Community of North Carolina, 100 Mercy Dr., Belmont, NC 28012-4805.

Diocese of Charlotte Catholic schools FUN FACTS

— A first for Charlotte: In western North Carolina, the first Catholic school opened 180 years ago in the Charlotte home of Father John Maginnis, which served also as the first Catholic chapel.

— It could have been BACS instead of MACS: In 1956, Belmont had more Catholic schools than Charlotte. Belmont had Belmont Abbey College, Sacred Heart Academy and Grade School, St. Leo Junior Military Academy and St. Benedict School. Charlotte had only three schools: O'Donoghue, St. Ann and Our Lady of the Assumption.

— Interesting statistics: In 1958, there were 35 Catholic educational institutions in the future Diocese of Charlotte (founded in 1972); today, there are only 19. In 1961, there were seven Catholic high schools; today, there are only two.

— Hard to keep up with: Throughout its 120-year history, St. Patrick School had three different locations and four different names: St. Mary's Seminary, St. Peter, O'Donoghue Hall and St. Patrick.

— Sisters of education: Out of the 46 Catholic educational institutions operated within the 46-county territory of the Diocese of Charlotte, the Sisters of Mercy staffed 16.

— Requirements for admission: One of the earliest educational institutions in western North Carolina, Mt. St. Joseph's Academy in Hickory made a saddle and riding habit mandatory for school admission.

— Small beginning: When St. Gabriel School in Charlotte opened in 1958, there was only one grade — kindergarten — and the class met in the sacristy of St. Gabriel Church.

Spotlight on 3 Catholic schools

St. Leo's Junior Military Academy — Belmont

A boarding school for boys in first-through eighth-grades, this school was founded in 1910 and named for Bishop

Leo Haid, the first abbot of Belmont Abbey and vicar apostolic of North Carolina. The mission of the school, which closed in 1962, was to help develop the mind and body through military training and to provide students with a solid foundation for high school.

Villa Marie Anna Academy — Winston-Salem

This institution first opened as a girls' academy in 1954 with only a ninth grade, but by 1958 boys had been admitted and additional grades added so that there was a graduating class. Villa Marie Anna Academy, which held classes in a converted mansion, was short-lived and in 1959 was replaced with Bishop McGuinness High School.

St. John Vianney Hall — Asheville

Opening in 1961, this was a place where young men of high school age discerned a calling to the priesthood in a well-structured seminary atmosphere. They would live and pray communally while attending regular classes at Asheville Catholic High School and courses suited for potential priests of the Diocese of Raleigh. This pre-seminary closed in 1969.

Some signs of hope for ending death penalty

Confusion on Catholic teaching lies with individual failure

The United Nations vote on a death penalty moratorium found the United States standing with such paragons of human rights as China, Iran, Iraq and Syria in defending the indefensible.

A resolution to declare a worldwide moratorium on the use of capital punishment passed by 99-52 in a committee vote and was subsequently approved by the U.N. General Assembly last month with 104 nations in favor, 54 (including the United States) opposed and 29 abstentions.

The nonbinding resolution called for a moratorium on executions "with a view to abolishing the death penalty." That such a resolution would be favored by a two-to-one margin is a hopeful sign that the forces moving against capital punishment — the Catholic Church among them — are gaining momentum.

There was even better news last month when the New Jersey legislature passed and the governor signed a bill to abolish the death penalty in that state, joining 13 other states and the District of Columbia that do not have capital punishment.

Fewer people were sentenced to death in 2007 than in any year since 1976, when the Supreme Court reinstated capital punishment, according to the Death Penalty Information Center.

There were 42 executions in 2007 — the fewest in the past 13 years. The executions were limited to 10 states, with Texas responsible for 26, the center reported.

The U.N. resolution calling for a moratorium rather than outright abolition was seen as a strategic move to maximize support.

In the United States, the Supreme Court has created a virtual moratorium by blocking all executions by lethal injection until it decides if the method amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.

A moratorium addresses the problem as a practical matter but not one of principle.

It requires, as it did of the New Jersey legislature, a great deal of courage to vote for abolition in a political climate when a "soft on crime" label can end a political career.

During the debate in New Jersey, it was said that "there is confusion in the church" over the issue.

There shouldn't be. The Catechism of the Catholic Church, popes and the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops all clearly spell out the church's opposition to the death penalty in all but the most limited situations.

If there is confusion, it is not for lack of clear teaching but of a failure of individual responsibility to discern and integrate those teachings in the formation of conscience.

While the United Nations resolution is nonbinding, when the nations of the world say capital punishment is an offense to human rights, it is embarrassing to be on the wrong side of the question.

There is a discomfort with the United States being linked to those countries we decry as savage for their jurisprudence that employs stoning, amputations and lashings.

There is good news in the trend of strong international opposition and the reduction of death sentences and executions in the United States.

"There is a growing awareness in the human family of the value of life, of the dignity of every person and of the concept of a nonvindictive punishment," said Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, a Vatican spokesman, about the U.N. resolution.

The vote, he said, is "a sign of hope and a step forward on the way to peace."

That hope may be realized in the United States when more see the question from the perspective of a Christian teaching, not a "CSI" or "Law and Order" script.

The Catholic Church's theology of salvation

Q. A Jewish friend tells me that, according to her rabbi, Catholics believe that if she dies without accepting Jesus as her Messiah and savior she will go to hell: "If Hitler had accepted Jesus and requested forgiveness before he died, he would be saved, while the children he killed in the gas chambers would not. Does this seem right?"

How can I reply? (Louisiana)

A. If your friend is quoting her rabbi correctly, he is wrong. The Catholic Church does not teach what is reflected in his remark.

I cannot deny that many Catholics and other Christians have believed it. That some groups, even nations, calling themselves Catholic have believed this and even acted on it I also cannot deny.

But while some official church statements have been at best ambiguous about explicit belief in Jesus Christ and/or membership in the Catholic Church being necessary for salvation, Catholic teaching today is clear.

Within the past two generations, through a host of official documents and papal letters and discourses, the church has repeated its position that the great non-Christian religions represent part of the sincere effort of people everywhere to find answers to the huge, haunting questions about life and death and God.

Furthermore, these efforts, sometimes noble and sometimes erroneous, represent the work of the Holy Spirit in the world. They take place, we believe, under the influence of Jesus, the incarnate Word of God, whose saving grace and love lie underneath all honest searches for truth, even if those searches do not always lead to explicit belief and faith in him.

Such belief is not new. The principle is an ancient one in Christianity: God's saving grace is there for everyone who does not deliberately place an obstacle to that gift.

One classic statement to that effect comes from Pope Leo IV (853) during a controversy with certain heretics of his day.

"Just as there is no human being past, present or future whose nature was not assumed by Jesus Christ, our Lord," said Pope Leo, "so there is no human being past, present or future for whom he did not suffer and die."

Question Corner

FATHER JAMES DIETZEN
CNS COLUMNIST

Any failure to profit from that death would derive only from a deliberate refusal to believe when one clearly recognizes that such a belief is God's will.

The Second Vatican Council reaffirmed this position.

The Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions, for example, declares that, while the church always remembers its mission to proclaim that the fullness of religious life is found in Christ, it also "looks with sincere respect on those ways of conduct and of life, those rules and teachings which, though differing in many particulars from what she holds and sets forth, nevertheless often reflect a ray of that truth which enlightens all people." (No. 2).

The misunderstanding of your Jewish friend is unfortunate. It should forcefully remind us of another sentence in that same declaration: "All should take pains that, in catechetical instruction and in preaching the Word of God, nothing is taught out of harmony with the truth of the Gospel and the Spirit of Christ, which is a spirit of love and respect, not of hate and rejection" (No. 4).

All this applies in a particular way to our Jewish brothers and sisters, the people with whom we believe God established his first covenants, and through whom we have received so much of our Christian faith.

Where the road from Bethlehem leads us

We journey faithfully toward reunion with Christ

It was early morning on a cold Monday, and as the rush hour traffic began to snake through the icy streets, the morning headlights reminded me of so many Christmas lights still determined to shine despite the end of the holidays.

We were arriving at the airport to see my daughter off on her way back home to the East Coast. She spent a good part of the holidays with us, a blessing indeed, and now it was time for everyone to get back to jobs and routine.

After she checked her luggage, we headed with her to the security line. The airport in Anchorage, Alaska, teems with tourists in the summer, but on this dark mid-winter morning, it seemed slow and unusually quiet: no line at security, no excuse to delay.

Suddenly, loud wailing pierced the calm. Sobbing, no-holds-barred weeping, the kind that makes you turn around and look before you remember that's not polite.

It was a young girl, maybe 10 years old, and the object of her grief was the grandparent-aged couple taking their shoes off in the security line. Obviously they had just said goodbye.

Occasionally the grandparents would turn around and put their fingers to their lips, but this did nothing to quiet the mourning that filled the terminal and seemed somehow to involve us all.

My daughter hugged me one last time, her cheeks covered with her own tears.

"Well, at least I'm crying quietly," she joked, and off she went.

On the ride home, I couldn't get that little girl's sobs off my mind. There was something so real and untamed about them.

They evoked a raw truth about the separation that is so much a part of human existence and that seems to end with an exclamation point at Christmas.

Christmas is full of homecomings, but every homecoming has its goodbye. Christmas itself is God's homecoming, God coming to dwell among us.

But just as children leave and hurry off to lives that no longer are so close to ours, Christ, who still dwells with us, didn't linger in Bethlehem.

This year my parish joined an ecumenical Christmas effort coordinated by parish nurses to "journey to Bethlehem."

It was a combined exercise and meditation program, and by the time Christmas arrived, hundreds of Christians around town had walked miles to equal a trip to Bethlehem.

As I put away my Christmas creche this year, I thought about that "walk" to Bethlehem, and as I wrapped each

Pope says St. Augustine's conversion like that of many youths today

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — As a young man, St. Augustine, like many young Catholics today, left the practice of the faith for a time, but his search for truth and meaning eventually led to his conversion, Pope Benedict XVI said.

Continuing his series of audience talks about early church theologians, the pope Jan. 9 gave the first of what he said would be several talks about St. Augustine, who lived 354-430, and was the subject of his doctoral dissertation when he was Father Joseph Ratzinger.

Briefly presenting St. Augustine's biography, the pope said he was "a man of passion, of faith, of very high intelligence and of untiring pastoral concern."

In addition, he said, St. Augustine is "the father of the church that left us the greatest number of works" and, in fact, "it seems impossible that one man could have written so much in one lifetime."

Pope Benedict said St. Augustine's mother, St. Monica, was a devout Christian and educated him in the faith.

Although "he always was fascinated by the figure of Jesus," St. Augustine increasingly distanced himself from the faith and the life of the church, "just as happens today with many young people," the pope said. But "even if he had left the practice of the faith he was always in search of the truth," read voraciously and "was convinced that without Jesus the truth could not be found."

Disappointed at the lack of philosophical depth in the Bible, St. Augustine went in search of a religion that corresponded to his desire for truth and for Jesus, but one which also had a highly developed philosophy, the pope said.

He thought he found the answer among the Manichaeans, "who presented themselves as Christians and promised that their religion was completely rational. They affirmed that the world is divided into two principles — good and evil," which they believed explained all the struggles inherent in human life, Pope Benedict said.

"Their dualistic morality pleased St. Augustine because there was a very strict morality for the elite, but the adherents like him could live in a way more convenient for the situation of a young man of that time," he said.

But the Manichaeans could not respond to all his doubts and eventually, after listening repeatedly to the preaching of St. Ambrose in Milan, he was baptized.

"His conversion to Christianity Aug. 15, 386, came as the culmination of a long and tormented interior journey, which we will discuss in another catechesis," the pope said.

No longer churchgoers

Liturgies can, should be antithesis of frenzied society

Why do Catholics stop attending Mass?

This question was asked in a recent study conducted by the Australian Catholic Bishops' Conference.

More than disagreeing with church doctrines, the sex abuse scandals or busy weekends, Catholics miss Mass because they "no longer feel that being a committed Catholic requires this."

One respondent said, "It may just have been that there aren't enough reasons to go, and I'm tired of trying to make an effort in so many directions."

If it's true that Sunday Mass is no longer seen as an obligation, what are the causes behind this, and what might be some remedies?

One known cause is that our present Catholic school system and the times we live in have changed.

In the past, sisters, brothers and priests were the backbone of Catholic schools, and it was taken for granted that Sunday Mass was a serious obligation.

Students routinely went to Mass as part of a cherished Catholic tradition.

But we can't live in the past. We now live in a new era where the obligation of Sunday Mass must be seen in a new light. What might this be?

Perhaps instead of presenting the Mass as a serious obligation [which it is], we should see it as a blessed privilege.

Instead of emphasizing its law-binding side, perhaps it would be better to emphasize its power to free us from the tyrannies of daily life.

When Mass is celebrated properly, its strengthening, freeing and soothing powers are awesome. It generates peace where there is anxiety, courage where there is fear, hope where there is despair and love where there is resentment.

In the fourth century, St. Ambrose wrote, "Let your sermons be full of understanding. ... Let no word escape your lips in vain or be uttered without depth of meaning."

If homilies better addressed the unique situation of the people, and if the wisdom of our Catholic tradition were

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

better applied to worldly anxieties, those who no longer attend Mass might just find they have no reason for missing it.

During the feast of St. Cecilia, we are reminded of the wholesome depths to which good music and liturgy can take us.

If our liturgies created a more profound atmosphere of sacred stillness that is the direct antithesis of our frenzied society, those who bypass them just might come in out of the cold and find the warmth they consciously or unconsciously seek.

If those who avoid Mass could experience a faith community concerned for the poor, suffering and weary, they just might be inspired to be an integral part of it.

The more reasonable the Mass is, the more unreasonable it is to miss it.

Taking final steps to lasting peace in Uganda not easy, says priest

BY PAUL JEFFREY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

KITGUM, Uganda — Corrina Akongo has harvested sweet potatoes from her own land for the first time in years.

After more than a decade of living in a crowded camp for internally displaced persons, surviving on food donated by the international community, she came home to her ancestral village of Amuca in April just in time to plant.

As the new year began, she harvested grass for the roof of a thatched hut and dug her sweet potatoes from the ground.

"It seems like forever that we've been waiting for peace," she said. "I couldn't wait to get back home and start my life again."

After more than two decades of violence, people of northern Uganda are enjoying a respite from the bloody conflict between the rebel Lord's Resistance Army and the Ugandan government.

Peace talks that began in 2006 in Juba, Sudan, have progressed slowly but steadily, and a small number of the almost 2 million internally displaced people have returned to their ancestral villages.

Father Matthew Ojara, pastor of Christ the King parish in Kitgum, said the lull in fighting has allowed some people to restart their lives.

"There's huge psychological relief now. People are relieved to be able to return home, to do some farming, though still on a small scale and not very far from the camps," he said. "Most people remain in the camps, though, waiting. Their past experience of running for their lives, of being abducted, of girls being raped, of killings and night commuting, all that is still fresh in their minds."

"They want to see the two sides sign a permanent and lasting peace agreement. Until then, they'll wait in the camps, which are a sign of their pain and suffering," he said.

For years, thousands of children known as "night commuters" left their rural homes without their parents to sleep in safer urban areas to avoid being kidnapped. Father Ojara said the years of displacement also have taken

"It seems like forever that we've been waiting for peace."

— Corrina Akongo

their toll on some people's spirits.

"When you're unable to go out and dig (your own crops), you're forced to depend on outside help, and we're grateful to the world community for assisting our people," he said. "But a good percentage of our population was born in the camps. What kind of vision do they have of life?"

"That dependency on outside help has created a kind of syndrome in the people, and some people have become too dependent. But the time will come for them to go home," he said.

However, Father Ojara said that the people are proud to be independent and do things for themselves.

He recalled that, "last rainy season when people started to go home and work their own fields, if you went to them and offered money and said, 'Come and dig in my field, I will pay you,' they'd say, 'No, I'll go and dig my own garden first, and plant it, and if I have time I'll go and work for you.'"

"For me, that's a sign that people haven't been overcome by this syndrome of dependency. When the peace (agreement) is signed, I'm confident that they will go home, and it's our responsibility to encourage them to do so," he said.

But the long years of war also have negatively affected the moral health of the local Acholi people, the priest said, noting that night commuting has contributed to premarital sex among young teens.

"Youth are now learning things from their fellow youth, and some people have become parents in a situation where they are too young and unprepared. They lack understanding of how to bring up families," he said. "These are serious challenges to us as a community, as parents and as pastors," such as the HIV rate in his area is almost double the national average.

U.S., Mexican Catholics meet at border to mark Day of the Migrant

BY PAULA GOLDAPP
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

LAREDO, Texas — The travelers they came out to represent commonly move from one place to another on foot, so nearly 200 people in Laredo took to the streets and walked in observance of the Day of the Migrant ("Dia del Migrante") Jan. 13.

The local observance of the international event began on the steps of Laredo's San Agustin Cathedral, just a block from the Rio Grande, the natural boundary that separates Texas and Mexico.

The march followed on the heels of the Texas-Mexican border bishops' meeting held the previous day in Laredo.

RALEIGH — Bishop Peter J. Jugis recently joined hundreds of Catholics from around North Carolina in raising pro-life awareness.

"Bless our efforts to protect innocent human life in the womb ... to respect the dignity of all human life," said Bishop Jugis during his Benediction remarks at a pro-life rally at Nash Square in Raleigh Jan. 12.

Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Raleigh offered the invocation at the rally, which was followed by the annual March for Life.

Bush says he hopes Palestinian state would bring end to checkpoints

BY JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

JERUSALEM — U.S. President George W. Bush told residents of the West Bank city of Bethlehem he hoped someday the creation of an independent Palestinian state would eliminate checkpoints and walls at the Israeli border.

"Someday I hope that, as a result of a formation of a Palestinian state, there won't be walls and checkpoints, that people will be able to move freely in a democratic state," Bush said Jan. 10 during his visit to the birthplace of Jesus.

"That's the vision, greatly inspired by my belief that there is an Almighty, and a gift of that Almighty to each man, woman and child on the face of the earth is freedom. And I felt Dale Bader rocks 6-week-old Trishelle Patton at Providence Hospital's neonatal intensive care unit in Anchorage, Alaska, in early December. Bader is the lead volunteer for Kuddle Korps, which has nearly 70 volunteers who spend time cuddling premature infants or those born with complications. Trishelle weighed only 4 pounds at birth but was expected to go home soon.

Volunteers at Anchorage Catholic hospital touch tiniest lives

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — It just might be the sweetest, cuddliest volunteer opportunity in the whole state of Alaska.

For 67 volunteers at Providence Hospital in Anchorage, that opportunity is called the "Kuddle Korps."

Little training is required. You just have to love very small babies, and have the patience to sit for a couple of hours in a rocking chair holding them quietly.

At the hospital's neonatal intensive care unit, Dale Bader is the lead volunteer for the Kuddle Korps, and she also "rocks" during a two-hour weekly shift with the tiny infants.

Bader has rocked for five years and it shows. Her motherly — and grandmotherly — instincts are undeniable as she tenderly but very efficiently tucks a premature infant into her arms.

"When I quit work, I knew I needed something to do. And I knew I wanted to hold babies," said the grandmother of seven. "I called every hospital in town."

The right call went to Providence Hospital where the neonatal intensive care unit is the largest in the state. Every other hospital in Alaska refers newborn babies who are premature or born with complications to Providence.

Nurse Nouha Wallin said they've had babies at Providence as small as a pound or born at only 23 weeks gestation — a full-term pregnancy being 40 weeks. The busy nurses often can't provide all the touching and holding each baby needs.

That's where the Kuddle Korps comes in.

Parents, of course, are the rockers-in-chief. But when a baby has to spend several weeks, or even months, in intensive care, parents sometimes have to get back to their own routines or work schedules and can't be at the hospital day and night.

This is especially true for parents from out of town who may have to travel back and forth to see their infants.

In these cases, the Kuddle Korps fills in. There are college men who are "rockers" — the minimum age is 16 — and there is even a regular volunteer who is 99. Volunteers must pass security screenings and undergo training.

Dr. Lily Lou, medical director of the unit, is unequivocal in her praise of the Kuddle Korps.

"For any babies that can't be home with their families, it's a lifesaver," the doctor said.

Occupational therapist Carol Matthews agrees.

"There's a huge difference in the way babies act and look when they're regularly touched and held," she said, adding that studies show that being touched is necessary for the proper development and even survival of infants.

Bishop warns Catholics to avoid services started by Life Teen founder

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The priest who founded the Life Teen ministry program has established a nondenominational Praise and Worship Center that is drawing hundreds of participants a week, prompting a warning to Catholics from the bishop of Phoenix to stay away from the services and not to support the center.

Since Thanksgiving, the Praise and Worship Center has held a handful of worship services in Mesa, Ariz., by the charismatic Msgr. Dale Fushek, a Phoenix diocesan priest on administrative leave from Catholic ministry, and another resigned priest.

Msgr. Fushek, who founded Life Teen, an international youth ministry program, has been on administrative leave since late 2004 after allegations he had engaged in improper sexual conduct with teens. A year later he was charged with several misdemeanor criminal counts of assault, contributing to the delinquency of a minor and indecent exposure.

A Jan. 3 statement posted on the diocesan Web site said the diocese "wishes to express its grave concern for Catholics who may be misled or confused by the actions of Dale Fushek and Mark Dippre."

Dippre is a former associate pastor of St. Timothy who left public ministry in 2002 and later married.

The diocesan statement said Dippre is "a priest not in good standing" and said both men's actions "are not in union with the Catholic Church and may potentially mislead well-intentioned Catholics and other members of the Christian faithful."

"It is important for the faithful to know that both priests are acting contrary to the teachings of the Catholic Church and remain disobedient to directives of the bishop of Phoenix to whom they pledged obedience and respect when they were ordained to the priesthood," it continued.

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope seeks fairness for young immigrants, urges them to respect law

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI appealed for fair treatment of young immigrants and said they are often at risk of exploitation.

At the same time, he urged immigrants to always respect the law and never allow their frustration to turn to violence.

He made the comments at a noon blessing Jan. 13, which was marked by Catholic communities in many countries as the World Day for Migrants and Refugees.

Late last year he wrote a message for the event that noted the future of many children is jeopardized by forced migration, human trafficking and other refugee factors.

Addressing pilgrims in St. Peter's Square, the pope cited the growing number of young migrants, many of whom are separated from their families and home countries. Girls and minors among the migrant population face particular risks, he said.

"Some children and adolescents are born and raised in refugee camps. They, too, have the right to a future," he said.

He asked church communities to welcome with sympathy young immigrants and their parents and to help them take their place in the local culture.

Addressing "dear young migrants," he said: "Work with others your age to build a more just and fraternal society, fulfilling your duties, respecting the laws and never allowing yourselves to be transported to violence," he said.

Archbishop Agostino Marchetto, secretary of the Pontifical Council for Migrants and Travelers, told Vatican Radio that World Day is "an opportunity to recognize the contribution that millions of migrants, most of them young people, make to development in its various forms and to the well-being, above all economic, in many countries of the world."

Vendors protest Vatican decision that they cannot sell in square

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Breaking what the Rome Jewish community says is a concession hundreds of years old, the Vatican governor's office has told the street vendors who sell rosaries and medals at the entrances to St. Peter's Square that they are not welcome.

A dozen vendors and their families staged a protest in the square Jan. 12, the latest in a month of demonstrations. The vast majority of the vendors who have sold in the square are Jewish.

Cardinal Giovanni Lajolo, president of the commission governing Vatican territory, issued the order Dec. 10 as part of an almost yearlong battle by the city of Rome to stop unlicensed street vendors from clogging the street leading to St. Peter's Square with copies of designer handbags and luggage, watches and scarves.

In addition to asking the cardinal to rescind his order, the vendors have applied for permits from the city of Rome to sell religious souvenirs just outside the square.

According to Rome's Jewish community, in the mid-1500s Pope Paul IV gave members of the community permission to sell religious objects outside the basilicas of Rome.

The Jewish community has considered the permission a license to sell on Vatican territory with the rights passed down from one generation to another.

When the popes had temporal power over the city and the activities of Rome's Jews were limited by law, hawking souvenirs was one of the few jobs they were allowed to perform.

Passionist Father Ciro Benedettini, vice director of the Vatican press office, said Jan. 14 the Vatican does not consider the 16th-century permission to be a valid license. The laws governing Vatican City State do not foresee the presence of street vendors and, therefore, include no provision for licensing them.

"Now they must ask the city for permits" to sell on Italian property, he said.

Riccardo Pacifici, vice president of Rome's Jewish community, told the Italian news agency ANSA that he had been trying to negotiate with the Vatican to find some way to assist the street vendors, who — at the four major basilicas of Rome — comprise about 100 people.

The discussions have not produced results, he said.

"We are so disappointed and surprised that we are considering a response to send to the highest spheres of the Vatican," he added.

Catholics gesture as they wait for a statue of the Black Nazarene during a procession in Manila, Philippines, Jan. 9. Tens of thousands of devotees, many of them barefoot, thronged the capital to snatch a glimpse of a centuries-old black statue of Jesus during an annual parade. The wooden Black Nazarene, carved in Mexico and brought to the Philippine capital in the early 17th century, is cherished by Catholics, who believe that touching the statue can lead to a miracle.

Black Catholic pro-life apostolate's 'Rosary Across America'

NEW YORK (CNS) — The New York-based National Black Catholic Apostolate for Life urged all U.S. Catholics to participate in its annual "Black Catholic Rosary Across America for Life" Jan. 22 to mark the 35th year since the Supreme Court legalized abortion virtually on demand.

"We will be praying for the end of abortion and all acts of violence against the sacredness of life. For peace throughout the world and especially in our communities. For the unity and sanctity of the family," Franciscan Father James Goode, the apostolate's founder and president, said Jan. 14.

Last year more than 20,000 people participated and organizers were praying "even more will come on board this year," he said.

The rosary was planned to coincide with the Jan. 22 March for Life in Washington and other related events.

"The joy of the 'Black Catholic Rosary Across America for Life' is everyone can feel a part of this day that we pray (Roe) will be overturned and the dignity of life held in esteem," said Father Goode.

Roe v. Wade and its companion case, Doe v. Bolton, are the 1973 Supreme Court decisions that legalized abortion.

Catholics participate in Raleigh pro-life march

were Catholic, marched passed the Supreme Court building to Sacred Heart Cathedral.

The rally and march were sponsored by North Carolina Right to Life Inc.

The event began with the ninth annual Prayer Breakfast for Life at the Holiday Inn Brownstone Hotel and Conference Center with keynote speaker, David Prentice.

Prentice, senior fellow for life sciences at the Family Research Council, spoke about the myths and failures of embryonic stem-cell research and the success of adult stem-cell research.

"Most people do not know that there's a difference between embryonic and adult stem cells," said Charlie Breeding, a parishioner of Holy Cross Church in Kernersville.

"Dr. Prentice is knowledgeable, researched-based and most effective in getting his points across," he said.

Among the rally speakers was Hai-y Le, a parishioner of St. Joseph Church in Charlotte.

Le, a 2007 recipient of the "Hero for Life" scholarship sponsored by Charlotte Right to Life, spoke about her efforts to organize a Right to Life club at Olympic High School in Charlotte.

"I believe that all of us here should be silent no more," she told the crowd.

Ashley Ahlquist, a senior at the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., spoke about her efforts to promote her pro-life platform as a finalist in the Miss District of Columbia Pageant for Miss America last year.

Pageant organizers advised her to change her platform, but she refused and was quickly eliminated from the pageant. A local newspaper article, Ahlquist recalled, immediately condemned her for choosing a pro-life platform.

Carol Leach, a parishioner of Holy Infant Church in Reidsville, found the rally and march encouraging.

It "was inspirational as I looked out and saw a definite increase in the (number of) people attending the rally. And the speakers were exceptional," she said.

"I praise our young people who are rising to the occasion and speaking for the unborn," said Leach.

OTHER PRO-LIFE EVENTS AROUND CHARLOTTE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

In observance of the 35th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to legalize abortion, Catholics in the Diocese of Charlotte are taking part in a number of pro-life observances.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis celebrated a pro-life Mass at St. Pius X Church in Greensboro Jan. 14.

The bishop joined in the Charlotte March for Life Jan. 18. Participants marched from the diocesan Pastoral Center to the federal courthouse on Trade Street.

On Jan. 22, the two bishops of North Carolina will join hundreds from their two dioceses at the 35th March for Life in Washington, D.C.

Prior to the march, Bishop Jugis will celebrate the 10:30 a.m. Mass at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington. Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Raleigh will be the homilist.

U.S., Mexican Catholics meet at border

Laredo, Mexico, began walking from the other direction. The two groups met for a balloon release, converging on the Convent Street bridge that joins the two countries.

A Mass celebrated by the Texas and Mexican bishops followed on the banks of the Mexican side of the Rio Grande.

"We're here to pray for all persons who come to the U.S. to get a better life," said Imelda Guzman, who came to the event with her husband, Rafael, and their four children.

She and her immediate family are all U.S. citizens living in Laredo, but some of her in-laws and friends have traveled across the border without documentation.

"I have friends whose parents have died in Mexico and they can't go to the funeral because their families are here and they can't get back here if they go," she said.

The impact current U.S. immigration law has on families and the church's position on the dignity of the human person were concerns shared by many of the pilgrims.

In a processionlike manner, the peaceful march made its way to the bridge and paused along the route several times as various speakers read a Scripture verse, followed by a brief reflection.

"When you turn away the immigrant, you turn away the Lord Jesus," said the speaker at the first stop.

Guzman has encountered people who crossed into Texas from Mexico and have been abused by the coyotes paid to smuggle them across the border.

The ability to have a better lifestyle in Mexico and other Latin American countries would deter many from fleeing their homeland, Guzman said, but until then people will continue to do what they feel they have to do to provide for themselves and their families.

"So, we are here to pray for both sides so God can change their hearts," she added.

Sister Anne Miriam Landolt, a member of the School Sisters of Notre Dame, lives in Rio Grande City in the Texas border Diocese of Brownsville and joined the march with members of her religious congregation who serve in Laredo and in McAllen, also in the Brownsville Diocese.

"All of us have direct or indirect contact with immigrants," said Sister Landolt, a hospital chaplain who also facilitates small Christian communities at Immaculate Conception Church in Rio Grande City.

After spending 12 years as a missionary in Honduras, she has experienced immigration concerns from both sides of the border.

"I saw the reason why they sometimes needed to leave," she said.

The role she sees the church playing is in awareness and education and "somehow just being vocal about immigration and the right to immigrate."

Tony Juarez walked with her husband, Beto, a retired history professor. The couple belongs to San Martin de Porres Church in Laredo. She said she wished the crowds that come out for immigration awareness were as big as the ones that marched for farmworkers' rights.

The Juarezes now spend much of their retirement speaking publicly about the church's position on immigration and the dignity of the human person.

She said there are many misconceptions, even in her own community, about the people who cross the river. "Not every Mexican who comes here wants to stay," said Juarez. "They just want to work for a while and go back home."

She said she hopes the concept of legally hiring undocumented immigrants as contract workers will be explored.

Maria de Jesus Gonzalez hurriedly walked past the crowd on a pedestrian walkway next to the procession, which by the time it reached the bridge filled one of the two lanes of traffic flowing toward Mexico.

A small child held her hand and she stopped to ask Tony Juarez the meaning of the march. When she heard that it was to recognize migrant people, it evoked an emotional response.

"There is a lot of hatred toward immigrants," said Gonzalez, a Mexican national living legally in Laredo who fears the negative attitude that even the youngest children are picking up toward people migrating to the United States.

"They are just people working, not doing anything wrong," she said as her voice began to crack.

As religious education director of the Laredo Diocese, Reynaldo Montemayor said his presence was "a commitment of solidarity with my brothers and sisters in the church."

He acknowledged countries have the right to defend their borders but not at the expense of treating persons inhumanely.

Montemayor, a Laredo native, knows many active Catholics in Laredo parishes probably have irregular status in the eyes of the government, "but we won't close our churches to them."

Bishop Faustino Armendariz Jimenez of Matamoras, Mexico, just across the river from the Brownsville Diocese, said the march "is an important sign of solidarity with the immigrants and the ones who support and help the immigrant."

He added, "We are all immigrants on a pilgrimage" and "we need to make it known that we should construct bridges instead of walls."

St. Paul's lasting legacy

Turkish bishops mark 2,000th anniversary of year of saint's birth

BY JONATHAN LUXMOORE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WARSAW, Poland — Turkey's Catholic bishops marked the 2,000th anniversary year of the birth of St. Paul in the southern Turkish city of Tarsus and outlined preparations for the Pauline year.

"This event is for all Christian communities, since Paul is a teacher for all the disciples of Christ. However, the anniversary is of particular importance for us living in Turkey — the apostle of the gentiles is a son of this land, and it is here he exercised most of his ministry," said a letter from the bishops' conference, which includes bishops of Turkey's Armenian, Syrian, Chaldean and Latin-rite churches.

"We are immersed in a Muslim world where faith in God is still very present, both in its traditional aspects and in the assertion of new Islamic religious organizations," said the letter, which was to be read in Catholic churches Jan. 25, the anniversary of St. Paul's conversion.

Pope Benedict XVI convoked 2008-09 as a special Pauline year of events marking the anniversary of the saint's birth. The pope said the celebrations should have a special ecumenical character.

Bishop Luigi Padovese, apostolic administrator of Anatolia, told Catholic News Service Jan. 9 that the anniversary would begin formally June 21-22 and include a Mass in Tarsus celebrated by Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

It also will include a national pilgrimage to sites associated with St. Paul.

He added that talks on ecumenical initiatives were under way with other denominations that make up Turkey's 120,000-member Christian minority, and he said he counted on officials in Tarsus to make facilities available for pilgrims, while also allowing regular use of the Mediterranean town's 12th-century St. Paul Church, now a state-owned museum.

"The local authorities are aware of their town's significance for Christians and proud one of its citizens was once a key figure. On the other hand, they aren't prepared for an increase of religious tourism," he said.

"But government officials have agreed we should be able to worship here. After all, we're not missionaries — we are merely answering the needs of church members."

The bishops' letter noted that St. Paul had completed most of his 10,000-mile missionary journeys in Turkey and would have encouraged Christians to "intensify dialogue with the Muslim world" while remaining true to their religious faith.

"This very situation, in some aspects similar to those of the first communities living in diaspora, imposes on us a clear awareness of our identity," it added.

"Before being Catholics, Orthodox, Syrians, Armenians, Chaldeans, Protestants, we are Christians. Let us not allow our differences to generate diffidence to the detriment of the unity of faith," the letter said.

In the first century, St. Paul made three journeys through what is now Turkey, preaching the Gospel and writing letters to the Galatians, Ephesians and Colossians.

St. Paul ministered in Ephesus for more than two years, and one of his New Testament epistles is addressed to Christians there. BUSH, from page 1 it strongly here today," he said.

Bethlehem residents have said a 25-foot-tall wall surrounding the city has left them feeling imprisoned.

Israel says the wall — part of a planned 400-mile cement and barbed-wire barrier through the West Bank — has proven its effectiveness against suicide bombers.

Bush thanked the residents of Bethlehem for "enduring a presidential trip," and thanked the leadership of the three churches — Greek Orthodox, Armenian and Catholic — who share in the care of the Church of the Nativity for welcoming him.

Following two days of meetings with Israeli and Palestinian leaders, Bush spent one-and-a-half hours in Bethlehem visiting the church.

He was accompanied by Palestinian Tourism Minister Kholoud Daybis and church leaders of the three denominations that share authority over the church.

Franciscan Father Pierbattista Pizzaballa, who heads the Franciscan Custody of the Holy Land, was the Catholic representative.

Bush called his visit to the church "a moving moment."

"For those of us who practice the Christian faith, there's really no more holy site than the place where our Savior was born," Bush said.

"It's a fascinating history in this church, so not only was my soul uplifted, my knowledge of history was enriched," he said.

As elsewhere during the president's three-day visit to the Holy Land, security was high in Bethlehem.

People living on the main road to Manger Square and near the Church of the Nativity were told to remain indoors.

Shopkeepers near the square kept their shops closed.

Traffic came to a halt, parked cars were moved to other locations and police patrolled the streets and the rooftops hours before the president arrived.

The streets were reopened only an hour after the president's departure.

In both Bethlehem and Ramallah, where the president met earlier with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas, American flags were not put up for fear they might be burned.

In Ramallah, police stopped a group of Palestinian protesters on their way to Abbas' headquarters, where the two leaders met. No incidents were reported in Bethlehem.

"Bethlehem is calm, absolutely calm," Father Marwan Dides of St. Catherine Church in Bethlehem told Catholic News Service in a phone interview.

Bush visited the Church of the Nativity, then went down to the grotto underneath where Christian tradition holds that Jesus was born, said Father Dides. He also spent time at the Franciscan-run St. Catherine Church.

After his visit, Bush shook hands with some 15 Franciscan friars outside the church.

The priests said most of the Franciscans had not been allowed to leave their residence during the president's visit.

President thankful for opportunity to visit sites, says friar

CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

JERUSALEM — Following a grueling schedule of political meetings, U.S. President George W. Bush was thankful for the opportunity to visit some of the Christian holy sites, said a Franciscan friar who accompanied Bush on his visit to Capernaum and the Mount of Beatitudes in Israel.

"He is truly a religious man, and President Bush mentioned how nice it was to get away and to have some (time for) peace and quiet and prayer for reflection," said Father Peter Vasko, an official of the Franciscan Custody of the Holy Land, which cares for the holy sites.

"He said it was so restful and peaceful for him to be there. He loved the Sea of Galilee," said Father Vasko.

Bush, who arrived in the Holy Land Jan. 9 to discuss peace with Palestinian and Israeli political leaders, visited the Church of the Nativity Jan. 10 and the Mount of Beatitudes Jan. 11, the last day of his trip in the Holy Land.

Father Vasko said the president was extremely interested in the archaeology of the house of St. Peter at Capernaum, and they read several passages of Scripture related to the site.

"I was very impressed with his spirituality and goodness. He is a deeply spiritual Christian man," said

"He certainly wants peace and is very committed to a two-state solution," said Father Vasko.

Bush was very friendly and took time out to take individual pictures with the four nuns and the five friars at the site, said Father Vasko.

At the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, Father Athanasius Macora, a fellow Texan and a spokesman for the Franciscan custody, said that Bush, who was raised in Texas, chatted with him and teased the priest about still having a Houston accent after so many years in the Holy Land.

Franciscan Father Marwan Dides of St. Catherine Church in Bethlehem said Bush shook hands with some 15 Franciscan friars outside the church.

"He was very nice. We thought he would be more formal, but he was very simple," said Father Dides, who was among those who greeted the president.

As disciples in Christ

U.S. Cardinal George expresses solidarity with Palestinian Christians

BY JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Palestinian Christians must feel the support of the universal church and must not feel isolated in their difficulties, said Chicago Cardinal Francis E. George, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

"Their cares are also our cares, and it is important to say that. I hope our visit encouraged them," Cardinal George said after greeting parishioners of Ramallah's Holy Family Church, where he celebrated Mass on the feast of Jesus' baptism Jan. 13.

The cardinal was in the Holy Land Jan. 11-15 to participate in the ninth annual meeting of the Coordination of Episcopal Conferences in Support of the Church in the Holy Land, a Catholic group.

He was part of a 28-member delegation that included nine bishops.

Clergy who participated in the meeting celebrated Masses at several of the Catholic parishes in the Palestinian territories.

Cardinal George said it was wonderful to see the life of faith led by the local Christians and feel with them the "fundamental unity as disciples of Christ," despite the differences in language and culture.

"Some of us have come to you

... from the USA, Britain, Germany, Spain, France, but first of all we come as followers of Jesus," Cardinal George told parishioners.

"Because all of us are disciples of Jesus, we want to be with you on this feast day, on a joyful day, but also every day in the difficulties and problems you have here in the Holy Land," he said.

He said that "when we are not with you physically we are with you in Christ, and we promise you are in our prayers, and we ask in return your prayers for us."

The bishops met with Palestinian and Israeli political leaders, including Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas and Israeli Interior Minister Meir Sheehrit.

They also met with local Christian leaders, including Latin Patriarch Michel Sabbah of Jerusalem and Archbishop Antonio Franco, the papal nuncio to Israel.

Archbishop Franco briefed the church leaders on the status of the Fundamental Agreement, which set a framework for negotiations on church-state questions between Israel and the Vatican.

Cardinal George said Patriarch Sabbah expressed concern about the situation of Christians in the Gaza Strip, although for the moment, Hamas, an Islamic extremist political and military movement, appears to be protecting the Christians.

Hamas seized control of the Gaza Strip last June.

The cardinal expressed hope that the internal dispute between Hamas and the Palestinian political movement Fatah would be resolved peacefully with a Hamas recognition of Israel, a rejection of violence and an acceptance of previous agreements.

Cardinal George said that in meetings with Israeli and Palestinian political leaders, church officials expressed their concern for peace and encouraged both to move forward in normalizing relations with the Vatican.

He said they also discussed checkpoints, visas and the expansion of settlements, as well as issues regarding security, militias and political reforms.

"We are firm supporters of the state of Israel and ... a two-state solution providing for a safe Israel and a viable Palestinian state," said Cardinal George.

He said it was important to "listen and see the various perspectives to this very complicated situation" in the meetings with the local leaders and residents.

"We are not the ones with the solutions. We come with the hope there will be peace in the Holy Land," said the cardinal. "Our ... concern is peace for everyone; how to achieve that is a local concern."

Cardinal George said the visit allowed him to see the situation more clearly, including the issues of the checkpoints and the Israeli separation barrier, which, when completed, will be a 400-mile-long blockade of concrete slabs and barbed-wire fences separating Israel from the West Bank.

"No one loves the wall. Even Israel is saying it wants (the wall) to be temporary," said the cardinal.

"It is a ... complicating factor in people's lives, and it dominates what they can hope for in life," he said.

Illuminating 'His Dark Materials'

Books illuminate truths of faith, bleak realities in Pullman trilogy

REVIEWED BY CHRISTOPHER FENOGLIO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Favorable reviews of a watered-down film version of "The Golden Compass" aside, there is much more to Phillip Pullman's "His Dark Materials" book trilogy than what appears on the silver screen.

Our search for wisdom, our internal struggles for integrity and the connection between all living beings are enduring themes in Pullman's novels that sit alongside dogmatic declarations like "the Christian religion is a powerful and convincing mistake."

This menagerie of ideas, both fair and foul, is packed so tightly into such a small space that when cut open they come whooshing out like an army of Pullman's Spectres.

Two books examine these ideas more closely, holding them up against the light of our faith to illuminate both the shining truths and the bleak realities of Pullman's worlds.

In "Dark Matter: Shedding Light on Philip Pullman's Trilogy 'His Dark Materials,'" Tony Watkins states straight away that he is "unashamedly a fan, but I also take issue with Pullman on the question of his attack on God and Christianity."

Watkins sets the stage by exploring Pullman's past for literary influences. He delves deeper into Pullman's favored texts of John Milton, Heinrich von Kleist and William Blake to find the "raw materials" with which the trilogy is created.

He also provides concise summaries of the events and themes of each of the books, along with examinations of the major themes found throughout the trilogy.

At times, however, Watkins' appreciation of the author's storytelling bleeds into statements that associated Christian themes can be readily found in Pullman's works.

In one example, Watkins proposes that the symbiotic relationship between Lyra, her daemon Pantalaimon and her ghost is a Venn-diagramlike description similar to a diagram of the Trinity.

However, the explanation reads more like a square peg being written into a round hole.

Watkins is more compelling when he analyzes how the author misrepresents history and misreads the Bible to create a caricature of Christianity. Using the author's own words from numerous interviews to substantiate his analysis, Watkins shows the inherent incongruity between the virtues that Pullman espouses (curiosity, courage, kindness and determination) and the bleak, desolate worldview that pervades the trilogy.

In "Killing the Imposter God: Philip Pullman's Spiritual Imagination in 'His Dark Materials,'" Donna Freitas and Jason King work even harder to find and substantiate redeeming Christian values in Pullman's trilogy.

Freitas and King explore Pullman's pantheistic beliefs about God, starting with the Fall of the Authority in "The Subtle Knife."

They then turn to ethics, using his interrelated themes of freedom and compassion as proof that his works can be read, and lived, within a liberation theological framework.

Indeed, Pullman's God is connected part and parcel to the universe as if the two are lovers, sharing an eros love that becomes a tangible expression of this divine intimacy.

Salvation does occur in Pullman's universe, say the authors, not in a singular death like Jesus, but in the relational death of Lyra and Will. A consciousness of the "Dust" that connects all living beings is vital to understanding one's position in the universe.

With small acts of love to others (as Lyra, Will and Mary helped others become free, thoughtful, conscious and kind), creation moves toward salvation and the Republic of Heaven is gradually built.

Freitas and King use these examples to justify their vision that Pullman's "His Dark Materials" trilogy embodies "a sophisticated theology and so make the atheist Philip Pullman a theologian in spite of himself."

Readers will find some justifications stretched to fit the authors' needs, especially when both books proffer different opinions on the divinity and eternal qualities of "Dust."

But readers of both books will be challenged by new insights to decide for themselves whether Pullman has written a work of fantasy that espouses his own atheistic agenda or a "religious classic of considerable sophistication."

Ordinary things become extraordinary with Jesus

BY JEFF HEDGLEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My wife works in a cubicle in the middle of corporate America. She often feels she is not doing all she can to answer the call to ministry.

I think this may have something to do with the story we hear in today's Gospel of Jesus calling the first disciples.

I have always loved this story because the choice to follow seems so clear-cut for these guys. They walk away from their nets and lives at the drop of a hat with no questions.

I wonder if they knew Jesus already and had been planning to follow him and realized this was the time. Or was this their first experience of the God Man, and his presence and call were so powerful they were compelled to follow?

Either way the story continues to challenge me.

On the other hand, this story might make it seem that if we don't leave it all behind and go into full-time ministry, we aren't really answering our baptismal call.

This is where my wife comes in.

In cubicle land where she works, there are no private conversations. One day she overheard two people grumbling about a third person who had been out sick for two days.

The next day my wife saw this man walking the halls at work. She stopped him and said, "Hey, I heard you have been out sick, how are you feeling?"

He replied, "I have worked here for over three months, and you are the first person who has said more than 'hi' to me."

In that moment my wife was answering the call to follow Jesus. Sure, the man didn't drop to his knees and ask Jesus to become his savior.

But he did experience someone who had genuine concern for his well-being, and in that moment he experienced love.

Too often we think that the only way to answer the call to follow Jesus means we have to do something out of the ordinary or spectacular.

Raising a family or being salt and light at work might seem pretty ordinary, but when we do these things with the understanding that they are a way to answer the call to follow Jesus, they become extra-ordinary.

You even might say spectacular.

Hong Kong priest urges Catholics not to carelessly dump their old TVs

HONG KONG (CNS) — A priest in Hong Kong urged Catholics not to carelessly dump their old television sets when replacing them with high-definition TVs.

"As Catholics, we should not waste the resources," said Father Anthony Chang, chairman of the Catholic environmental group Green Messengers of Green Consciousness. "I appeal to all Catholics, parishes and schools not to dump their TV sets. If they really want to replace (them with) the high-tech ones, they should donate the old one to the needy."

Hong Kong's two local TV stations started their digital broadcasting service Dec. 31. People can view high-definition programs after replacing their traditional cathode-ray-tube television sets with a new digital model.

The environmental group Friends of the Earth recently issued survey results that showed about 460,000 television sets would be replaced in the coming two years as local TV stations implemented their digital broadcasting. The group said more TV sets would be replaced before the Beijing Olympics this summer.

It pointed out that improper handling of the cathode-ray TV sets, which contain toxic substances such as mercury, lead and cadmium, harm the soil and water sources.

Michelle Au Wing-tze, the group's environmental affairs officer, said Christian groups can help decrease the waste by promoting the donation of the old sets.

"Christian groups can help promote the green message" by using "church buildings as collection points of old TV sets, so that a welfare agency might collect them for the needy people," she said.

Au said TV sets that are not donated should be environmentally treated to take out poisonous chemicals before they are left safely at a dumping area.

In the United States, where all stations will broadcast in high definition by Feb. 17, 2009, 400 million units of consumer electronics are thrown out per year, according to the Web site of the Electronics TakeBack Coalition, an environmental group focusing on the issue.

The group's campaign, "Take Back My TV Campaign," urges manufacturing companies to be responsible for the waste their products create.

Americans ready to dispose of their old TVs at recycling centers considered environmentally safe by the campaign's standards can find the centers online at <http://takebackmytv.com/page/speakout/> TakeBackMyTV.

'Hymnanny for Hootenunnies'

Texas priest seen as 'godfather' of nascent liturgical music movement

BY JESSICA KELLY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

SLATON, Texas — If Ray Repp, of "Allelu!" and "Peace, My Friends" fame, can be considered the founding father of contemporary Catholic music, then Msgr. Joseph W. James can lay claim to the title of the music's "godfather."

Born in Dalhart and raised on a large ranch where he worked as a cowboy, Msgr. James was ordained for the Diocese of Amarillo in 1957. He became a priest of the Diocese of Lubbock, when it was created out of the Amarillo Diocese in 1983.

Now retired, Msgr. James has had a prophetic and productive life of ministry.

Msgr. James baptized Buddy Holly's drummer into the Catholic Church so the young man could marry the "Peggy Sue" that Holly sang about, but it's the priest's influence on liturgical music that will be his legacy.

In the early 1960s, before the Second Vatican Council (1962-65) brought changes to the church, the Mass was in Latin. There was sometimes a choir, usually with an organ played as an accompaniment.

The thought of using a guitar at Mass was practically blasphemous.

In the summer of 1964, then-Father James was at the University of Notre Dame, in Indiana, in a class with Father Clarence Rivers, a young priest from the Archdiocese of Cincinnati.

Their professor challenged Father Rivers to write a song for Mass in the vernacular, the language of the people.

So impressed was he by the song Father Rivers wrote — "God Is Love" — and songs he heard at nearby hootenannies, Msgr. James gathered them in a songbook, printed copies and organized a singalong at Notre Dame.

Soon, groups of students — many of whom were women religious — were gathering to sing, pray and worship on Saturday evenings. He called his songbook "Hymnanny for Hootenunnies."

In 1965, while helping with a three-week training session in Chicago for the Catholic Church Extension Society's lay volunteer program, Msgr. James encountered singalongs led by a young man who played guitar and taught participants songs he had written.

"I had a trusty little reel-to-reel tape recorder that I used to carry around so I could record anything of note," said Msgr. James. "This guy was singing some songs that I thought were really great. So I recorded them."

The "guy" was Repp, a seminarian on leave to serve as an Extension volunteer. Each night, the volunteers would gather for Mass before dinner. After the first evening of what Repp remembers as a "ho-hum," quiet Mass, he asked the celebrant, "Do you mind if we have some music tomorrow?"

The priest — Msgr. John May, later to become archbishop of St. Louis — agreed, and Repp began introducing his "folk Mass" music to the other volunteers, leading them in familiar songs and creating more along the way.

Many volunteers requested something to take with them as they dispersed throughout the country. Repp, however, had never written down any of his music.

"In fact," he said, "I hardly knew how to write stuff down, and so two or three people who knew more about music than I did spent an evening or two literally writing it down for the first time."

He and his friends then made up booklets of his music on a "ditto" machine to give to the volunteers.

"It was somewhere around this particular period of time that Joe James must have come to some of these things, and he said, 'You know, I think we should put some of this on tape,'" said Repp.

"So we recorded this tape, and Joe made this tape available to a lot of people, so when we were commissioned and went out, everybody not only had a physical copy of the music we'd been singing, they also had Joe's tapes," he said.

Father James asked for an endorsement of the music from Bishop Victor Reed of Oklahoma City, who happened to be in Chicago at the time.

The bishop agreed, so a label was attached to each tape reading "This has been approved by the bishop of Oklahoma City."

"I took one of (Repp's) tapes to Dennis Fitzpatrick, who had an office there in Chicago, Friends of the English Liturgy, FEL," Msgr. James told the South Plains Catholic, Lubbock's diocesan newspaper.

"I gave him the tape and said, 'I think it's pretty good stuff, and the bishop of Oklahoma City approved of it.'"

Within three months, Fitzpatrick called Repp, asking him to come back to Chicago to record an album.

He recorded "Mass for Young Americans," the first album of its kind and the inspiration for an entirely new genre of Catholic music.

Father James did not stop there. The next summer, he was at school in Chicago again, still carrying around his reel-to-reel recorder.

"I'd record anything that people that were going to summer school had written," he said.

Father James sent about 10 people to Fitzpatrick, who put them in Friends of the English Liturgy's 1966 "Hymnal for Young Christians."

Msgr. James also boosted the career of Sebastian Temple, who wrote "Prayer of St. Francis," by introducing him to Omer Westendorf, founder of World Library of Sacred Music and publisher of "The People's Mass Book."

The priest takes no credit for his role. "It was something that I enjoyed and promoted," he said. "I never got a penny out of it, or royalty, or anything else."

I didn't think about it as breaking new ground, it just seemed helpful and needed to be promoted," he said.

Students win pep rally from Carolina Panthers

School wins contest for second consecutive year

HUNTERSVILLE — DeShaun Foster, a running back with the Carolina Panthers, recently visited St. Mark School in Huntersville.

Foster's visit, along with the Panthers' Top Cat Cheerleaders and mascot Sir Purr, was part of a school pep rally at the school Nov. 27, 2007.

The school won the pep rally by placing first in a Harris Teeter Together in Education Milk Challenge, a contest sponsored by Harris Teeter, the Carolina Panthers and the Southeast United Dairy Association.

Local schools competed to redeem the most Harris Teeter milk carton caps. St. Mark School collected 14,900 caps. It was the second consecutive year the school won the contest. Last year, students collected 9,500 caps and won a similar pep rally.

In addition to the pep rally, the Carolina Panthers donated $500 toward the purchase of physical education equipment for the school. Harris Teeter gave the school a check for $754, representing 5 cents for every milk cap collected.

During the pep rally, students were treated to cheese, milk, cookies and ice cream sandwiches courtesy of Harris Teeter and the Southeast United Dairy Association.

"We are so proud of the families at St. Mark's for working together to win this contest again this year," said Principal Debbie Butler.

"Not only does this win boost school spirit, it provides our school with funds to help us continue to make St. Mark's a great place for our students to learn and grow," she said.

Saving Tony Soprano

Joyful spirit requires absence of sin, toxicity

If Tony Soprano, the fictional TV Mafia boss, came to me for help in overcoming his anxiety attacks, I would try to explain that a life of thievery and murder was not very conducive to attaining peace of mind, and he would have to change.

More likely than not, he would be polite, but inwardly scoff at the idea.

He once rebuked his wife who was trying to get him to change, saying, "I'm like Popeye the sailor man, I am what I am what I am."

His chances for attaining peace and spiritual joy at this point are rather slim. I wouldn't give up right away.

If he stayed around long enough to listen I would tell him, "Tony, God is just. You can't steal and murder and still expect to have a peaceful conscience.

"There will be a day of reckoning.

"God is sending you these anxiety attacks to awaken you to the fact that life is short and eternity is forever.

"He wants you to change your evil ways.

"To attain the peace and joy you crave so much, you will have to repent and firmly resolve to sin no more!"

Even if he agreed, he would still need some training in mental discipline. A truly joyful life is only possible when people are able to control their thoughts.

Removing your toxic thinking and tapping into God's joy is the most challenging part of the spiritual life.

In order to do it correctly, you have to clear your mind of all kinds of toxic thinking, such as fear, resentment, hatred, vindictiveness and on and on.

Fear is the enemy of joy. Jesus said, "Do not be afraid." Learning how to reduce fear will take time and training of the will. Grace builds on nature.

It takes a strong will, a grateful heart and a clear mind to remove the built up toxicity.

The words "happiness" and "joy" are

Spirituality for Today

FATHER JOHN CATOIR
CNS COLUMNIST

closely related but they are not exactly the same.

In the strict sense, we tend to think of happiness as coming more from the gratification of our senses than anything else.

We crave good food, music and the smell of fresh air. These all bring sensual gratification and contentment.

The fullness of happiness requires something deeper, however, something that arises in the soul: joy.

The inner life of joy completes our happiness.

Joy is the simplest form of gratitude and the greatest honor we can give to almighty God.

Spiritual joy is a gift that comes from the inner presence of divine life. Abiding in God, we touch his life, and this fills us with spiritual joy and happiness.

There's hope for Tony Soprano, but he has to get to the point where he is able to accept these ideas.

He is too habituated in a way of life that has left him spiritually blind, deaf and mute.

He killed off his conscience years ago, justifying murder as a matter of justice and seeing himself as the chief of police, the judge and the jury.

St. Paul wrote: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace" (Gal 5:22).

In order to cultivate a joyful spirit we all need to invoke the Holy Spirit right from the beginning, because above all joy is a gift.

A joyful season

Lent — a time to renew our hearts and minds

"Each year you give us this joyful season when we prepare to celebrate the paschal mystery with mind and heart renewed" (Preface of Lent 1).

The purpose of Lent is succinctly expressed by this preface. Catechumens prepare for baptism into the paschal mystery. The faithful are reminded of their baptism, and will renew their baptismal vows at the Easter liturgy.

Baptism and life

This baptismal focus is a life focus and is illumined by Lenten readings as well as by Pope John Paul II's 1995 encyclical, "Evangelium Vitae" ("The Gospel of Life").

Baptism initiates us into the eternal life Christ gives us. "Eternal" does not only mean it never ends. It also refers to the "quality" of that life; namely, it is a share in the life of the eternal God.

The baptized, therefore, are sons and daughters of God and are members of the church, the People of Life (see "Evangelium Vitae" No. 79). The baptized have taken hold of the eternal life promised them (see Rom.6:4) and are already living it (Gal 2:19-20; John 6:47).

Baptismal choices

The choices of the baptized are therefore to be shaped by their new identities (see Rom 6:6; Eph. 4:17-24). We see how Christ calls the Samaritan woman to repent as she accepts the waters of new life (see John 4:15-24).

Lenten repentance is necessary so that God's people may more deeply become who they are. They are called to see their sins more clearly. Hence baptism is known as "illumination." The passage about the man born blind (John 9) is therefore a key Lenten passage (4th Sunday of Lent-A and optional Mass for 4th week of Lent).

Empty promises

All who make the Lenten journey are called to be more alert to the attacks on human life and dignity. The people of life are called to reject sin and all the devil's works and empty promises (Renewal of Baptismal Promises, Easter Liturgy).

The "pro-choice" and "right-to-die" mentalities are two of those "empty promises" that are firmly rejected by the baptized. A firm rejection of these positions is integral to repentance. Lent is the perfect time for us to call our congregations to a clearer understanding of why this is true, and to lead them to a deeper affirmation of life, both natural and eternal, in the celebration of the paschal mystery.

Metanoia

Repentance, a key theme of Lent, is a changing of the mind — and with it, one's life — away from the path of sin and toward a life of holiness.

It is not possible to repent of a sin which one does not recognize or admit is a sin. During Lent, we ask to be delivered from such blindness and to be forgiven of even our hidden sins.

The application of this to the abortion problem is clear when we consider that the injustice of this act has been proclaimed as a "right" and a legitimate "choice." Because such respectable elements of society as the U.S. Supreme Court, many medical associations and even some Christian denominations continue to call abortion a "right," many find it hard to recognize it as a wrong.

Part of the purification of Lent involves the metanoia, the "change of mind," so necessary in this area.

Penitential practices

The works of charity that constitute a fundamental form of penance can include reaching out to those in need of concrete assistance in their pregnancies.

Volunteering at pregnancy resource centers is a perfect way to do this, as is the effort to make such centers better known in the community.

A common fund could be established, for example, to purchase an ad in the paper or the phone book. Giving to such a fund is, in fact, helping the poorest of the poor. To stand up in any way for the unborn child can be a penitential act, since it often brings unwarranted criticism, even from fellow worshipers who should be doing more themselves to end abortion.

This Lent, may the whole Catholic Church be strengthened in her mission to build the culture of life.

Father Pavone is national director of Priests for Life.

The Internet: A blessing and a curse

Web's dark side can have dangerous consequences

Editor's note: This column contains graphic descriptions.

Oh the Internet! It's a blessing and a curse. It makes possible all sorts of things, some good and some bad. It has redefined how we talk about things, meet people, get information and pass our time.

It has isolated us and it has connected us.

As a parish priest who has a pretty low opinion of high-tech, I have been slow to learn about or use the Internet. But it has changed our lives.

On the plus side, we can get information instantly. I can put a line from Scripture into the search engine and get citations and commentary in seconds. I can find quotes and authors more easily than looking on my bookshelf.

This year our parishioners were thinking about starting a new program for the homeless. A committee was able to research how programs are run in dozens of communities and pick the best program.

It was fantastic. In only a few days a complete operational manual was assembled.

On the negative side, the Internet has been dangerous and sometimes ruinous to spiritual lives. The worst thing that it has brought directly into our homes is a flood of pornography.

Twenty-one years ago, when I first started hearing confessions, pornography addiction was not such a commonly confessed sin. Now I frequently hear it from people of all ages.

One new penance I have been using in confession is an Internet "fast": "Go one day or two days without the Internet for your penance," is what I tell people.

Years ago people had to leave their home and go to some sleazy store to get pornography. It was a danger in the red-light districts of big cities only. Now it comes into bedrooms and family rooms everywhere.

The problem with this is ready availability.

Now even timid people who would not be caught dead buying something in public are downloading unbelievable filth that makes them miserable.

For young people this World Wide Web is a spider's web that catches them and holds them in misery.

This is not a question of some

Parish Diary

FATHER PETER DALY
CNS COLUMNIST

occasional dalliance with some mildly erotic stuff. For some people it is totally debilitating.

A few years ago I counseled a man who had gotten into this addiction. He was on disability, so he did not work.

Eventually he completely stopped leaving his apartment. He stopped talking to people. Once he had been a trim, handsome young man.

He gained weight and started living in real filth. So complete was his addiction he even cut himself off from his mother.

One night his mother tried to get him on the telephone. No answer. So she went over and entered his apartment with the help of the manager.

He was dead, surrounded by piles of filthy pictures that he had downloaded or purchased online. She called the police and the sheriff called me.

When I got over to the apartment he was already cold. He was lying there on the sofa surrounded by these horrible photos. I remember crying as I anointed him and said the prayers for the dead over him. What a sadness!

Most addictions are not that bad but the danger is there.

The Internet is a tool, a powerful tool. But like any power tool, it can be dangerous.

It brings the world into our homes, good and bad.

It used to be that the dangers were out there. Now they are right in the room with us. Beware.

Pope says never stop praying, asking God for Christian unity

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI asked Catholics to participate in the Jan. 18-25 Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, praying that God would help Christians witness together the gift of salvation in Christ.

The theme of the 2008 celebration is "Pray Without Ceasing," an invitation that the pope said he wanted to make his own and "address to the whole church."

"Yes, it is necessary to pray without ceasing, asking God with insistence for the great gift of unity among all the Lord's disciples," he said Jan. 16 at his weekly general audience.

In his main audience talk, Pope Benedict continued his series on the life and teaching of St. Augustine, focusing on his efforts to keep Christians united, fight heresy, comfort victims of war and prepare for his own death.

Resigning as bishop of Hippo, in what today is Algeria, St. Augustine wanted to dedicate the rest of his days to Scripture study and prayer, the pope said.

Here is the Vatican text of Pope Benedict's remarks in English.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Our catechesis this week is again centered on the life and writings of the great doctor of the church, St. Augustine. Some four years before he died, Augustine designated his successor in the See of Hippo, desiring to devote the rest of his life to the study of the Scriptures.

Nevertheless, those proved to be years of extraordinary activity, as the aged bishop sought to reconcile divided Christians and to bring peace to the troubled African provinces of the empire.

During the Vandal invasion of Africa, Augustine found solace in reflection on the mystery of God's providence. The world, he said, is growing old and failing, yet Christ remains eternally young and brings renewed youth to those who put their faith in him.

Amid the calamities of the time, he encouraged the clergy not to abandon their flock, but to offer the supreme witness of Christian charity.

Augustine died in 431, during the siege of Hippo, having devoted his last days to penance and prayer. At last his great heart found its rest in God.

Today, as in past centuries, may Augustine's example and the rich treasury of his writings be a source of instruction, inspiration and strength as the church makes her pilgrim way to the fullness of God's Kingdom.

Planning needed in an ever-changing world

New Year is a good time to review estate plans

For most people in today's world, change remains a constant. Your circle of loved ones can increase or diminish over time as children grow up and have children of their own, good friends move away, and new friends come into your life.

These are just three examples that can call for a review of long-term financial plans. Even thoughtful, well-drafted documents may require an update from time to time because of events in family life, changes in tax laws or economic fluctuations.

An estate plan typically revolves around a will. This document outlines provisions for members of your family and other loved ones, as well as charitable interests including your Catholic community. It can also be used to distribute property not placed in a trust or other arrangement, as well as express to the court your choice of guardian for minor children or others in your care.

After the initial estate plan is in place, it is important to review it with an attorney either when significant changes occur in your life or about every three years. This helps assure that your wishes will be carried out as you intended.

Typical events that might warrant revisions include a birth, a change in marital status or the loss of a loved one. Changes in friendships, affiliations or charitable interest may prompt the need for a review, as can a significant change in wealth or a move to another state.

Instead of starting over with a new will each time revisions become necessary, most changes can be made by using a simple codicil, or amendment, to your original document. Working with an experienced estate planning attorney may allow you to minimize estate settlement expenses and taxes, leaving more of your assets for loved ones and charitable interests.

Catholics from all walks of life tell view estate planning as opportunities for faithful Christian stewardship by assuring ongoing support for their families and loved ones, their churches, a Catholic school, the Diocese of Charlotte, the diocesan foundation or other Catholic entities.

As one who has seen the heartache caused by an absence of long term planning, I encourage you to take the time as we begin this new year to protect your heirs and your assets through proper estate planning.

Pope baptizes 13 infants, urges parents to guide them spiritually

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Presiding over one of his favorite annual liturgies, Pope Benedict XVI baptized 13 infants and urged their parents to educate them in faith, hope and charity.

The newly baptized need material care and attention, but above all they need spiritual guidance as they grow older, he said.

"Dear parents, be the first witnesses of an authentic faith in God," he said.

The pope celebrated the Mass Jan. 13 at the Sistine Chapel's original main altar, instead of using the free-standing temporary altar as had been customary in recent years.

Because the original altar stands against the chapel wall, that meant the pope celebrated parts of the Mass turned away from the people, facing the cross and Michelangelo's fresco of "The Last Judgment."

The Vatican's liturgical office, now headed by Msgr. Guido Marini, explained in a note that the change was made to respect the structure of the chapel and not to "alter the beauty and harmony of this architectural jewel."

"This means that in some moments the pope will find himself with his back to the faithful and his eyes on the cross, thus orienting the attitude and disposition of the entire assembly," it said.

The Mass was celebrated in Italian and, as usual, followed the liturgy of the 1970 Roman Missal.

The pope beamed as he poured water from a gilded shell onto the heads of each of the infants and said their names. All the newly baptized were children of Vatican City employees.

As in other years, the Mass had a familial atmosphere. The brothers and sisters of the baptized carried the offertory gifts, and a chorus of crying babies competed with the Sistine Chapel Choir throughout the liturgy.

In his homily, the pope said the baptized infants were receiving a "new life, the life of grace, which enables them to enter into a personal relationship with the Creator."

Although sin created an abyss between God and man, Christ's sacrifice bridged it, he said.

Baptism reopens the way toward this "fullness of life," he said.

At the end of the Mass, the pope momentarily lost his gold ring. As he began processing out of the chapel, he turned to Msgr. Marini and held out his hand to indicate the missing ring.

An assistant found it on the floor next to the altar.

Later, addressing pilgrims from his apartment window above St. Peter's Square, the pope spoke about the significance of Christ's baptism by St. John the Baptist in the Jordan River.

By being baptized along with sinners, Jesus was beginning the process of taking on the burden of the faults of all humanity, he said.

It was a process that ended with his death on the cross, thus opening the way to eternal life, he said.

LAREDO, Texas — Bishops from adjoining U.S. and Mexican dioceses said the main concern they shared at a Jan. 12 meeting was how immigrants are being treated in both countries.

Regardless of their legal status, people who try to cross the border into the United States need to be treated as human beings, said Bishop Patrick J. Zurek.

The auxiliary bishop from San Antonio will be installed as bishop of Amarillo, Texas, Feb. 22.

CHARLOTTE — Among a sea of marchers, many of whom carried large pro-life posters, one sign stood out. It stated: "I regret my abortion."

Andrea Hines held the sign up but her expression was downcast. She was one of the 150 men, women and children who took part in the second Charlotte Right to Life March Jan. 18.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis walked with the marchers from the diocesan Pastoral Center on South Church Street to Tryon Square, the intersection Trade and Tryon streets in the heart of Charlotte.

WASHINGTON — Some came to the 35th annual March for Life on Harley-Davidsons.

Others came to Washington on foot, on the Metro subway system, in cars, in buses and on planes. They came riding in wheelchairs and pushing strollers.

But all the marchers came with the same hope — to end abortion in the United States.

Tens of thousands of people flooded the National Mall as they rallied Jan. 22 in preparation for a march in the biting cold down Constitution Avenue toward the Supreme Court.

SISTER 'G-FORCE CAPTAIN'

Franciscan Sister Sean Marie Tobin is all smiles as she joins Green Bay Packers players on the turf at Lambeau Field in Green Bay, Wis., Jan. 12 for the coin toss. Sister Tobin won a Packers playoff-ticket essay contest with an entry about how she has been a Packers fan since 1945. Her prize was to serve as an honorary "G-Force Captain," representing all Packers fans at the Jan. 12 playoff game against the Seattle Seahawks.

Franciscan's essay wins her spot as honorary captain at Packers game

GREEN BAY, Wis. (CNS) — Packer nation, meet your captain: Franciscan Sister Sean Marie Tobin.

Visitors to the Green Bay Packers' official Web site, Packers.com, selected Sister Tobin of Manitowoc as winner of the site's playoff-ticket essay contest.

According to the Packers' Web site, more than 5,000 essays were submitted, and more than 5,000 votes were cast. Sister Tobin, 68, was one of five essay finalists.

Her prize was to serve as honorary "G-Force Captain," representing all Packer fans at the Jan. 12 playoff game against the Seattle Seahawks at Lambeau Field in Green Bay.

Green Bay defeated Seattle 42-20 to advance to the NFL's National Football Conference championship game against the New York Giants Jan. 20. She repeated her honorary captain duties for that game.

"Looking up and seeing 72,000 fans and knowing you are representing them is a humbling experience," Sister Tobin said.

She received two free tickets to the game and took center stage during the coin toss when she accompanied the team captains to midfield.

Brett Favre was among the captains, and while Sister Tobin is a fan of the future Hall of Fame quarterback, she was even more thrilled to meet her favorite Packer on this year's squad, wide receiver Donald Driver, who "seems like he is really a generous person," she said.

In her essay, Sister Tobin wrote about how she has been a Packers fan since 1945. Her father introduced her to the game of football, and the "Ice Bowl" — a memorable Packer victory played Dec. 31, 1967, against the Dallas Cowboys — was the last game she attended with him.

Her father was in her thoughts during the Jan. 12 game.

"It was like this was planned upstairs. We didn't know where our tickets would be. When we got to our seats, we were two rows down from where I sat at the 'Ice Bowl,'" she said.

Sister Tobin wrote in her essay that her "loyalty, enthusiasm, positive thinking and prayer for the safety of the players" qualified her to be an honorary captain.

As a representative of the fans, she sought to meet as many as possible by walking around the parking lot and visiting tailgate parties prior to the game.

"They (fans) were so warm and receptive," she said. "Some told me they voted for me. Some told me they read my essay. I got the warmest reception. After the game, some fans wanted pictures with me."

A member of the Franciscans in Manitowoc since 1960, she has been a teacher and a principal. She is now in semiretirement at the convent, she said.

"We (sisters) don't retire," she said. "We redistribute energy."

She stays busy as a mentor, teaching English as a second language, and participates in Touchstone, a program involving visits and letters to retired priests and religious now living in nursing homes and assisted-living facilities.

Sister Tobin hoped for a victory for the Packers over the New York Giants on Jan. 20, but the Giants won 23-20 in overtime.

"I think both teams (were) on a roll," she said.

Panelists assess 'Kennedy moment' and its impact on today's campaigns

NEW YORK (CNS) — Then-Sen. John F. Kennedy's eloquent defense of the separation of church and state in a 1960 address successfully deflected suspicion that his presidency would be governed by his Catholic religion.

But by using ambiguous language, the speech also isolated his personal beliefs from potential public policy positions in a way that is not possible for contemporary candidates, concluded panelists at a Jan. 16 discussion of "Religion and the Race for the Presidency: The Kennedy Moment."

The event, attended by 400 people, was held at Jesuit-run Fordham University in New York.

The so-called "Kennedy moment" was an 11-minute speech to the Greater Houston Ministerial Association Sept. 12, 1960.

In it, Kennedy said, "Whatever issue may come before me as president ... I will make my decision ... in accordance with what my conscience tells me to be in the national interest, and without regard to outside religious pressure or dictates."

Father J. Bryan Hehir, a priest of the Archdiocese of Boston and professor of religion and public life at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., said Kennedy was "confronting a momentous problem," which accounted for the combination of strong words and an ambiguous message.

Kennedy tried to build two firewalls in the speech and breach them with one statement, he said. "The first firewall is the absolutist position on the separation of church and state and the second, more ambiguous one, is that a president's religion should be private," he said.

"He was either claiming his right to make his own religious choices or saying that religion is inherently a private matter," he said.

The breach statement was Kennedy's promise "to resign if it came to a crisis," Father Hehir said.

Vatican official condemns cloning of human embryos by U.S. company

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A Vatican official condemned the reported cloning of human embryos and said the idea of using them to produce "personalized" therapeutic stem cells was morally illicit and pointless.

Such cloning represents "the worst type of exploitation of the human being," Bishop Elio Sgreccia, president of the Pontifical Academy for Life, told Vatican Radio Jan. 18.

"As for the possible justification that this would be used to provide therapy, up to now there's been no success at this, and even if there were, it would not be permissible to use the human being as a medicine," Bishop Sgreccia said.

The California biotech company Stemagen reported Jan. 17 that it had cloned the embryos from adult skin cells.

The company is interested in developing clones of patients, from which stem cells could then be harvested to grow replacement tissue.

Five of the embryos were said to have been grown to an advanced stage, to the point that they could have been implanted in a womb.

Company officials emphasized that they were not interested in creating cloned babies.

Bishop Sgreccia said that using embryos to produce stem cells already is outdated, given recent advances in making stem cells without creating an embryo.

In that sense, he said, human cloning has lost "even the pretext" of therapeutic justification.

4145 Johnson St., will host an open house Jan. 30 at 7:15 p.m. for the general public, IHM parishioners and anyone else with questions regarding or interest in the Catholic faith. ## Italian newspaper says pope to change Tridentine prayer for Jews

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI has decided to reformulate a Good Friday prayer in the 1962 Roman Missal that was offensive to Jews, according to an Italian newspaper.

The new prayer will drop all reference to the "blindness" of the Jews in refusing Christ as savior, the newspaper, Il Giornale, reported Jan. 18.

The Vatican did not officially confirm the report, but sources said privately that a rewriting of the prayer was likely and could be made public soon.

The issue arose last year when the pope liberalized use of the 1962 missal, known popularly as the Tridentine rite. The missal contains a prayer for the conversion of Jews, recited on Good Friday.

While the prayer would not be recited in most parishes, particular Catholic communities devoted to the old rite could use it in Good Friday liturgies.

The prayer for Jews in the 1962 missal is part of a series of prayers for the conversion of non-Christians.

Although the 1962 missal no longer contains a reference to "perfidious Jews," which was dropped in 1959, the text of the Good Friday prayer and the possibility of its wider use brought objections from Jewish leaders.

The chief rabbis of Israel sent a letter of concern about the prayer to the pope, and Abraham H. Foxman, U.S. director of the Anti-Defamation League, said it was disappointing and offensive to see "anti-Jewish language" return to the liturgy after its removal nearly 40 years ago.

Even as the pope issued his document on the extraordinary form of the Mass, Vatican officials were suggesting that the Good Friday prayer could be revised.

Later, Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, the Vatican secretary of state, said the problem might be resolved by simply substituting the current missal's version of the prayer. That text describes the Jewish people as "the first to hear the word of God" and prays that they "may arrive at the fullness of redemption."

But Pope Benedict, according to the Italian newspaper report, opted to completely reformulate the prayer for the 1962 missal.

Spiritual sparring

Father Zbigniew Dudek shows teenagers how to box at a boxing club in Maslonskie, in southern Poland, Jan. 21. The Catholic priest teaches boxing in his free time, believing that the sport develops universal characteristics useful in everyday life as well as in faith. He describes the sport as a "discipline" rather than a fight. The priest said similarities can be drawn between the sermons in his church, where the word of God is meant to help guard people against the trials of daily life, and the sparring sessions, where the body and mind are taught to be resistant in a slightly different way.

Barnyard bedlam? Animals take center stall in St. Peter's Square

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Amid an occasional chorus of moo, oink, baa and neigh, Cardinal Angelo Comastri blessed several dozen animals peacefully munching their lunch in St. Peter's Square.

The Jan. 17 noon blessing of a donkey and her baby, a water buffalo and her calf, a skittish ostrich, a large white boar, rabbits and baby bunnies, hens and geese, milk cows, a horse and a steer, sheep, lambs and goats marked the feast of St. Anthony the Abbot. The animals belonged to members of an Italian association of farmers and ranchers. St. Anthony, who died in Egypt in 356, is the patron saint of the association.

Cardinal Comastri, papal vicar of Vatican City, celebrated a Mass in St. Peter's Basilica with most of the members of the association, while a handful waited with their livestock in the square for the blessing.

The Vatican set up 14 sturdy stalls in the square for most of the four-legged critters and the ostrich. The bunnies and fowl were in spacious cages.

Along with black rubber buckets for water and feed, the Vatican also moved a few large dumpsters into the square, for obvious purposes.

Couple makes temporary promises to Secular Discalced Carmelites

ASHEVILLE — Jim and Loretta Potts, parishioners of St. Barnabas Church in Arden, recently made their temporary promises to the Flower of Carmel Community and to the Secular Order of Discalced Carmelites.

After two and a half years of initial formation, the Potts made their promises before members of the Flower of Carmel Community and friends during a Mass celebrated in the couple's Asheville home Nov. 10, 2007.

Discalced Carmelite Father Anthony Hagolf, the community's spiritual assistant, celebrated the Mass and officiated at the ceremony, during which the Potts promised to live for three years under the three evangelical counsels — poverty, chastity and obedience — and in the spirit of the beatitudes. Elizabeth Pantas, the community's formation director, accepted the Potts' promises on behalf of the community.

Jim Potts said his spiritual journey with the community has resulted in an "improvement in daily prayer life, which brings me closer to Jesus."

Loretta Potts said her spiritual journey as "given (her) the insight that knowledge and wisdom of God is more meaningful than knowledge and wisdom of the world."

The Potts now enter a period of formation consisting of study, prayer and monthly community meetings. At the end of this period, the Potts may be invited to make permanent promises.

The Secular Order of Discalced Carmelites consists of lay persons and diocesan priests who strive for Christian perfection according to the spirit and ideals of the Discalced Carmelites.

Following in the way of St. John of the Cross and St. Teresa of Avila, the 16th-century Carmelite reformer and mystic, Secular Carmelites endeavor to make their lives grace-filled and fruitful for the church and the world. They are called upon to carry into the world the witness, message and example of the Discalced Carmelites.

"Light the Way"

Catholic Schools Week is the time to let people know that our schools really do "Light the Way," by providing a faith-based education that supports the whole child in improved learning, and in leading a fulfilled, balanced and meaningful life. Catholic Schools also "Light the Way" by supporting families and making a positive and lasting impact in our communities.

session with a reporter for the South Texas Catholic, newspaper of the Corpus Christi Diocese.

Bishop Zurek said the group met with representatives of various government entities, including the U.S. Border Patrol, the U.S. consulate in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, and the general counsel for Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas.

Most striking to him, said Bishop Zurek, was learning that "so often Mexicans are deported and dumped right across the border."

Many deportees are minors with no family waiting for them in Mexico, so they often become involved in drug and/or sex trafficking for mere survival, he said.

The border bishops were quite concerned about the situation of minors who are deported to Mexico. Bishop Zurek said they learned children are sometimes left to fend for themselves.

Bishop Alonso Gerardo Garza Trevino of Piedras Negras, Mexico, across the border from Eagle Pass, Texas, said it was unsettling to hear that an estimated 20,000 children come to the U.S. from Mexico and other Latin American countries each year.

He said he hoped the church in Mexico and Texas could set up homes for children following the example of Lolita Ayala, a well-known broadcaster and philanthropist from Mexico City who

"Every day ... hundreds are deported back here and it's an action against their humanity."

— Bishop Renato Ascencio Leon established "Solo por Ayudar" (Only to Help), a shelter for children.

Bishop Renato Ascencio Leon of the Ciudad Juarez Diocese in Mexico is a member of the Vatican's Pontifical Council for Migrants and Travelers and has headed the Mexican bishops' conference's migration committee for eight years.

"Every day in Ciudad Juarez, hundreds are deported back here and it's an action against their humanity," said Bishop Leon.

He described two aspects of the bishops' concerns on immigration — the approach of governments and the approach of the people.

Bishop Leon said he believes "Hispanic people living in the U.S. are favorable toward migrants" and that the "major problem facing the government is the need to come up with a way for the undocumented people in the U.S. to become legal."

Among his recent concerns, he

U.S. and Mexican bishops celebrate Mass on the banks of the Rio Grande near Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, Jan. 13. said, is the Legal Arizona Workers Act that took effect Jan. 1; under it, business owners risk losing their state and local licenses if they knowingly hire undocumented workers.

A first offense gets a minimum 10-day suspension and licenses may be revoked for a second offense.

"That leaves our country with all kinds of problems," said Bishop Leon.

That includes fewer jobs for those who commonly crossed into Arizona for work.

Laredo Bishop James A. Tamayo, who hosted the meeting, said that after each of the gatherings he walks away with hope, despite the complex and troubling issues the bishops discuss.

Following the session for bishops, a public march to the border crossing and an outdoor Mass gave witness to the community that "the bishops stand together for dignity and unity for every person," said Bishop Tamayo.

The border bishops will meet again privately in June in the Archdiocese of Chihuahua, Mexico, and will gather next January in Reynosa, Mexico, in the Diocese of Matamoros.

Bishop Tamayo said that meeting will also include a public march and Mass during National Migration Week and will continue discussions on how churches on both sides of the river can lighten the burdens of families split by the border.

Bishop Tamayo said one concern for the bishops is finding ways to help divided families celebrate the sacraments together without fear of deportation or detention.

Bishop Ricardo Watty Urquidi of the Mexican Diocese of Nuevo Laredo said the information gathered from the presentations during the meeting "gave us light on this phenomenon, and then we talked. ... We didn't have a solution; we just want to know how to help."

a senior program officer for the U.S.-based humanitarian organization Church World Service.

His work takes him to many of Afghanistan's rural areas. "People feel like: 'Why not join the Taliban? We have nothing to lose,'" he said.

Rahima Khorosh, a Kabul resident and teacher at a center for children who have experienced violence, explained how it impedes the daily life of Kabul residents.

Khorosh recalled that Kabul was rocked by three suicide bombings in September and that her neighbors lost a daughter in one of the blasts.

"I don't know what will happen to me when I take my (daily, 15-minute) walk to the center," Khorosh said.

The British news agency Reuters reported Jan. 17 that attacks by the Taliban, backed by al-Qaida, have increased in the past two years. The Islamic-fundamentalist Taliban ruled most of Afghanistan from 1996 until U.S.-led forces ousted them in 2001.

Fear of attacks has complicated humanitarian efforts in Afghanistan, where aid work has never been easy in the best of circumstances.

"It is increasingly difficult for internationals to travel with confidence beyond urban areas," said Paul Hicks, country representative in Afghanistan for Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops' overseas relief and development agency.

"All of this means that we cannot do as much work as we would like or provide the level of technical support and field training that we would like."

Noting that threats are not always related to the Taliban, Hicks said security in the field mostly "depends on our relationships with local community leaders as well as the local government leaders."

"While they keep us safe, they are also often under increasing pressure and more and more frequently recommend that we curtail traveling for periods of time," he told Catholic News Service in late December.

However, Hicks said there remains an impressive "drive and determination of local people," to deliver humanitarian assistance to areas that need it.

Students in Kabul, Afghanistan, attend a rehabilitation center for youths who have experienced trauma and violence. Boys and girls share a classroom — something unthinkable during the Taliban era.

And overall, he said, "Afghanistan is a dynamic and exciting country."

He said what is "most impressive and inspiring" is Afghans' resilience.

"There is a real will to see progress in the country, and there is personal drive for each person to advance his or her professional training," Hicks said.

Noting Afghans' independence and "healthy resistance to impositions from the outside," Hicks said, "the international community will need to learn to act with more humility in Afghanistan, recognizing that the Afghan people need to be planning and making decisions that affect their futures."

Called to 'a massive undertaking'

Roe v. Wade 'will not stand,' cardinal says at pro-life vigil Mass

BY MARK PATTISON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Roe v. Wade, the 35-year-old Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion virtually on demand, "will not stand," Cardinal Justin Rigali of Philadelphia said in his homily at a Jan. 21 evening Mass that opened the annual National Prayer Vigil for Life.

"Roe v. Wade is incompatible with human dignity," said Cardinal Rigali, chairman of the U.S. bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities.

"It must not stand. It cannot stand. It will not stand," he said.

His declaration drew applause from the packed Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington. It was one of five times that the cardinal's remarks during his homily were met with applause.

People sit on the floor during the vigil Mass for life at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington Jan. 21. Thousands attended the service at the basilica on the eve of the annual March for Life. The events marked the 1973 Supreme Court decision of Roe v. Wade that legalized abortion across the country.

Jan. 21, told the packed church that, "instead of choosing 'great' or impressive people in the eyes of the world, God uses the humble, the foolish, the weak and 'those who count for nothing' to accomplish his purposes."

"It is when we least expect it that the tiniest among us can humble the powerful," he said.

One example the cardinal cited was an embryo glimpsed by stem-cell researcher Dr. Shinya Yamanaka.

The doctor was quoted in The New York Times as saying, "When I saw the embryo, I suddenly realized there was such a small difference between it and my daughters. ... I thought, we can't keep destroying embryos for our research. There must be another way."

Yamanaka announced in December a technique that successfully turned adult skin cells into the equivalent of human embryonic stem cells without using an actual embryo.

"If God can use a helpless embryo to change a human heart, he can certainly use us with all our limitations and weaknesses," Cardinal Rigali said.

"By seeking holiness and using the gifts God has given you to accomplish his will in your life," he continued, "you are contributing mightily to that kingdom we all long for, where there will be no more crying or pain or death."

"Certainly no abortion. No euthanasia. No assisted suicide. No deep-freezing of embryos as though they were merchandise. And no destruction of human life in the name of science," he said.

Cardinal Rigali said, "Our value does not come from being so-called 'productive' members of society, but from Emmanuel, God always with us."

He added, "We possess, or will be given, enough time and resources to build a culture of life together."

During his homily, Cardinal Rigali drew a comparison between those attending the Mass and the new Knights of Columbus Incarnation Dome at the basilica, which required 2.4 million pieces of colored glass cut and assembled in Italy and shipped in 346 boxes for five months of installation.

"We too, dear friends, are called to a massive undertaking," Cardinal Rigali said. "This urgent project is well under way, but we know it is far from complete."

God "now sends you out, thousands upon thousands strong, to do your part in forming a vibrant mosaic on behalf of life," he added. "You must be the 'rich color' he created you to be. You must play your role in his overarching design, and be patient with others as they seek to do the same."

The earlier start of the vigil Mass — one hour earlier than in past years — appeared to make not one bit of difference in the numbers attending, as people squeezed into every pew, aisle, vestibule and side chapel in the basilica's main church.

The number of participants in the sanctuary was similarly large, as the entrance procession — featuring seminarians, deacons, priests and more than 40 bishops who were concelebrants — took 30 minutes to complete.

Thousands participate in annual March for Life

Marchers of nearly every age, gender and religion carried signs protesting abortion. Some pro-life advocates prayed the rosary or chanted slogans.

Among them were approximately 1,000 people from the Charlotte and Raleigh dioceses. That morning, Bishop Peter J. Jugis of Charlotte celebrated Mass in the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, with Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Raleigh concelebrating.

"Bishop Jugis and Bishop Burbidge sent a strong message to North Carolinians to stand on the side of life. The presence of so many at Mass on Jan. 22 for North Carolina pilgrims to the march was a testimony that many regard this as the paramount life issue," said Maggi Nadol, respect life director for the Diocese of Charlotte.

Amid the usual Knights of Columbus "Defend Life" signs and the throngs of school and parish groups, Mark Hall's mobile ultrasound clinics parked on Sixth Street were an unusual new addition.

Hall and three other people drove up from Orlando, Fla., with a specially outfitted RV that they more typically park outside abortion clinics, offering women a last chance to take a look through ultrasound at the fetal lives they intend to end.

Hall and the "Messengers of Hope," as they call themselves, were recruiting people willing to volunteer to support their plans for a series of 40-day stops in seven different cities.

In the 12 years he has operated the mobile ultrasound service, Hall said the mission has persuaded more than 450 women not to go through with abortions they had been minutes away from having.

"Of those who have the ultrasound,

95 percent change their minds," he said.

Nearby, Father Chad Hatfield, chancellor of St. Vladimir Orthodox Theological Seminary in Crestwood, N.Y., said he brought 25 seminarians and others to Washington for the first time to emphasize that "we're winning" the fight against abortion.

"Look at the youth here," he said, gesturing to the crowds of high school-age and younger people nearby. "The other side has abandoned their future (by having abortions). We're creating ours."

On the stage, March for Life organizer Nellie Gray introduced a long program of politicians, clergy and other anti-abortion activists who helped warm up a crowd shivering in freezing temperatures and light drizzle.

Among the speakers, Rep. Christopher Smith, R-N.J., headed off a long string of politicians to take the microphone to make sure participants saw the fight against abortion in political terms.

In his remarks recorded at a White House breakfast earlier that morning and replayed at the rally, President George W. Bush lauded those who work for "a culture of life where a woman with an unplanned pregnancy knows there are caring people who will support her; where a pregnant teen can carry her child and complete her education; where the dignity of both the mother and child is honored and cherished."

March organizer Gray said the turnout for the annual event underscores the recognition that "it's not going to work trying to change this from the top down. It's not working that way. We're going to unite the grass roots."

Knights of Columbus Supreme Knight Carl Anderson said the Knights, who help organize anti-abortion events around the country, do so because "abortion hurts everyone," from the unborn child and the parents to doctors and nurses who are compromised by their participation.

Eleven-year-old Stephen Maimone (left) attends the March for Life rally in Washington with other family members Jan. 22. The Maimone family, from Immaculate Conception Church in Forest City, N.C., was among the thousands of people taking part in the annual demonstration.

"It undermines respect for judges," he said. "It implicates the taxpayer who pays for it. It coarsens the society that tolerates it."

As in most other years, march participants came from far and near.

More than 20,000 young people from around the country filled the seats in the Verizon Center sports arena in Washington Jan. 22 for the annual Rally for Life and Youth Mass, celebrated by Washington Archbishop Donald W. Wuerl.

Youths attending this year received a special surprise: a personal message from Pope Benedict XVI, read by the apostolic nuncio to the United States, Archbishop Pietro Sambi.

In the message, the pope expressed his gratitude for the youths' commitment to life and said he looked forward to his visit to the United States in April.

On Constitution Avenue, a stay-at-home father, Samuel Laube from Mount Joy, Pa., pushed a stroller and brought three of his children to the march on a field trip. He hopes one day his children will be the next generation of youths to stand up for life.

Not too far away from Laube's sleeping babies stood a group of men with denim jackets, bandannas and leather boots.

The Sons of God, a motorcycle group that promotes the Gospel to other bikers, came on Harley-Davidsons to defend fatherhood and defend life.

Jul Brown, who accompanied the bikers and whose husband is a member of the Sons of God, said when she had twins 23 years ago they were born five months premature with severe medical complications, and they remained in the hospital for two months. It was ironic, she said, because although she wanted her children to live just down the hall doctors aborted babies.

"That is my choice?" she asked. "We turn our heads from what is uncomfortable to us. I'm here to say let's protect the innocent."

Pro-life marchers take to streets of Charlotte

front of St. Peter Church.

Leading the march was a crucifix, carried by Father Mark Lawlor, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte. Two Charlotte-Mecklenburg police officers on bicycles provided a sidewalk escort for the walkers, allowing the long line to stay together.

Organizer Tina Witt, a parishioner of St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte, described the marchers as being a part of "God's army."

"They go with the spirit of truth and charity as our weapons," she said.

Witt handed rosaries to passersby and to people who were seated on the benches along the sidewalk.

At The Square, the marchers took positions on each of the four corners of the intersection. The damp and chilly weather reduced the number of the lunch-time office workers who normally throng to the area.

Bishop Jugis began the rally with a prayer delivered in the shadow of a statue depicting a woman holding a smiling baby aloft. The statue is called "Future."

"Bless our efforts to extend legal protection to the innocent child in the womb. Make us courageous witnesses for life in our rally and march today," said Bishop Jugis.

Then it was Hines' turn to speak. Her story began when, in 1977 as a college student, she became pregnant and was encouraged by her mother and boyfriend to get an abortion.

"It changed my life," she said. "I immediately fell into total remorse and shame. As far as I was concerned, I'd blown my life."

Unlike many women who undergo abortions, Hines married the man who fathered her aborted child.

"We stayed together, we love each other, but our relationship is tumultuous and it all stems from that [the abortion]," she said, a tear forming in her eye.

Hines, a parishioner of St. Matthew Church in Charlotte, silently suffered with her guilt for 20 years. She planned to take the story of her abortion to the grave, never telling anyone about the baby she gave up.

"It's a hidden thing in our society. No one will talk about," she said, her voice a mixture of shame and anger.

But in the late 1090s, Hines had a change of heart, which she described as "agonizing." God, she felt, was talking to her, asking her to share her abortion story.

"This is the Holy Spirit raising post-abortive people up. God showed me and told me that it was Satan who was keeping me down," said Hines.

"Abortion continues because of the silence surrounding it," she said.

The marchers prayed and sang in the noisy center of the city. A loudspeaker used to amplify the pro-life message

"Bless our efforts ... make us courageous witnesses for life ...."

— Bishop Peter J. Jugis was positioned in the front of the 62-story Bank of America corporate headquarters building.

The location was fitting for a protest against abortion. A bank spokesperson confirmed that while the bank has no stand on the abortion issue, the company's health care coverage includes elective abortions.

Bank of America employs 209,000 workers.

After Hines and another post-abortive woman told their stories, the marchers walked two blocks to the federal courthouse on West Trade Street. There, Father Lawlor led the group in the recitation of the rosary.

Appropriately, Father Lawlor chose to focus on the five sorrowful mysteries.

As cars honked in the traffic and trucks roared by, the gentle voices being lifted in prayer for the innocent unborn could be heard, but barely.

The good and bad of Harry Potter

Writers in Vatican newspaper debate lessons of Rowling's novels

BY CINDY WOODEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican newspaper sponsored a face-off between a writer who said the Harry Potter novels offer lessons in the importance of love and self-giving and one who said they teach that with secret knowledge one can control others and the forces of nature.

The newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, dedicated a full page in its Jan. 14-15 issue to the debate about the novels by J.K. Rowling.

The Italian translation of the last novel, "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows," was released in early January.

Paolo Gulisano, a physician and the author of a biography of J.R.R. Tolkien, said that the Harry Potter books counter the individualism of the modern age by making a hero of a boy "guided by moral values such as the choice of good, giving, sacrifice, friendship and love."

The stories, he said, teach young people "without moralizing" that material riches, immortality and anything obtained without effort "are illusions and that what truly counts is commitment, friendship and love."

"It is not power, not success, not an easy life that lead to the truest and deepest joy, but friendship, self-giving and adhering to the truth," he said.

But Edoardo Rialti, a professor of English literature at the University of Florence, said the books "communicate a vision of the world and of the human person that is full of profound errors and dangerous suggestions."

First, he said, the books teach that "evil is good," and that violence, lying, trickery and manipulation can be positive if used to obtain something good.

But the deeper problem, he said, is that the books advocate gnosticism, the idea that a select elite can develop special powers and gifts through specialized knowledge that is hidden from most mortals — or "muggles," as normal humans are called in Rowling's books.

The professor ended his article by saying that Pope Benedict XVI was correct to express concern about the books in a 2003 letter to a German writer.

As Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, then prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, he wrote to Gabriele Kuby to acknowledge receipt of her book, "Harry Potter: Gut oder Böse" ("Harry Potter: Good or Bad"), which cautioned that children could become fascinated with the occult through reading the series.

The future pope praised Kuby's attempt to "enlighten people about Harry Potter" and the possible "subtle seductions" that can distort children's thinking before they mature in the Christian faith.

He also suggested Kuby send a copy of her book to Msgr. Peter Fleetwood, then an official at the Pontifical Council for Culture.

Msgr. Fleetwood told Catholic News Service in 2005 that he received a copy of the book in 2003 and wrote Kuby a four-page letter explaining where he thought she may have misunderstood or read too much into the books.

He said he never heard back from her.

Msgr. Fleetwood said the most appropriate way to judge Harry Potter is not on the basis of theology, but according to the criteria of children's literature and whether children will read the books willingly.

We are all one humble, caring people of God

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

My friend and all of her siblings had come from near and far and gathered for their beloved father's funeral. It was a rare, but certainly appropriate, occasion for them all to be together, she had told me with real gratification in her voice.

At the reception after the funeral Mass, I mentioned that it was nice for me to finally see all these people whose stories I'd been hearing from her for years.

She raised her eyebrows but smiled affectionately as she said, "Yes, but you don't know who's who."

Surprisingly she was right.

Even though I'd observed the family throughout the service, I couldn't tell who was the crazy one or the aloof one or the selfish one — or the spiritual one or the generous one. On that day they were all the mourning one.

Somehow, in their mourning, they also all were the meek one, and the one hungering for righteousness. They even all were the peacemaker.

On that day, steeped in the death of their father, each one of them was keenly aware of the nearness of God and reminded of their need for God.

The beatitudes work that way. When we are poor in spirit, meek and merciful, we will realize our need for God. Conversely, if we recognize our need for God, we become meek, merciful, poor and thirsty for justice.

As they came together in mutual love for their father and mutual dependence on God, my friend's family — at least on that day — was a compassionate, holy family, a community fully attentive to each other's needs and supporting one another.

In this weekend's Gospel, Jesus offers us the beatitudes so that we conscientiously may make an effort to be poor in spirit, hungering for righteousness, mourning and meek, because when we are, we will become a humble, caring people centered on our fundamental need for God.

Questions:

What personal habit or attitude keeps you separated from God? Which of the beatitudes do you most need at this time in your life to remind you of your need for God? Why?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"I will leave as a remnant in your midst a people humble and lowly, who shall take refuge in the name of the Lord" (Zephaniah 3:12).

Worth a thousand words

New photo resource provides interesting peek into Vatican's past

BY CAROL GLATZ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Scholars, history buffs and the public will now be able to peek inside some of the Vatican's historical black-and-white photograph collection.

The written contents of the Vatican photo service's entire Giordani Collection have been transcribed into a searchable Microsoft Word file that can be sent, free of charge, to anyone on request by e-mailing photo@ossrom.va.

Thanks to the new resource, some half-million images, mostly black and white and taken between 1933 and 1975, will be available more easily to the public for research and sale.

Prospective buyers also can request photos they would like to purchase by e-mailing photo@ossrom.va, specifying the photo caption and corresponding number.

The variety of pictures is astounding. One can find the usual pictures of the meetings and travels of Popes Pius XI, Pius XII, John XXIII, and Paul VI; of important curial officials and visiting cardinals from all over the world; and of world leaders like Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and U.S. Presidents John F. Kennedy and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Also captured are unique historical moments, like American soldiers stopping at St. Peter's during World War II, Vatican personnel attending the 1960 Summer Olympic Games in Rome and Pope Paul VI meeting U.S. astronauts from Apollo 11, which landed the first men on the moon.

There are also more than 100 shots of Michelangelo's famous "Pieta" statue being packed in a crate and hauled out by crane for shipping to the 1964 World's Fair in New York.

Sometimes the snapshots just capture daily life in Rome and the Vatican or immortalize the ordinary: There is a picture of Pope John XXIII's shoemaker, ID snapshots of Vatican employees, and a photo of a man named "Galassi" who in 1960 was the Vatican's oldest "sampietrino" — one of the workers responsible for the upkeep of St. Peter's Basilica and St. Peter's Square.

But here and there are the odd and unusual, like a picture of someone's kidney stones, photos of ceramic cats and — perhaps because cars were still a novelty at the time — countless shots of fender benders and car accidents in and around the Vatican.

Readers can sift through the text line by line or do a word search of the 367 pages of photo captions in the electronic file.

Unfortunately, the file does not show

CNS COURTESY OF L'OSSERVATORE ROMANO

U.S. President John F. Kennedy visits with U.S. seminarians at the North American College in Rome in 1963. This is one of thousands of historical black-and-white photographs from the Vatican's Giordani Collection available for research and sale to the public through the Vatican photo service.

the images. It is an exact transcription of the photographer's archival notes which means it is written in Italian and names are sometimes misspelled.

When looking for Neil Armstrong and Pope Paul, for example, typing in "Armastrong" for the U.S. astronaut will yield a find. But, on the whole, a search for "Spellman" to look for what images the file has of the late New York Cardinal Francis J. Spellman in Rome will give the reader numerous hits.

This new electronic file, which lists the contents of the "Giordani Collection," is a modest but significant start to the Vatican photo service's long-term plans of updating and improving how it archives and preserves its collections.

The collection takes its name from Francesco Giordani, the private Rome-based photographer the Vatican commissioned starting in the 1930s, long before the Vatican set up its own photography service in 1977. The half-million glass-plate and film negatives of varying dimensions are kept the same way Giordani stored them — in thousands of cardboard boxes.

Salesian Father Giuseppe Colombara, head of the Vatican's photo service, which is part of the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano, told Catholic News Service that Giordani just reused the cardboard cartons his photographic paper came in for storing his negatives.

When Giordani closed up shop in 1978, the Vatican acquired his archive and the rights to use the photos.

Giordani kept meticulous notes and caption lines for his photographs in 37 notebooks dated 1933-1975. Each entry also includes a number indicating the box in which the negative is stored.

Father Colombara said officials decided to transcribe these notes into an electronic file to facilitate the search for the many photographs researchers, writers and historians request.

After spending months transcribing Giordani's cramped handwriting, the Salesian priest said officials decided the searchable file also should be made available to the public.

People also can do a limited search of the collection's images on the Web site www.photo.va. But, right now, only about 2,300 pictures from the collection have been uploaded to the site.

Scanning these old images onto the site is extremely labor-intensive, Father Colombara said, and the Vatican still does not have the money, personnel or proper equipment to scan and make public anytime soon all 500,000 images in the collection.

While digital photography has eased the way pictures are dated, captioned, organized and stored, he said this digital medium still poses enormous problems for storage. The large megabyte size of each photo now eats up enormous amounts of digital space, putting a strain on both the photo service's Web site and its shelves loaded with discs, he said.

With Vatican photographers snapping 1,000 to 3,000 high-definition, publication-quality pictures a day, he said, they need to start looking into "beefing up computer memory with giant hard drives."

Back in the early days of Giordani, "the pope wasn't photographed that much," he said. But today the number of papal activities has mushroomed, he said, "and every event with the pope is photographed every day."

Like St. Lucy, the patron saint of the blind, the students were to use the glasses to see the good in all people. St. Lucy, whose name means "light," lived in Syracuse and lost her life in the persecution of Christians in the early fourth century. Her veneration spread to Rome so that, by the sixth century, the whole church recognized her courage in defense of the faith.

A look at poverty in America

To be in "poverty" in the United States refers to having an annual family income that is less than a "poverty line" set by the U.S. government.

Tangibly, poverty is a condition in which a person lacks the essentials for a minimum standard of sustenance and well being. The most recent poverty line for a family of four was established in 2006 as a yearly income of $20,614.

This figure, however, really understates the average citizen's perception of what it means to be poor. When polled, a significant number of Americans considered $40,000 a year to be the absolute minimum to sustain just the basic necessities of life for a family of four in today's economy — a very minimal existence.

Misconceptions around the issue of poverty are many. In its 2006 policy paper entitled "Poverty in America: A Threat to the Common Good," Catholic Charities USA cites some common errors.

One is that poverty happens to "poor people" who are somehow different from the mainstream "in terms of behaviors, characteristics or various other factors."

Hard as it is to believe, the fact is that almost half of all Americans will experience poverty for a year or more at some point in their lives by the time they reach age 60.

Another fallacy is that most of the poor live solely off of public assistance of some kind. The truth is that almost two out of three families living in poverty include one or more workers.

While more than 37 million people in the United States live below the poverty line, the saddest statistic is that one in every six of them are children. This statistic has serious implications for the children but its effect can be felt even more broadly on our society as a whole.

More often than not, poor children lack adequate health care and are badly nourished — factors that can lead to poor brain development, lackluster performance in school and a lifetime of missed opportunities.

In "Poverty in America," Catholic Charities USA states "poverty, in effect, condemns millions of children to a life that prevents them from reaching their full-human potential." Our society can ill afford, both morally and practically, to ignore such missed opportunities for these children.

Though the issues surrounding poverty are complex, the individuals caught in poverty can be helped. Through its grants to grassroots organizations, the U.S. bishops' Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) helps local groups throughout the Diocese of Charlotte to involve the poor in helping themselves.

Tabernacle Missionary Baptist Church in Asheville, partially funded by a local CCHD grant, is tackling the problems of poor children. In their after-school program, the church helps children ages 7 to 12 who are struggling academically.

During the school year, the church program stresses literacy and math instruction as well as homework completion. A nutritious snack and a supervised, safe environment provide these children an opportunity to overcome barriers and stake a rightful claim to academic success.

Nine volunteers from the population they serve staff the after-school program, building self-esteem in both students and mentors.

And this church is only one of 22 recipients of local CCHD grants in 2007. More than $42,000 in CCHD funds is being put to use helping the poor and working poor implement programs designed to raise them above the poverty line and provide them with resources and tools to access a more hopeful future.

Poverty may be complex, but solutions don't have to be!

As one human family

A report on the CRS response to the 2004 tsunami

The day after Christmas 2004, southern Asia was devastated by an Indian Ocean tsunami that killed more than 200,000 people, displaced many millions more and erased entire villages from the map.

In those countries hardest hit by the tsunami — India, Indonesia, Sri Lanka and Thailand — emergency services were overwhelmed and the call went out for international assistance.

Catholic Relief Services (CRS), the U.S. bishops' international development and relief agency, has been present from the first days of the crisis and throughout the following three years.

Working in concert with local dioceses in the countries affected, CRS has contributed more than $150 million to the tsunami relief, recovery and redevelopment efforts. It is important to note that this $150 million has been distributed on our behalf — that is, on behalf of all members of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States.

With these funds, CRS brought emergency medicines, shelter and food to the shocked communities in the weeks after the tsunami. In addition, over the past three years, CRS has funded the construction of hundreds of schools and health clinics as well as tens of thousands of homes, and clean water and sanitation systems for hundreds of thousands of people. CRS has also funded the rebuilding and repairing of roads, bridges and piers across the region.

CRS also initiated more than 1,800 self-help micro-finance groups to offer loans to low-income individuals and families to expand jobs and access to education.

The unprecedented scope of CRS's relief and development efforts has been made possible thanks to the charitable response of U.S. Catholics.

In a statement marking the third anniversary of the tsunami, Ken Hackett, CRS president, stated the CRS Web site crashed temporarily due to the numbers of visitors eager to help CRS's tsunami disaster response efforts in the weeks after the disaster.

The Web glitch was fixed quickly and the CRS Web site began receiving more than $1 million per day in donations (compared to prior averages of about $1 million per year).

Donations also came to CRS the old fashioned way — by check. Close to half a million dollars was collected for the tsunami relief effort by churches and schools in the Diocese of Charlotte. (Funds were also raised by diocesan churches with connections to religious orders and Catholic organizations in the countries affected by the tsunami.)

The material support from the generous people of our diocese has been combined with countless prayers for the victims, a recognition that any successful long-term recovery after a disaster also calls for spiritual healing.

Christians are a very small minority in the region hit by the tsunami. While CRS services are offered to people regardless of their religious beliefs, it is a fundamental CRS principle that the local Catholic Church, no matter its size or influence in the region served, is an equal partner with CRS in addressing crises.

The visibility of the Catholic Church's charitable efforts, and its outreach to people of all faiths, serves as a witness to our belief in Christ's mandate to love all men and women.

Such efforts also witness to a theme used in CRS program materials, which has appeared in Vatican statements — that we are all part of "one human family."

This past November, the Holy See joined the international community of nations at a meeting in Geneva on humanitarian aid. Archbishop Silvano Tomasi, Vatican representative to U.N. agencies in Geneva, spoke about the rights of persons, families and communities who are victims of disasters and the need to respect these rights.

Victims, he said, "deserve our human closeness, psychological, moral and spiritual support, not as a condescending pity, but as an expression of our solidarity. We constitute together one human family."

Pope Benedict XVI, in his Jan. 1, 2008 World Day of Peace message, entitled "The Human Family, A Community of Peace," states that the peoples of the earth "are called to build relationships of solidarity and cooperation among themselves, as befits members of the one human family."

CRS continues its tsunami rebuilding efforts, its ongoing response to more recent disasters — such as last year's floods in southern Mexico and earthquake in Peru — and its broader mission of ameliorating poverty, disease and hunger.

If you are interested in learning more about CRS, visit www.crs.org. For more details about the CRS tsunami recovery efforts in southern Asia, visit <http://tsunamiresponse.crs.org>.

Abortion: America's holocaust

Catholics must act to end torture, murder of unborn babies

In 1933, many of the people living in Dachau knew that something evil had started to happen in a camp just outside their German town. But most were too afraid to ask questions.

They were even afraid to question their consciences, because their consciences might have compelled them to act. So instead, nearly everyone looked the other way and ignored the first permanent Nazi concentration camp in Germany.

By the end of World War II, more than 3,500 Jewish and political prisoners had become victims there of brutal medical experiments. And thousands more were executed or died of starvation.

Considering the graver risks associated with questioning such a ruthless regime, it's not hard to understand how fear paralyzed many Germans from engaging in nonviolent actions of resistance.

But in 2008 America, grave risks rarely befall those working to end a different holocaust. So instead of fearing torture and death, the vast majority of Catholic Americans simply allow apathy to prevent their involvement in serious efforts to end the holocaust of abortion.

This, however, is not at all understandable.

Considering Joan Andrews Bell — the famous pro-life activist — spent years in jail for participating in nonviolent rescues at abortion mills, efforts like praying in front of these killing centers, sidewalk counseling and writing letters to legislators are really quite easy.

Yet, like most of the people living around the Dachau concentration camp, millions of U.S. Catholics choose to look the other way while unborn babies are tortured and murdered by abortion in their very own cities.

Every day believers in the God of life pass by these contemporary extermination camps, euphemistically called women's health clinics, without giving even a notice of concern.

Real concern leads to action. But sadly, large scale, ongoing Catholic action on behalf of the unborn is seriously lacking.

It was good that 100,000 people marched in the nation's capitol on Jan. 22 to protest against legal abortion. I have participated in more than 15 of these marches, but our participation in an annual demonstration in Washington or a state capitol is simply not enough.

Until the consciences of millions of American Catholics are aroused to the point of passionate action, 4,000 unborn babies will continue to be brutally murdered through legal abortion every day, and vulnerable women will be harmed — physically, emotionally and spiritually.

Surely the Creator is calling all of us to do everything possible to end this contempt for our smallest brothers and sisters. Embryonic stem-cell research and cloning have become added threats to the unborn.

Deeply committed private and liturgical prayer is essential for ending all assaults on unborn human life. Regular respect-life homilies and a petition for the unborn in the prayer of the faithful at Mass should be a given.

Ongoing lobbying of our state and national political leaders is another essential. To learn about statewide legislation affecting the unborn, get on your state Catholic conference's mailing list.

And to make a difference on the national level, log on to the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Web site at www.usccb.org and click "life issues."

Other good organizations to contact are Priests for Life, Helpers of God's Precious Infants and Feminists for Life.

And finally, imagine if every day, at every abortion center nationwide, large numbers of Catholics were praying, peacefully demonstrating and conducting sidewalk counseling. What a powerful witness that would be!

More praying, challenging preaching, committed teaching, intensive lobbying and courageous witnessing are urgently needed.

Why, asked Father Craig, did the uncle find the lens but the teenage boys didn't? "We didn't find it because we were looking for a lost contact," said the priest, "but my uncle was looking for a hundred dollars."

I'm not sure if the Gospel reading that day was the lost sheep or the lost drachma, but Father Craig made his point: We'll truly search and we'll not stop searching for what we really want to find, for what truly holds value for us.

I see that story as a metaphor for the Lenten journey that lies ahead. I can approach it casually, with the self-help kind of resolution that might net me a five-pound weight loss.

I can show up at a few extra Masses or the weekly Stations of the Cross.

But am I doing these things because I'm on a quest for the central value of my life?

What we are searching for motivates how hard we search, how long we stay on our hands and knees until we find it.

The question to ask before Ash Wednesday: What am I looking for, and how will I try to find it?

Pope says in praying for unity Christians identify cost of divisions

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In praying for Christian unity, those who follow Jesus recognize their divisions prevent others from believing in the Gospel message of peace, love and salvation, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"In common prayer, Christian communities place themselves together before the Lord and, becoming aware of the contradictions arising from their divisions, they demonstrate their desire to obey his will, relying on his almighty assistance," the pope said Jan. 23 at his weekly general audience.

As is customary during the Jan. 18-25 Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, the pope dedicated his entire audience talk to ecumenism.

The pope said that common prayer is not a strategy for publicizing the need for Christian unity, "but is an expression of the faith that unites all the disciples of Christ," who had prayed that his followers would be one.

Pope Benedict ended his talk by praying, "May the Virgin Mary, mother of the church, obtain for all the children of her divine Son the possibility of living in peace and mutual love so as to give a convincing witness of reconciliation to the world and make the face of God, the face of Christ, accessible."

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

This week, Christians throughout the world celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, initiated by Father Paul Wattson, founder of the Society of the Atonement.

The theme chosen for this year is St. Paul's exhortation to the Thessalonians to "pray always" (1 Thess 5:17). According to the Second Vatican Council, prayer and holiness of life are "the soul of the whole ecumenical movement" ("Unitatis Redintegratio," 8).

When Christians from various communities come together to pray in common, they acknowledge that unity cannot be achieved by human strength alone. Only by relying on God's grace can they live according to Jesus's prayer that "they may all be one" (Jn 17:20-21).

I therefore invite all Christians to render fitting thanks to Almighty God for the progress achieved thus far along the path of ecumenism, and to persevere as they strive toward unity so that "the world may believe" (Jn 17:21) that Jesus is the only Son sent by the Father.

The question to ask before Ash Wednesday

Catholics must discern what they seek, how to find it

Father Craig was the pastor at my parish a few years ago, but I still remember him well for the focused little sermons he gave.

His homilies were among the shortest and best I've ever heard. He didn't waste time in repetition or pious verbiage. He used simple, declarative sentences that got right to the point.

And the point was always a good and true one — something I'd often take home and chew on during the week. How many homilies can you honestly say that about?

There's one homily Father Craig gave that I still remember and think about now and then. As Lent approaches, it nags at me with the fundamental question: What am I looking for?

Father Craig's sermons would always begin with a personal vignette, usually humorous, sometimes more sobering. Once he told us that his grandfather was hanging on during a terminal illness, waiting for Father Craig, on loan to us from a Midwestern diocese, to come home.

But the homily I remember best began with Father Craig telling us about the day he and his cousin were out playing basketball. They were teenagers then, and in the course of their game one of the cousin's contact lenses was knocked out of his eye.

Remember the old days of "hard" contact lenses? If you're old enough to remember, you know they were not disposable.

You bought a pair in the hopes it would serve you for a year or two, just like a pair of glasses, because a replacement would set you back quite a few bucks. Some people even took out contact lens insurance.

I remember searching the bathroom vinyl for my own lens. Once I even retrieved one from the bathroom drain with a straw covered in nylon and a vacuum hose. Soccer games were even halted while both teams searched for one kid's fallen lens.

So when the cousin's contact fell out, Father Craig's basketball stopped bouncing and both boys were on the ground, carefully maneuvering their hands and knees as they searched for the tiny lens. At last they gave up and went in the house, where they got something to drink and told Father Craig's uncle what happened.

"My uncle immediately went outside and started to look for that lens," said Father Craig, "and he kept looking and looking." And he didn't stop looking until, remarkably, he found the lens.

A Palestinian woman sits next to her sick daughter at al-Nasser hospital for children in Gaza Jan. 21. Large parts of the Gaza Strip plunged into darkness when its main power plant shut down after Israel blocked fuel supplies and closed the border to the Hamas-run territory.

Lack of fuel in Gaza forces teachers to adjust to help hungry pupils

BY JUDITH SUDILOVSKY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

JERUSALEM — Shatha Halu, a first-grader at Holy Family School in Gaza City, put on his backpack and climbed down the 10 flights of stairs in his building on the way to school.

At the bottom of the stairs he turned to his mother, who had made the long trek down with him and, looking up the steps, asked her how he would be able to climb all the way back up after school with his heavy bag.

"It is a very bad situation," said Msgr. Manuel Musallam, pastor of Holy Family Church, who recounted the story in a telephone interview with Catholic News Service Jan. 21. "This lack of electricity is stopping civilization, stopping life in Gaza."

Israel closed the border to the Gaza Strip and temporarily banned imports, including the fuel necessary to run Gaza's power plant, following a sharp increase in the number of rockets Palestinian militants fired into Israeli border towns. Gaza is controlled by the militant Islamic group Hamas.

Following an international outcry, on Jan. 22 Israel allowed enough fuel for electricity for two days to be pumped into the Gaza Strip. It also delivered cooking gas, medicine and food.

Israel promised enough total fuel delivery over three days to allow the Gazan power plant to run for a week, but said a ban on gasoline would continue.

On Jan. 23, tens of thousands of Palestinians flooded into Egypt to buy goods after militants blew up most of a seven-mile border wall at the Rafah border crossing.

Msgr. Musallam said that while Holy Family School has a generator for its electrical needs, it would soon run out of the gasoline needed to run it. The school and the church can function without electricity, he said, but the hospitals were in dire need of fuel to run their generators.

He said he donated his last fuel to Shifa Hospital, which was requesting donations so it could treat patients. At least five people died in Gaza hospitals due to the lack of electricity.

"We can manage with not using our computers, but in the hospitals the sick people need the electricity to survive," said Msgr. Musallam.

He said many people had been unable to bathe for nearly a week, since electricity is needed to pump the water. Some teachers asked to bathe at the convent, since the church has its own generator. Parents asked that the school be closed because they were embarrassed to send their unbathed children to school. However, the priest said he would keep the school open because "we must challenge the situation."

He added that when the children are together at school they can be distracted from the difficult situation for a few hours.

Israel provides about 60 percent of Gaza's electricity, and another 5 percent is provided by Egypt. The power outage mainly affected Gaza City.

Sahar Shaat, a project officer at the U.S. bishops' Catholic Relief Services Gaza office, said she had been studying for her master's exams by candlelight.

"We are in winter and it is very cold, and we are without heaters," she said.

She said there was still gas for cooking, and meat and chicken were available, but people were worried about food running out. Food cannot be kept in refrigerators because it will spoil without electricity, she noted.

"There is a shortage of everything. If we find something it costs double" the normal price, she said, noting that employees of nongovernmental and humanitarian organizations felt helpless in the face of the growing shortages.

CHARLOTTE — Blessed are the merciful, for they will be shown mercy.

"We are called to live this beatitude through the corporal and spiritual works of mercy," said Bishop Peter J. Jugis in a February letter to Catholics announcing the 2008 Diocesan Support Appeal.

"There are many Catholics here in our diocese living these works of mercy every day. Their ministries are funded in part through the Diocesan Support Appeal," he said.

"Your contribution to the 2008 DSA is a way that you can put the works of mercy into action in a very real way," said the bishop.

U.S. soccer star Clint Dempsey says faith helped him during tragedies

LONDON (CNS) — Clint Dempsey, U.S. Soccer's Male Athlete of 2007, told a London newspaper he is a devout Catholic who dedicates every goal he scores to a sister who died in her mid-teens.

Dempsey, 24, a striker for the Fulham Football Club in London, said his faith has sustained him through a series of tragedies.

The worst of these, he told The Sun, a London-based daily newspaper, was the sudden death of his sister, Jennifer, at the age of just 16.

Jennifer was on her way to becoming a seeded tennis player when she died of a brain aneurysm.

"When we were young, Jennifer would draw a picture of her being a tennis player and sign an autograph," he said Jan. 19.

"I would draw a picture of me being a professional soccer player and sign an autograph," he said. "These were our dreams."

He continued: "The strange thing was that even when we were younger she said to me, 'If I ever die, I will help you get the ball in the net.' And that's why I look up to the sky now whenever I score."

"I now hope she is proud of me," he added.

The former New England Revolution star also recounted how he lost a close friend in a car accident and how he was saddened by the February 2006 shooting of Houston rapper Big Hawk, with whom he had hoped to record a track before the World Cup finals in Germany in June the same year.

"I'll never let this or other things get me down," he added. "I have family, my friends and my faith. Whatever happens, it's meant to be."

One of five children, Dempsey, who has Irish ancestry, grew up in his grandmother's trailer in the East Texas town of Nacogdoches.

Between 2004 and 2007 he scored 25 goals in 71 appearances for the New England Revolution before moving to England in a record $4 million transfer deal, making his debut for Fulham Jan. 20, 2007.

He is now the leading goal scorer at the Premier League club, which also employs fellow U.S. soccer stars Brian McBride, Carlos Bocanegra and Kasey Keller.

Dempsey played his first match for the U.S. national team against Jamaica in 2004. He has since scored nine times in 34 appearances.

Bolivian church aids families affected by floods, landslides

LA PAZ, Bolivia (CNS) — Bolivia's Catholic Church is delivering humanitarian aid to some of the more than 30,000 families affected by flooding and landslides in heavy rains that have lashed the country since late December.

The heavy rains have been attributed to La Nina, a cold current that often follows the warm El Nino current in the Pacific Ocean off the coast of South America.

"Bolivia is in a difficult situation because of La Nina," said Hugo Perez, national director of the emergency department of Caritas, the church's humanitarian aid and development organization.

Perez said nearly 40 people have been reported killed in the flooding, and more than 30,000 families lost their homes or suffered serious damage. Crop and livestock losses are still unknown, although some news reports have put the figure at about $30 million.

Although January is part of Bolivia's rainy season, the entire country has been hit by downpours that are heavier than normal. Hardest hit is the central department of Cochabamba, where about 20,000 families have been affected, communities have been cut off by rising streams and rivers, and roads have been destroyed.

"Many people are in shelters and it is still raining heavily," Perez told Catholic News Service. "It keeps raining, and we keep getting word of new communities that have been cut off."

Weather forecasts indicate that heavy rains will continue in February and March, he said.

Caritas is providing immediate humanitarian aid through its network of diocesan offices and parish teams, coordinating with government civil defense officials. Once the floodwaters recede, however, the work of reconstruction must begin.

FROM THE VATICAN

Vatican courts must uphold universal standards of justice, pope says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — While marriage tribunals and other church courts must take into account the concrete situation of the individuals who come before them, Vatican appeals courts must uphold universal standards of justice, Pope Benedict XVI said.

The pope met Jan. 26 with members of the Tribunal of the Roman Rota, a Vatican court that deals mainly with appeals in marriage annulment cases.

The court exists to service justice, he said.

"Because canonical processes regard the juridical aspects of the goods of salvation or other temporal goods that serve the mission of the church," he said, the church needs to count on uniformity "in the essential criteria for justice" and reasonable explanations for the judgments given.

Local tribunals and the Vatican appeals courts are not in opposition to one another, the pope said. The local tribunals play an indispensable role in making justice accessible to Catholics and in "investigating and resolving cases in their concreteness, which is sometimes tied to the culture and mentality" of the local population.

However, he said, "all the sentences must always be founded on common principles and norms of justice."

What is at stake, the pope said, is unity in the universal church.

"In the church, precisely because of its universality and because of the diversity of juridical cultures in which it is called to work, there always is the risk of forming ... a 'local jurisprudence' that is increasingly distant from the common interpretation of the positive laws and even the doctrine of the church on matrimony," Pope Benedict said.

The pope ended his speech by encouraging members of the Roman Rota to pray for the court each day.

Church law frees people to follow Christ, pope tells canonists

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Far from being a list of restrictions, church law frees people to follow Christ, Pope Benedict XVI told participants in a congress on canon law.

The church recognizes that the nature and function of its laws are to pursue its aim of achieving the salvation of people's souls, he said.

Therefore, the pope said, it is important "that such laws be loved and observed by all the faithful. Church law is, first of all, 'lex libertatis' law that makes us free to follow Jesus."

The pope made his remarks during a Jan. 25 audience with some 700 participants in an international congress on canon law. The congress, organized by the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts, marked the 25th anniversary of the promulgation of the new Code of Canon Law in 1983.

The pope said that if canon law is to be able to fulfill "this precious service" of salvation, it must be "linked to the theological foundations that give it reasonableness and are the essential claim of ecclesial legitimacy."

But church law must also be flexible and "adhere to the changeable circumstances of the historical experiences of the people of God," he said.

In order for canon law to remain in harmony with the church's other laws, outdated norms must be abrogated, articles in need of correction must be modified, unclear norms must be reinterpreted in the light of the church's living magisterium, and any gaps in the law must be filled, the pope said.

Speaking to journalists Jan. 22, Archbishop Francesco Coccopalmerio, president of the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts, said the congress would "identify certain points" in the Code of Canon Law in need of revision or new norms.

Life will lead a pro-life Lenten mission at Our Lady of Grace Church, 2205 West Market St., Feb. 9-13, and will speak at weekend Masses: 5 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 9; 7 a.m., 8:30 a.m., 10 a.m., 11:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 10.

Flight of peace

Sideline behavior: Complaints force Clericus Cup fans to tone it down

ROME (CNS) — Complaints of excessive noise levels by sleepy residents have forced fans of a priestly soccer series to try to tone it down during weekend matches.

Fans are now banned from using megaphones, drums, tambourines and boomboxes to cheer on their favorite teams, said organizers of the Clericus Cup tournament.

Now in its second season, the popular Clericus Cup kicked off at the end of 2007 with 16 teams of seminarians and priests studying in Rome vying for the 2008 championship title.

The games are played on two hilltop fields overlooking St. Peter's Basilica, at 9 and 10:30 a.m. Saturdays and 2:30 and 3:45 p.m. Sundays — a time many Romans lie down for an afternoon siesta after a heavy meal.

In fact, residents in the vicinity of the soccer fields had complained that any ruckus at those hours was a disturbance of the peace, said a Jan. 22 press release from tournament organizers.

The code of silence was to go into effect Jan. 26. However, the tourney's 2007 champions, the Neocatechumenal Way's Redemptoris Mater, said team members would continue to sing their college anthem, "Alma Redemptoris Mater," before each game.

Last year's champions, nicknamed "Red Mat," played the Pontifical North American College Jan. 26. The North American team, Red Mat and Rome's Sedes Sapientiae ecclesial college were tied for the lead in their division with six points each.

In-service teaches catechists leadership skills

HICKORY — Parish catechetical leaders from around the Diocese of Charlotte recently learned about being successful leaders.

Forty-three parish catechetical leaders attended a leadership skills presentation by Dr. Kathy Kleinlein, part of an in-service training day held at the Catholic Conference Center in Hickory Jan. 24.

"A good heart and a strong faith are two basic requirements for catechetical leaders," read the program description. "But these aren't enough to run a truly successful parish program."

Dealing with people, budgets and developing catechists are some of the challenging opportunities catechetical leaders must handle effectively.

"Leadership skills are important in the Catholic Church because a leader is a person we choose to follow to a place we would not go by ourselves, because that place is either too risky, too unfamiliar, too scary, too uninspiring, too alienating or too confusing," said Dr. Cris Villapando, director of faith formation programs for the diocese.

Kleinlein, director of catechetical ministry for the Diocese of Venice, Fla., and former Fortune 500 training and development executive, identified 10 items necessary for a leader's effectiveness.

They included qualifications, management style, utilizing technology and a variety of skills, including planning, organizing, budgeting, motivation and team building.

"Leadership skills are necessary for parish catechetical leaders, since one of the chief aims of catechesis — as quoted in the General Directory for Catechesis No. 62 — is conversion and the 'new evangelization,'" said Theresa Prymuszewski, western regional coordinator of faith formation.

"The parish catechetical leaders need to provide the catechists they serve with opportunities for conversion ... to put people not only in touch but also in communion and intimacy with Jesus Christ," said Prymuszewski.

Leadership skills facilitate that ongoing conversion, she said, for the leaders themselves, who then witness conversion to their catechists and others in the parishes they serve.

"The in-service provided an impetus for catechetical leaders to further their own ongoing professional, spiritual and personal development," said Prymuszewski.

Many participants said they were motivated to become better leaders.

"It was very inspiring," said Prymuszewski.

BELMONT ABBEY'S LOURDES GROTTO: AN INSPIRING PLACE TO HONOR THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF OUR LADY'S APPEARANCES AT LOURDES.

For over a century, the Abbey's Lourdes Grotto has been a special place of prayer and pilgrimage for Catholics in the Carolinas and beyond. It was blessed and dedicated on Ascension Thursday, May 7, 1891 by Abbot-Bishop Leo Haid to commemorate the remarkable healing of a young Abbey priest who was dying of typhoid fever, a healing considered to be due to the intercession of Our Lady.

This is a particularly blessed time to visit the Grotto, because this year the Holy Father is granting a plenary indulgence for those who honor the 150th Anniversary of Our Lady's appearances in Lourdes by making a pilgrimage to worthy sites dedicated to Our Lady of Lourdes such as this.

(You may receive the indulgence from February 2 through February 11 by fulfilling the normal requirements set by the Church, including going to confession within a reasonably short period of time, receiving the Eucharist and praying for the intentions of the pope, all in a spirit of total detachment from the attraction of sin.)

The Grotto is open year-round to allow ready use of its prayerful setting, its commemoration of God's benevolence, its special environment for honoring the Mother of God, and its particular dedication to supplication for priestly and religious vocations.

May God richly shower you with blessings during this very special time.

FROM THE COVER

Bishop Jugis dedicates cathedral's Family Life Center

DEDICATION, from page 1

As a boy, Father Neilson had served as an altar server during the cathedral's dedication in 1939 and wanted to be a part of the Family Life Center's dedication.

Hundreds of parishioners watched as he joined the bishops, abbot, priests and deacon in a ribbon cutting ceremony before heading inside the new facility for a reception.

"It was a joy to see the facility's great hall filled with people, young and old, talking and laughing," said Patti Farmer, parish building and grounds committee chairwoman.

"It was a joy to finally see it being used for what it was built for. That was the payoff for me," she said.

The center provides much-needed space for meetings, receptions, workshops and parish ministries, things the 1930s-era cathedral could not accommodate.

"It's wonderful to now have a place for gatherings, to offer workshops and ministries," said Farmer. "It's been a long time coming."

Initial plans for the 14,500-square-foot facility began in 1991, and the capital building campaign kicked off in 2005. The groundbreaking was June 3, 2006.

Construction of the $3.4 million facility met with some setbacks, delaying the original dedication date, but the Family Life Center was eventually completed within less than 1 percent of its original budget.

"This is a huge success by any standard," said Jim Whitaker, parish council chairman.

Whitaker, a licensed architect and construction executive, utilized his professional experience in working with the architect, contractors and consultants.

"Without reservation, I am proud to have been part of this extraordinary effort of people committed to a common good," he said.

Assisting with the project was a large committee of parishioners with varying expertise, organized by Farmer.

"Mrs. Farmer's tireless energy provided the enthusiasm that kept an all-volunteer group on track and moving forward," said Whitaker. "The hundreds of volunteer hours spent were only exceeded by the seemingly thousands of tasks accomplished."

"The Christian spirit and camaraderie were infectious," he said.

The design of the two-and-a-half-story facility reflects the existing architecture of the cathedral, rectory and school.

"The cathedral was dedicated in 1939 and is a long-time Dilworth landmark," said Whitaker. "The Family

The new Family Life Center, a 14,500-square-foot facility at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte, was dedicated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis Jan. 26.

Life Center was designed to fit in with the campus architecture, not compete with the cathedral."

The center features a great hall capable of seating 200 people for receptions or banquets, a catering kitchen, meeting rooms, a counseling room, a bride's room, a youth room and a nursery.

The choir room is acoustically designed to enhance the music. The library features a selection of leather-bound books donated by Father Gary.

"The entire building was fitted with new fixtures, furnishings and equipment planned, procured and installed by the parish building and grounds committee," said Whitaker.

Specialty interior paint details match those inside the cathedral, and light fixtures were selected to complement existing features in the cathedral, he said.

"Even the nursery has custom wall paint, making an inviting, secure and festive space," said Whitaker.

Bishop Jugis noted the significance of the new Family Life Center in his homily, indicating the ministries conducted in the new building are to be an extension of the most important building on campus — the cathedral.

"The Family Life Center will help the parish become a closer community while allowing us to grow," said Farmer.

"The parishioners were looking for a way to get together and do great things together — that's the purpose of the Family Life Center," said Father Gary.

"It will help revitalize the parish and allow us to do things we could not do in the past," he said.

"The parish will be well served by the building for generations to come," said Whitaker.

Operation Rice Bowl (ORB) is the official Lenten Program of Catholic Relief Services. For 33 years, ORB has called participants to pray with their families and faith communities, fast in solidarity with those who hunger, learn about our global CRS community and the challenges of poverty overseas, and give sacrificial contributions to those in need.

The theme of this year's ORB, which begins on Ash Wednesday, February 6, is "One Light, One Journey, One Human Family."

*****

Parishes and schools participating in ORB will distribute ORB items (or will post notices stating where such items can be picked up) prior to or on Ash Wednesday. Catholic entities still wishing to order 2008 ORB Lenten materials may do so by calling 1-800-222-0025, however, materials will arrive after February 6. # Bush praised for stand on cloning, stem-cell research does not involve destroying human embryos.

Bush commented on both in addressing "matters of science and life" in his seventh and final State of the Union address Jan. 28.

"We certainly welcome the president's emphasis on increased funding for ethical stem-cell research, and we agree that passage of a ban on human cloning is long overdue," Richard Doerflinger, associate director of the U.S. bishops' Office of Pro-Life Activities, told Catholic News Service Jan. 29.

An official with the National Right to Life Committee in a Jan. 28 statement also praised Bush's stand on cloning and his "continued commitment" to funding research that does not destroy life.

On the issue of stem-cell research, Bush said, "We must trust in the innovative spirit of medical researchers and empower them to discover new treatments while respecting moral boundaries."

He referred to the "landmark achievement" announced late last year of scientists discovering a technique that successfully turns adult skin cells into the equivalent of human embryonic stem cells without using an actual embryo.

"This breakthrough has the potential to move us beyond the divisive debates of the past by extending the frontiers of medicine without the destruction of human life. So we are expanding funding for this type of ethical medical research," Bush said.

"And as we explore promising avenues of research, we must also ensure that all life is treated with the dignity

"President Bush's unwavering policy has been vindicated ...."

— Darla St. Martin

it deserves. So I call on the Congress to pass legislation that bans unethical practices such as the buying, selling, patenting or cloning of human life," he said.

Doerflinger said bipartisan legislation to ban cloning for any purpose is pending in both the House and Senate.

In the House the measure is co-sponsored by Reps. Dave Weldon, R-Fla., and Bart Stupak, D-Mich., and in the Senate by Sens. Mary Landrieu, D-La., and Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

Doerflinger said the pro-life office supports the bills.

"We've been having meetings, beginning with House offices, urging more members to co-sponsor" the measures, he said, "and will continue to work" on getting support for them.

"In tonight's State of the Union address, President Bush emphasized the importance of his policy which supports stem-cell research to find treatments and cures for disease, so long as such research does not require harming or killing humans," said Darla St. Martin, co-executive director of National Right to Life.

"President Bush's unwavering policy has been vindicated as researchers have discovered new, ethical sources for stem cells that show great promise," she said.

St. Martin added that pro-life lawmakers and the Bush administration have stopped those in Congress who favor legislation that "would pave the way for cloned human embryo farms."

Tickets to papal Mass in N.Y. available on diocesan Web site

April 18-20.

While in Washington, the pope will celebrate Mass at Nationals Park, which will seat up to 45,000 people for the event. Yankee Stadium holds 65,000 people.

Approximately 100 tickets to the papal Mass in New York will be available to Catholics and other residents of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Bishop Peter J. Jugis of Charlotte acknowledged with gratitude the receipt of the tickets from the Archdiocese of New York, which is hosting a portion of Pope Benedict's first visit to the United States.

Catholics from three archdioceses that share with the Archdiocese of New York the distinction of marking their 200th anniversaries this year will get special treatment at the Yankee Stadium Mass.

The archdioceses of Boston, Philadelphia and Louisville, Ky., will be honored at the Mass, along with the nation's first diocese, the Archdiocese of Baltimore.

The Diocese of Charlotte will distribute its tickets via a random drawing of ticket applications submitted through the diocesan Web site.

For security reasons, the tickets are non-transferable. Each applicant must provide his or her address and date of birth and will be required to show a photo ID to gain admission to the papal Mass.

For those reasons, only those persons who can commit to making the trip to New York in April should apply. Applicants will be allowed to request one or two tickets.

Applications must be made by midnight on Tuesday, Feb. 5. Persons chosen to receive tickets will be notified by e-mail and must confirm they will be able to utilize the tickets by midnight on Sunday, Feb. 10.

Applications unconfirmed by that deadline will be distributed to other applicants.

Few details are available about ticket distribution for Pope Benedict's only event open to the public in Washington, the Mass at Nationals Park.

"The Archdiocese of Washington has received requests for thousands of tickets to the planned Mass at the Nationals stadium from hundreds of youth groups, parishes and individuals around the United States," said the archdiocesan Web site.

"In the past, the custom for major events has been to distribute tickets primarily through our parishes, dioceses and organizations with whom we collaborate in the pastoral care of the local church," it added.

The new home of the Washington Nationals baseball team is designed to hold 41,222 people but organizers found that, by locating the altar in center field rather than at second base as originally planned, an additional 4,000 people could be accommodated.

Ways to give to the Diocesan Support Appeal

Pledge: Make a pledge and pay it in equal payments over a six-month period.

Electronic Fund Transfer (EFT): Have your monthly pledge payments taken directly out of your checking or savings account. No hassle of writing a monthly check or mailings.

Fill out the withdrawal authorization on your pledge card and include a voided check. EFTs will begin on the 15th of each month once we receive your pledge card and authorization materials.

Credit Card Payments: Possibly the easiest method and may benefit from rewards on your card, such as airline miles or cash back; and you can enjoy the ease of no paperwork.

Fill out the credit card authorization on your pledge card. Be sure to include the type of card (Visa or Master Card) and expiration date.

Credit card payments will be taken on the 15th of the month once we receive your pledge card and authorization.

Online Giving: Go online with any major credit card at the diocesan Web site, www.charlottediocese.org/giving.html. No hassle, paperwork or mailings involved.

Stock Donation: Make a donation of publicly traded securities and receive the tax benefits for giving appreciated stock.

A stock donation form and instructions can be downloaded from the diocesan Web site, www.charlottediocese.org/giving.html, or call Barbara Gaddy at (704) 370-3302.

DSA helps fund ministries, programs in diocese funds for more than 30 diocesan ministries offering more than 50 programs, including Catholic Social Services, housing, vocations, and educational and multicultural ministries.

"We are all called by Christ to live the beatitudes and put our faith into action," said Jim Kelley, director of the diocesan development office in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"Some of us are called to serve directly as counselors, priests and permanent deacons, catechists, youth ministers and lay ministers. One way we can all act out works of mercy is through a contribution to the DSA," he said.

Catholic Social Services programs funded by the DSA provide outreach to the poor, homeless and those in need of life's basic necessities. They provide programs for engaged couples and senior citizens, as well as counseling, adoption, pregnancy support and Hispanic services in regional offices.

DSA contributions help provide training for catechists and youth and lay ministers entrusted with the teaching mission of the church. The DSA also helps fund the formation of seminarians for the diocese.

"Chances are good that you or someone you know will be helped by one or more of the DSA-funded ministries," said Kelley.

Making "dollars and sense" of the DSA

Each of the 92 parishes and missions in the diocese is assigned a target — "their share of the overall goal of $4,440,000," said Bill Weldon, chief financial officer for the Diocese of Charlotte.

"This is accomplished by using a formula established by a task force of lay people, pastors and finance council representatives," he said.

Church offertory from the last fiscal year is the starting point, said Weldon. Then, 25 percent of a church's subsidy to a Catholic school is subtracted, if applicable. The resulting amount is the basis for a mathematical computation that determines a church's pro-rata share of the DSA goal.

"If, through parishioner contributions, a church goes over its target, the excess is rebated to the church," said Weldon. "If a church falls short of its target, the church is expected to make up the difference from its own budget."

Planning for this year's DSA began last fall as budgeting for the 2008-2009 fiscal year began. Establishing the current goal of $4,440,000 involved account-by-account budgets for each program and ministry that receives DSA funding, said Weldon.

"Two components — program changes and cost increases — are

"We are all called by Christ to live the beatitudes and put our faith into action."

— Jim Kelley

examined when establishing the DSA budget," he said. "We work very hard to limit cost increases while expanding program services."

The $4,440,000 goal represents an increase of 4.5 percent over last year's goal. The amount budgeted for each ministry is published on page 8 in this issue of The Catholic News & Herald.

"We are committed to the highest standards of fiscal responsibility and accountability," said Weldon.

"There are procedures in place to direct the disbursement of funds in accordance with donor intent and to ensure that all financial activity is accounted for properly. Financial oversight is provided by annual financial audits and the diocesan finance council," he said.

A complete financial report of the previous year is published as a supplement to The Catholic News & Herald in the fall of each year. The report includes a breakdown of actual DSA funding by ministry.

Diocesan financial reports for the past four years are available on the diocesan Web site at www.charlottediocese.org/annualfinancialreport.html.

Putting works into action

During the past week, all registered households in the Diocese of Charlotte received pledge cards and letters from Bishop Jugis asking for their support of the DSA.

There are several ways to give to the DSA, including credit card gifts, electronic funds transfer and online giving through the diocesan Web site.

A pledge may be paid over a 6-month period, beginning the month after the pledge card is received.

"Jesus gave us the beatitudes as a map of life, a series of directives. They show us the values that Christ cares about," said Bishop Jugis in his DSA video presentation.

"We are all blessed by God in some unique way. In return, God asks that we share our blessings with others in direct proportion to the blessings He has bestowed upon us," said the bishop.

"Your contribution to the Diocesan Support Appeal is one concrete way to share your blessings and live the beatitudes," said Kelley.

Barbara Gaddy is associate director of the diocesan development office.

Editor of what was Russia's only Catholic paper discusses closure

BY JONATHAN LUXMOORE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WARSAW, Poland — The editor of what was once Russia's only Catholic weekly said he has accepted the decision to shut down the newspaper, but expressed disappointment over its sudden closure.

Viktor Kroul, editor of Svet Evangelia (Light of the Gospel), said Archbishop Paolo Pezzi of the Moscow-based Archdiocese of the Mother of God had not notified him personally why the newspaper was shut down.

"This isn't an act of suppression — it's a difference of understanding," said Kroul, referring to the decision to close the paper.

"The problem is that our new archbishop has a completely different plan for the Catholic media in Russia and hasn't explained it to readers of Svet Evangelia. I hope the ecclesial authorities will at some stage offer an explanation."

He said he believed it would take months to set up an alternative Catholic media network in Russia.

"For 13 years, Svet Evangelia has been a tool for the church's revival and rebirth in Russia," he said.

"It was always my dream that the paper would remain alive, even if I was no longer editor. Yet the paper is now closed, and I've been thanked and dismissed. It would be difficult for me to cooperate with any new church media," he said.

The Catholic weekly, Russia's first since the 1917 Russian Revolution, was solvent financially and provided a vital information source for local priests around the country, Kroul told Catholic News Service Jan. 9, after the newspaper closed Christmas Day with its 650th issue.

He added that the paper's staff had been surprised by its sudden liquidation and hoped to set up an unofficial, online New Svet Evangelia.

Father Igor Kovalevsky, secretary-general of the Russian bishops' conference, said, "It isn't a question of closing the newspaper, but of reshaping it to suit a new information policy which reflects current needs."

He told CNS Jan. 9 that "all necessary information" about the Catholic Church could be obtained from Russia's Interfax and Blagovest news agencies.

"Besides cooperating with these Russian-language news agencies, which continually explain the Catholic Church's standpoint, the bishops' conference also plans to provide more information via its Web site," Father Kovalevsky said.

Russia's Gazeta daily reported the closure had been ordered under pressure from Orthodox leaders, but Father Kovalevsky said the move had been decided solely by the archdiocese.

"To claim it was shut down unnecessarily is a distortion — none of our bishops has made any such suggestion," Father Kovalevsky said.

"The (Orthodox) Moscow Patriarchate has said it didn't regard Svet Evangelia as a source of Catholic proselytism, and nothing has happened to impede an improvement in Catholic-Orthodox relations."

Psalm 51:3-6, 12-13, 17
- 2) Romans 5:12-19
Gospel: Matthew 4:1-11

Jesus strengthens us by his example

BY JEFF HENSLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Lent begins again. Once more we enter into our contemplation of Jesus' long road to Jerusalem and the cross.

Once more his example of setting off firmly in obedience is set before us.

In this weekend's readings we have Jesus' temptation in the desert and his refusal to take advantage of his position as the Son of God.

He uses Scripture to answer each temptation of the devil, and in this way he, even Jesus, relies on the power of God outside himself, the certainty of the revealed word to turn away evil.

So often we think in terms of sacrifice to turn us toward repentance and a renewed appreciation of the remarkable gift God has given us in Jesus, and we should. Jesus made the way clear for us to repent, be forgiven, and be redeemed by his sacrifice.

But he also offered avoidance of sin as an example we can benefit from.

One of the guys on the cleaning crew at the Catholic Center once lived in a neighborhood where warring gangs fought for turf and dominance. This young man was a strong Christian, a Baptist, and he used his faith to become a peacemaker, encouraging gang members to be at peace with their enemies.

His was an act of courage modeled on the courage of his Savior, a way to help others avoid sin and its consequences.

Once, at a meeting of Texas Catholic journalists, a young man indicated to a group of us that he was planning to go out with one of the waitresses after hours rather than returning to his own wife and children. A friend and I encouraged him to hold firm to his marriage commitment.

"A real man lives by his commitments," we told him.

In the end, at least that night, he did the manly thing, perhaps not even knowing that the ultimate real man we had in mind was Jesus. But he knew from speaking to us that all in our group were believers.

The lesson of where to draw strength could not have been lost on him.

And so it is: Jesus strengthens us by his example and makes a way for our return when we stumble. How grateful we are that he faced the long road, endured the suffering, paid the cost, lived out his commitment — for us.

Questions:

How can you use your Lenten practices to build up your determination to do good and avoid evil? How might you encourage those around you to live holy lives, to strengthen their faith?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

Jesus replied, "It is written: 'One does not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes forth from the mouth of God'" (Matthew 4:4).

A quality year brings more films than a top-10 list can hold

BY HARRY FORBES AND JOHN MULDERIG
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Editor's note: This is part one of a two-part series. A compilation of 10 children-friendly movies runs next week.

NEW YORK — Though on-screen violence can often be gratuitous, 2007 saw a surfeit of major films in which it played a strong — but dramatically essential — part. Each of them was artistically outstanding and has already been widely honored by many of the awards competitions and in top-10 lists.

These blood-tinged titles include “No Country for Old Men,” “Before the Devil Knows You’re Dead,” “Eastern Promises,” “Gone Baby Gone,” “3:10 to Yuma,” “The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford,” “Michael Clayton,” “There Will Be Blood” and “Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street.”

All of these sometimes difficult-to-watch films were well received by the Office for Film & Broadcasting, as they were morally grounded beyond their aesthetic excellence. But in selecting a 10-best list, we endeavored to find movies that would perhaps more directly reflect Catholic and/or strongly humane values.

Thus, while we acknowledge the qualities of those aforementioned films, our final list breaks down as follows, in alphabetical order, followed in parentheses by their USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting classification and Motion Picture Association of America rating:

“Amazing Grace”: Compelling historical biography about William Wilberforce, the great 18th-century British abolitionist who, with the help of other like-minded friends in Parliament and elsewhere, managed — after tireless and courageous struggle — to pass an anti-slave-trade bill in Parliament.

With its solid performances, accessible script and handsome production design, the film recalls some of the best historical dramas from Hollywood’s golden age, and is all the more admirable for its unabashed portrait of a passionate man of God (A-II, (PG)).

“Bella”/“Juno”: Two films that take different approaches to the same theme vie for this slot, with each beautifully affirming the value of human life.

“Bella” is the sweetly sentimental story about an unmarried waitress who becomes pregnant and her restaurant’s empathetic chef — an ex-soccer star whose career ended after his car fatally struck a child. He gives the young woman emotional support, takes her to visit his loving family and gently tries to persuade her to keep the baby.

The sensitive performances, positive depiction of the chef’s warm Latino family, and most of all, its affirmative pro-life message — along with themes of self-forgiveness, reconciliation and redemption — should resonate with Catholic viewers (A-II, PG-13).

“Juno” is a smart, funny and moving comedy-drama with an equally strong pro-life message about an unwed teen who decides not to have an abortion, and promises the coming baby to a childless couple who long to adopt.

The narrative has just the right moral wrap-up; performances and direction are tops, unfortunately marred by the high expletive level of its appealing but sassy heroine. (A-III, PG-13).

“Beyond the Gates”: Gripping dramatization about the 1994 siege of a Rwandan secondary school at the height of the genocide, as a dedicated Catholic priest and an idealistic young British teacher attempt to protect some 2,500 Tutsi citizens from the machete-wielding Hutus hovering just outside the school gates.

Filmed at the actual locations of the horrific events with survivors among the cast and crew (A-III, R).

“Into Great Silence”: Poetically filmed documentary about a Carthusian monastery in the French Alps, which follows the cloistered monks in their daily — mostly silent and solitary — routines.

The respectful no-frills approach utilizes no narration or background music, but by combining alternately a painterly formality and a verite intimacy, skillfully captures the textures and rhythms of their highly structured existence (A-I, no rating).

“The Kite Runner”: Fine adaptation of the best-seller about an Afghan writer now living in the U.S. who recalls how as a boy in his native homeland, he failed to help and subsequently betrayed his best friend, and now finds he has a chance to atone for that misdeed. Sensitive direction and beautiful performances add up to a fascinating portrait of pre- and post-Taliban Afghanistan with fine human values, strong affirmation of friendship and family, and redemptive ending that should move even the most stone-hearted (A-III, PG-13).

“Lars and the Real Girl”: Poignant story of emotionally fragile delusional man who — unable to make human connection — buys a life-size doll whom he presents as his girlfriend, and how others accept “her” as human out of love and compassion for him.

Suspension of disbelief is essential, but this improbable tale becomes believable, with themes of family, community, religion, forgiveness, redemption and a strong affirmation of human decency (A-II, PG-13).

“The Lives of Others”: Gripping German political thriller set in the East Berlin of 1984, in which a hard-bitten interrogator for the secret police wiretaps the apartment of a celebrated playwright and his actress companion, and discovers his own humanity in the process.

A suspenseful and profoundly moving story that besides bringing to life the ambience of pre-glasnost Germany, vividly demonstrates the transformative power of art while elucidating the conflict between ideology and conscience (A-III, R).

“The Namesake”: Superb, beautifully acted over-the-years saga about Indian newlyweds who emigrate to New York to start their life, and the joys and vicissitudes which follow.

This adaptation of the acclaimed novel holds your interest right up to its two-hankie conclusion, and has a poignant affirmation of family, respect for one’s parents, and embracing one’s heritage with pride (A-III, PG-13).

“The Rape of Europa”: Absorbing documentary about Hitler’s plunder and destruction of thousands of Europe’s most famous artworks during World War II, and the subsequent efforts to find those which survived and restore them. This fascinating story is compelling and demonstrates the dangerous lengths to which ordinary people were willing to go for the sake of preserving these precious masterworks (A-II, no rating).

“Ratatouille”: Delectable animated tale of a cute rat who develops his improbable passion for cooking by becoming the secret adviser to an esteemed Paris restaurant’s hapless garbage boy, turning the latter into a star chef.

The gorgeously animated production has a rare sophistication that should entertain adults as much as their children, while the messages of teamwork, honesty and following one’s dreams are strongly conveyed. (A-I, G).

Classifications for the films listed above:
A-I — general patronage; A-II — adults and adolescents; A-III — adults; L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling.

MPAA ratings for the films listed above:
G — general audiences. All ages admitted; PG — parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children; PG-13 — parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13; R — restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

St. Patrick School wins, utilizes grant for outdoor classroom

CHARLOTTE — St. Patrick School in Charlotte was awarded a grant from the Arts & Science Council for the 2007-08 school year.

The $5,691 Cultural Education in Schools grant will be used to enhance the school's science curriculum by revitalizing the outdoor classroom through hands-on courses and guest speakers.

The Arts & Science Council is a non-profit organization serving and supporting the Charlotte-Mecklenburg County cultural community through grant-making, programs and services.

This is the second consecutive year St. Patrick School has been awarded the grant.

In addition to enhancing the school's outdoor classroom and garden, the funds will help create a National/NC Wildlife Federation School Yard Habitat.

The habitat provides wildlife with food, water and shelter, while offering learning opportunities for students and others.

Over the summer, volunteers worked on the garden, pruning overgrown areas, throwing away broken benches and tilling for a new garden area. In the fall, two loads of compost and mulch were delivered.

Students and their families then worked to redefine the area and create a butterfly garden. Due to the drought, planting in these areas was delayed until early November.

Students in all grades have utilized the outdoor classroom. In October, kindergarten and first-grade students learned about butterflies and the plants they need to survive, while second-graders learned how to utilize weather tracking devices for productive gardening.

Third-graders are taking a field trip to learn about soil at Charlotte's Discovery Place in February, and later are planting seedlings in the garden. In November, fourth- and fifth-graders visited the Carolina Raptor Center to learn about birds.

The 2008 March for Life

Marchers bring light of Christ to dispel darkness

The weather for the 2008 March for Life was bitterly raw! This, however, didn't stop thousands of pro-life marchers from processing from the Ellipse on the south side of the White House to the U.S. Supreme Court.

As buses from around the country descended on Washington and unloaded marchers of all ages, races and genders, I had to once again wonder what this march really means.

Going back to the previous day and Rev. Martin Luther King's anniversary gave me my answer. And I wondered why so many other idealists and inspiring people have been assassinated — Abraham Lincoln, John F. Kennedy, Robert Kennedy, Mahatma Gandhi and, more recently, Benazir Bhutto.

As a child my grandfather taught me to go to the Bible, for "nothing is new in life; it is all there in the Bible."

Going back to it, I found myself more puzzled than ever. Why did Cain kill Abel? Why did Joseph's brothers throw him down a well to die? Why did Saul try to murder David, and why did Judas betray Christ?

It dawned on me that when we are confronted with murder, killing, genocide, abortion and assassinations, we are faced with the direct antithesis of kindness. Kindness means being well-disposed toward life, others and ourselves. When we become ill-disposed, our disposition becomes darkened. No longer are we able to see beauty or experience goodness. The heart becomes hardened, almost as if the devil is there.

When we go beneath this darkness,

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE
HEMRICK

we often find it is propelled by jealousy, resentment and selfishness. The goodness and high ideals of another become viewed as taking something away from us.

We not only opt to distance ourselves from society, but to also despise it. I wondered how many marchers realize they are marching for the light of Christ that dispels the darkness that is at the heart of ill disposition.

Depression is one of the worst darkenings of the mind we can experience. However, the darkness of mind that causes abortions, racism, genocide and euthanasia is far more dreadful because of its damaging effects on the human spirit.

What is the light of Christ of which we speak? It is faith when debilitating skepticism threatens to cripple us, hope when despair is crushing in on us, and love when hate jeopardizes our healthy disposition.

To walk in Christ's light is to choose life over death, selflessness over selfishness, and harmony and constructiveness over turmoil and destruction. Marching for life is to march for the beautiful human spirit with which God blessed us.

The spiritual voice in the American presidential primaries

Faith intimately guides person's interior while law, politics guide exterior

In secular terms, it is commonplace to hear some dissatisfaction with each candidate in the American primaries. Politics being the art of compromise, seldom is a single candidate perfect in policy.

Remarkably, it is in religious terms that a far more positive and encouraging assessment can be given.

I had not planned to write about politics in this column. This restraint is especially appropriate since former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney named me along with Harvard's Mary Ann Glendon (until her recent appointment as U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican) as volunteer legal advisers to his campaign.

But these words transcend partisanship. There is simply too much evidence of the gifts of the Holy Spirit afoot in our public deliberations not to make thankful notice of it.

Some years ago before his papal election, Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger commented: "The church will have to develop a great deal of imagination to help the Gospel remain a force in public life."

It's unclear whether we have consciously taken up this challenge, but listening to both parties' candidates suggests that the Holy Spirit is indeed imaginatively raising our spiritual voices so that the Gospel may be a greater force in our public life.

Let me give just a few bipartisan examples, submitted neither with favoritism nor endorsement. Indeed, because of the ethically troubling positions some candidates take with respect to matters of unborn life or the treatment of immigrants or anticipated deployment of military force, a sensitively attuned Catholic conscience has a difficult terrain to navigate.

But as serious as the shortcomings are, acknowledgment is due the remarkable presence of a religious theme in the campaigns overall.

Take, for instance, Sen. Barack Obama's victory address in Iowa. It has been characterized as a landmark moment in American history.

A talented, inspirational black man is given affirmation by those not of his race without either contrived preference or undue racial emphasis on his or anyone's part — save, possibly, Oprah.

Said the senator: "We are choosing hope over fear. We're choosing unity over division."

This is a very Catholic sentiment. The catechism celebrates the diversity of races, cultures, languages and traditions within the church, and we take it beyond "held together by the gifts of love from the Holy Spirit."

On the Republican side, former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee also won support in Iowa. That was easy

Faith & Precedent

DOUGLAS W.

given his shared evangelical base with Hawkeye voters.

More impressive was his willingness to articulate moral concerns in places where it would give him no political advantage.

Said Huckabee: "One of [the] positions of moral clarity for me is to believe that every single human being has intrinsic worth and value. I'm not sure that it's as important an issue — some say it isn't in New Hampshire — but I want you to know it is important for me."

Sen. Hillary Clinton is sadly pro-choice, but her candidacy too has given occasion to reflect upon the nature of servant leadership. By definition, if she shatters the gender ceiling, she affirms more completely than the Declaration of Independence that "men and women are created equal."

Insisting that there is a right and a wrong lying ahead of us, Sen. Clinton explained her desire to serve:

"It's really about all of us together. You know some of us put ourselves out there and do this against some pretty difficult odds. And we do it, each one of us, because we care about our country."

The importance of religion to American civic life was squarely affirmed in Gov. Romney's reflection upon his Mormon faith and faith in general.

Said Romney: "Freedom requires religion just as religion requires freedom. Freedom opens the windows of the soul so that man can discover his most profound beliefs and commune with God. Freedom and religion endure together, or perish alone."

That statement deserves approbation for affirming how faith intimately guides the interior of a person while law and politics can only touch the exterior.

The candidates, like us, are not always the model of their religious themes. Here witness the testy and unhelpful recent exchanges between the senators from Illinois and New York.

Yet, when the candidates are their better selves, they manifest what the Holy Father has said is intriguingly unique about "the American way of life."

Said Pope Benedict XVI: "In the American sphere people are taking up Catholicism as a whole and trying to relate it anew to the modern world."

Even primary campaigns, it seems, can be ecumenical moments guided by the Spirit.

Solidarity with others

We were pleased to read "As Disciples in Christ: U.S. Cardinal George expresses solidarity with Palestinian Christians" (Jan. 18).

It was informative, newsworthy and refreshing to receive such news of Christians in regions of the world whose lives are in constant peril and who need to know they are not forgotten. This way, we can intercede in prayer for them and thus maintain solidarity with them.

We would like to see more articles of this nature in our diocesan newspaper.

Appreciation for N.C. Catholicism

I was thrilled to see the tremendous growth going on in North Carolina ("2007 a year of growth, blessings for diocese," Jan. 4). Having been there in North Carolina after Hurricane Katrina, I noticed a remarkable growth in the church there, mostly from converts.

ever diocesan Eucharistic Congress in Charlotte and participate in the overwhelming "yes!" to Bishop Peter J. Jugis' question asking if anyone would like that congress repeated. I'm thrilled it has not stopped.

Here in Louisiana, we're mostly cradle Catholics and, unfortunately, a lot of apathy has entered in. North Carolina was a tremendous shot in the arm to me personally, encouraging me to hang in there — not that I wouldn't anyway.

God Bless all of you for your very informative newspaper.

I am a Catholic: Stories of immigration and human dignity

Catholics from from many places, have many faces

Many of us have stories about how our ancestors' search for religious freedom, family prosperity and dignified work led them on a journey to this and other countries.

These stories are common to the hope and faith of peoples from all over the world, both throughout history and in our own time.

Below are a few of my own reflections about some Catholic families who came here for better lives.

Michael's family moved to America to avoid the famine in Ireland. They were hard working, skilled laborers. They came to America having heard that the streets were paved with gold.

They arrived to find the streets weren't even paved, and they were the ones for the job. The Irish paved streets. They laid brick and block, and welded towering steel buildings.

They were firefighters and bus drivers. They worked hard, yet after they finished a city building, its new occupants would put up a sign: "Help Wanted. No Irish Need Apply."

The "nativist" even burned one of their convents. The hatred was strong, but they endured with hard work. They took comfort in their faith and the knowledge that their children would not starve in the famine they left behind.

Anthony brought his family to America before the first World War. Things were bad in Italy at the time. He came to work in the coal mines, getting paid by the ton.

The trip over was made easier by the fact that the major coal operators had told Congress they needed more labor, men not afraid to crawl into the bowels of the earth and pull out the coal with their hands and pick axes.

Anthony was one such man. But even though he was hard-working and decent, life was not kind. The people who lived here, the Scot-Irish and the English, wouldn't let the Italians — the "Wops" — live in their communities.

So Anthony moved to a mostly Italian community, father away from the mines, in the flood plains, in often little more than tent cities. At least there a person could hear friendly voices, in Italian, and forget about the harshness of the job.

But even in these towns bigotry was evident. One time the Ku Klux Klan marched into their little town, letting the "papists" know they were not welcome.

Anthony endured all of this. He fought with dignity and pride for his new country in the first Great War, and his son fought in the second. Anthony did all this with the belief that someday his children and grandchildren would escape poverty and have better lives.

Funeral stories

A reflection of the lives people lived

I passed a milestone this month. I celebrated my 300th funeral. In the last five weeks I had five funerals.

The deaths are sad, of course. But the funerals aren't.

What I like are the stories.

Mary, an African-American woman, died at the age of 101. She gave birth to 15 children.

She could cure anything. She made home remedies of herbs and plants from the forest.

Once she cured a young boy with a terrible skin disease who had been discharged from the famous Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. The fancy doctors at Hopkins had given up on his case.

She soaked him in an oatmeal bath and rubbed juice from leaves on him.

Mary was not afraid of animals, but she didn't like cars. She would harness a team of oxen and take her children to town on a wagon.

But she saw a truck catch fire once when a man smoking a cigar looked in his gas tank.

"Cars are dangerous," she told me. "They have gasoline in them."

I think of Ray, a NASA scientist. He lost one eye to melanoma.

He was a chaotic genius type. Once he was working on a space capsule in a "clean room" at NASA. It was supposed to be sterile, but Ray took his chicken salad sandwich into the capsule, got distracted and forgot it.

The sandwich was shot into outer space, and Ray had to come up with some explanation for NASA. He told them he was doing an experiment on the effects of weightlessness on mayo in chicken salad.

I think of Denny, who had a tragic life. He froze to death one night when he returned to his trailer too drunk to remember to turn on the heater.

A few years ago he became Catholic. Denny was so proud of our parish that he put the church name on a license plate on the back of his bicycle.

I was not pleased with the advertising since every time the police would stop Denny for riding his bike under the influence, they would bring him to my back porch.

His license plate was a sort of "return to sender" tag.

I think of Bill, a devout Catholic and courtly gentleman from Mobile, Ala. He addressed all women as "dawn-lin."

Bill was always praying. When he got into the car, he started the rosary with the engine. This had the bonus of keeping his wife from arguing with him.

Bill even prayed when he did the dishes. He gave each plate three wipes with the dish towel "for the Father, Son Manuel came here from Guatemala with his brother. He came because he could not make enough money in his home country to buy medicine for his daughter.

He came because his heart would break every night the children didn't have enough food.

He came here to work hard. He is willing to do any kind of work. He can work on roofs or wash dishes. Most of the time, he keeps two jobs so that he stays busy.

He just wants to work and live a simple life so he can send money back to his wife and family.

These stories bring to mind Jesus' words, "I was a stranger and you welcomed me" (Matthew 25:35). And they raise an important question: Are we welcoming the strangers in our land?

Harmony between faith, reason shows God is near, says pope

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Catholic insistence on a close connection between faith and reason is based on the belief that God created human beings and is always close to them, Pope Benedict XVI said.

"The harmony between faith and reason means, above all, that God is not far off, he is not far from our reason and from our lives. He is close to every human being, near to our hearts and near to our intelligence," the pope said Jan. 30 at his weekly general audience.

The pope then continued a series of audience talks about St. Augustine.

For St. Augustine, the pope said, religions and philosophies that did not make sense of life and did not help people arrive at a truth valid for everyone were not worth pursuing.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

As we continue our catechesis on St. Augustine of Hippo, I wish today to consider some of the teachings of this great doctor of the church.

A passionate believer, he recognized the importance of bringing together faith and reason. It was he who taught that we should believe in order to understand, and understand in order to believe.

God makes himself known to our reason, although he always transcends what we can know through reason alone. As Augustine beautifully expressed it, God is "more intimately present to me than my inmost being" and "higher than the highest element in me."

St. Augustine taught that by belonging to the church, we are so closely united to Christ that we "become" Christ, the head whose members we are.

As our head, Christ prays in us, yet he also prays for us as our priest, and we pray to him as our God.

If we ask what particular message St. Augustine has for the men and women of today, it is perhaps his emphasis on our need for truth. Listen to the way he describes his own search for God's truth:

"You were within me and I sought you outside, in the beautiful things that you had made. You were with me, but I was not with you. You called me, you cried out and broke open my deafness. I tasted you, and now I hunger and thirst for you."

Let us pray that we too may discover the joy of knowing God's truth.

and Holy Spirit."

I think of Hanne, who was raised in wartime Denmark. Hanne was a "sometimes" Lutheran who became a serious Catholic in her 20s when she became a governess for a wealthy family in Belgium after the war.

The young children converted her to Catholicism because she had to teach them their catechism.

When Hanne told her Lutheran father she wanted to be a nun, he sent her to America to distract her. There she met a devout Catholic man and married him.

Then there was Anthony. He was a father of six, and a lifelong, sometimes Catholic.

He was a "numbers runner." He liked to gamble on everything — cards, horses, whatever. We buried him with a cue stick, the daily racing form and a couple of lottery tickets.

Before we closed the coffin his daughter wrote down the lotto numbers. She said, "If he hits, up he comes."

The apple does not fall far from the tree.

Oh I love the stories!

Two Catholic University students design altar, chair for pope

WASHINGTON (CNS) — When Pope Benedict XVI celebrates Mass April 17 at Nationals Park, he will use an altar and chair designed by two students at The Catholic University of America in Washington.

John-Paul Mikolajczyk and Ryan Mullen, first-year graduate students in the university's School of Architecture and Planning, designed the liturgical furniture as part of a competition jointly sponsored by the Archdiocese of Washington and the university's School of Architecture and Planning.

Their designs were chosen from a field of 21 entrants in the competition.

Architecture students, working alone or in groups of up to four people, prepared their models and drawings between Jan. 18 and Jan. 23. The entries were judged Jan. 24, and the winner was announced Jan. 29.

"There is something very exciting about this work you designed, so focused on what we believe," Archbishop Donald W. Wuerl of Washington told them. "When all those people (at the papal Mass) are looking at this, you can say, 'He (the pope) is standing at my altar.'"

The Mass is the only Washington public event of the pope's upcoming U.S. visit April 15-20. He will be in Washington April 15-17, and will be in New York April 18-20.

Originally, Mass organizers were going to set up the sanctuary at the stadium's second base. By moving the altar to center field, an additional 4,000 people can attend the Mass. According to some estimates, about 45,000 seats will be available for the Mass.

Mikolajczyk said he tried not to think too much about his work potentially being used by Pope Benedict. "That the pope will use our altar hasn't sunk in yet," he said.

The two students also designed the lectern and pulpit that will be used during the papal Mass. The model includes a 10-foot-by-4-foot altar with a substantial top, a repeating pattern of decorative arches beneath it and a smaller base. The front of the pulpit — also called an ambo — is adorned with images of the Bible and the Holy Trinity. The tall chair back is decorated with Pope Benedict's papal coat of arms.

Mikolajczyk and Mullen said they spent an afternoon at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception studying the altar furnishings.

"We wanted to incorporate elements that would remind us of Christ's active presence and work in the liturgy," Mikolajczyk said.

The 21 designs were judged by a panel that included Msgr. Barry Knestout, moderator of the curia for the Archdiocese of Washington. Msgr. Knestout, who holds a degree in architecture and is overseeing planning for the sanctuary at the papal Mass, praised the winning design for its "delicacy and elegance. The winners obviously gave deep thought to the design and how it related to the implementation of the pieces."

The winning design, Msgr. Knestout said, included a combination of bold and delicate designs "that reflect the frailty of the human condition while showing (how) the strength of faith assists us and supports us."

Mikolajczyk and Mullen will work with the university's architecture faculty and the Washington Archdiocese to fine-tune the design and actually construct the altar and the other furnishings at the Crough Center, the university's architecture building.

The pieces will become part of the sanctuary for the pope's Mass at Nationals Park. In addition, Mikolajczyk and Mullen received a $1,500 prize. A second-place winner received $1,000 and five honorable-mention winners received $500 each.

Archbishop Wuerl said the winning design was "a tribute to this school of architecture, Catholic University and the quality of students here."

New York Giants' head coach has ties to parish in Rochester Diocese

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (CNS) — Mayor Ted Young of Waterloo sees a link between the success of the New York Giants and St. Mary Church in his Seneca County village.

He and Tom Coughlin, the Giants' head coach, are 1960 graduates of the parish grade school. Young believes Coughlin's Catholic-school upbringing helped shape his coaching achievements in college and the National Football League.

"I think it played a large part. It sets your life values, and your values are set very early on," Young said.

Young noted that he and Coughlin were both altar boys at St. Mary Church, and that Coughlin's penchant for orderliness could well be traced back to the nuns who taught them.

"Tom was very dedicated no matter what he did, as far as sports and schoolwork," he said.

Young acknowledged Coughlin's reputation as a stern disciplinarian — a tag that's led to occasional conflicts with his players. Yet Young asserted that his childhood friend's intensity and passion have reaped big rewards.

"Say what you want, he's been successful everywhere he's gone," Young said. "His values, his determination, his dedication — if a little bit of that can be instilled in the players he's coaching, that can instill success. A coach like Tom drives you to put heart into what you're doing."

Such qualities came in handy in the NFL's National Football Conference title game Jan. 20, as the Giants pulled out a 23-20 overtime victory in subzero temperatures in Green Bay, Wis., over the host team, the Green Bay Packers.

The upset earned the team a Super Bowl date with the New England Patriots Feb. 3 in Arizona. The Giants brought the Patriots' perfect season to a halt with a 17-14 victory.

These are pretty lofty heights for the 61-year-old Coughlin, whose early exposure to football involved pickup games with Young and other neighborhood youths.

Young and Coughlin went on to play football together at Waterloo High School, where Coughlin still holds the school record of 19 touchdowns in a season.

Coughlin coached at the Rochester Institute of Technology, spent many years as an NFL and Division I college assistant, then was head coach at Jesuit-run Boston College.

His first NFL head-coaching position was with the expansion Jacksonville (Fla.) Jaguars, beginning in 1995. He had an eight-year record of 72-64, reached two American Football Conference title games, and was named NFL Coach of the Year in 1996.

Coughlin became the Giants' coach in 2004 and has a record of 38-31.

Many of Coughlin's schoolmates and family members still reside in the Waterloo area. The coach has stopped back frequently over the years, attending Sunday Mass at St. Mary Church.

Priest: Gospel can inspire health care workers motivated by faith

NEW YORK (CNS) — Health care providers who are motivated by faith can use Gospel inspiration to do the right thing when they might otherwise be tempted to take the easy way out, according to Maryknoll Father Peter LeJacq, a physician.

He drew on his extensive experiences in Africa to address a Feb. 2 seminar on "Faith in Medicine: Lessons from Tanzania."

More than 200 people heard nine physicians address medical, ethical, political and practical aspects of providing health care in the developing world.

He said the admonition to "go and do likewise" from the parable of the Good Samaritan probably summarizes the reason why Christian groups supply more than half the health care in Tanzania.

He also said that the Catholic Church provides 25 percent of all HIV/AIDS services worldwide.

"There are those in health care who have as sincere compassion for the sick as Mother Teresa and don't formally connect their actions with a faith group," he said.

"Any health care worker can have that heartfelt and selfless motive to care for the sick as a friend or neighbor ... but for Christians, that parable can inspire us when we might otherwise weaken," said Father LeJacq, one of about 100 priest-doctors worldwide.

In response to a question about the potential use of human services as a route to indoctrination in the faith, Father LeJacq said that since the Second Vatican Council there is no longer a theological reason to try to convert people to ensure their salvation.

"God can manage people's salvation through all different venues," he said. "We care for people. God saves people."

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope asks religious to teach laypeople to appreciate Bible

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Marking the feast of the Presentation of the Lord and the annual celebration of the World Day for Consecrated Life, Pope Benedict XVI asked members of religious orders to help laypeople draw closer to the Bible.

The pope said that, as the Catholic Church prepares for the October world Synod of Bishops on the Bible, consecrated men and women should help other members of the church learn to pray with the Bible and to draw direction for their lives from the Scriptures.

At the foundation of each religious order, there was a strong inspiration from the Gospel, the pope said Feb. 2, joining the religious in St. Peter's Basilica after they had celebrated Mass.

"The Holy Spirit draws some people to live the Gospel in a radical way and to translate it into a more generous form of discipleship," he said.

"Following Christ without compromise, as proposed by the Gospel, has been the ultimate and supreme rule in religious life throughout the centuries," the pope told the religious.

The pope asked the consecrated men and women to "nourish your day with prayer, meditation and listening to the word of God."

"You who have familiarity with the ancient practice of 'lectio divina' (praying with Scripture) should help the faithful appreciate it in their own daily lives."

Pope Benedict prayed people would learn to look at the good works performed by religious and realize that the word of God can have similar power in their own lives.

Pope reformulates extraordinary form of Mass' prayer for Jews

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI has reformulated a Good Friday prayer for the Jews, removing language about the "blindness" of the Jews but preserving a call for their conversion.

The new prayer replaces the one contained in the 1962 Roman Missal, which is no longer generally used by Catholics but which may be used by some church communities under recently revised norms.

The new formulation was published Feb. 5 on the front page of the Vatican newspaper, L'Osservatore Romano, along with a brief note from the Vatican Secretariat of State.

The text, made available only in Latin, begins: "Let us pray for the Jews. May the Lord Our God enlighten their hearts so that they may acknowledge Jesus Christ, the savior of all men."

It continues: "Almighty and everlasting God, you who want all men to be saved and to reach the awareness of the truth, graciously grant that, with the fullness of peoples entering into your church, all Israel may be saved."

The new wording removes language some Jewish leaders and groups found offensive, including a reference to "the blindness of that people" and appeals that Jews "be delivered from their darkness" and that God "may take the veil from their hearts."

A reference to "perfidious Jews" was dropped in 1959.

Vatican officials have emphasized that the newly formulated Good Friday prayer applies only to the 1962 missal and that its use would be exceptional, since the old rite is not generally allowed during the three days leading up to Easter.

Nevertheless, under papal norms released last summer, some particular Catholic communities devoted to the old rite could use it in Good Friday liturgies. That brought objections from Jewish representatives.

The 1970 Roman Missal, revised after the Second Vatican Council, is the one generally used by Catholic churches around the world. It also contains a Good Friday prayer for Jews, which reads:

"Let us pray for the Jewish people, the first to hear the word of God, that they may continue to grow in the love of his name and in faithfulness to his covenant. Almighty and eternal God, long ago you gave your promise to Abraham and his posterity. Listen to your church as we pray that the people you first made your own may arrive at the fullness of redemption."

Knights recognize outstanding parishioners

Annual event highlights those helping to make differences in parish, community

KERNERSVILLE — The third annual parish awards dinner was recently held at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville.

More than 100 people attended the Jan. 28 event and dinner, sponsored by Knights of Columbus Council 8509.

Juan Munoz, a Knight, received the 2007 Parishioner of the Year Award.

A native of Cuba, Munoz works to welcome back Catholics who have left the church. He also helped coordinate the parish Good Friday and Our Lady of Guadalupe celebrations.

Carol Pennington received the Dave Reinhart Humanitarian Award.

Among her many parish and community duties, Pennington serves as an extraordinary minister of holy Communion, president and district deputy for the Columbiettes and chair of the parish Angel Meals ministry, and teaches the Liturgy of the Word to parish children.

Nicole Thomas received the 2007 Junior Achiever of the Year Award.

Nicole serves as youth leader of the local Challenge Catholic Girls Club and as an extraordinary minister of holy Communion, lector and usher. She also volunteers with the Special Olympics, vacation Bible school, the parish Angel Tree and Catholic Scripture Study.

Witty remarks

Bishop Curlin, who appointed Father Hawker to St. Luke Church in August 2001, presided at the Mass.

The parish held a party Feb. 2 for Father Hawker, who also celebrated his 70th birthday.

Deacons, wives examine aspects of Divine Liturgy

"As part of that educational setting, it afforded the deacons an opportunity to see the need for a uniform set of standards to be followed whether functioning with the bishop or in a parish setting at the liturgy of the Eucharist," he said.

All active permanent deacons in the Diocese of Charlotte are required to participate in continuing education, an annual retreat and an annual recommitment to the bishop.

Father Roux discussed the deacon's role in the Mass.

The Mass is the work accomplished by Jesus for the people, he said, and the people of God are invited to unite their sacrifice to Christ in this work.

During Mass, said Father Roux, all become present at Calvary and participate in the passion, death and resurrection of Christ — the paschal mystery.

The priest, he said, stands in the place of Christ, Alter Christus, who offers himself to the Father for the salvation of all mankind. The deacon stands as the first of all the ministers of the church. Therefore, the deacon not only ministers to Christ but also assists him, in the person of the priest, in the paschal mystery.

"The Mass is Jesus' sacrifice for mankind to the Father, in which all humanity offers itself, through the priest, as a sacrifice to God in the unity of the Holy Spirit," said Father Roux.

Vatican Council II reaffirmed the sacrificial nature of the Mass.

Father Roux said that liturgical law is "prescriptive law" and is found in the Sacramentary, the General Instruction of the Roman Missal, "Redemptionis Sacramentum" by the Congregation of Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments, and the liturgical norms of the Diocese of Charlotte, promulgated by Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

Father Roux ended the presentation by taking questions on aspects of the Mass from the deacons and wives.

"It was a wonderful opportunity to learn more and ask questions about the rubrics of the liturgy," said Peggy Atkinson, wife of Deacon James Atkinson

Dedicated Catholic Ministry Has Won Many Battles In Haiti's War on Poverty

Seeing the emaciated young Haitian boy sitting listless under a tree — skin and eyes sallow from dehydration — American-born nurse, Bette Gabrian, felt convicted before God.

"Here, an hour-and-a-half from Miami, children are starving," she said. "This can't go on. God is watching. We have to do something."

In addition to severe malnutrition, the five-year-old's back bulged grotesquely due to Potts Disease-tuberculosis of the spine.

"What was happening to this boy happens all too often in rural Haiti," explained Bette Gebrian, the Director of Public Health with the Haitian Health Foundation (HHF), a Catholic medical outreach with a long history of serving the country's rural poor. "His mother came home to the mountains to deliver her baby. She breast-fed for awhile, then she went back to Port-au-Prince because she had to find a job."

The boy's grandmother, whose own energy had waned with age, was not capable of caring for him properly. Although she loved the boy she nick-named "Raisin," the grandmother was unable to recognize the danger he was in, and her poverty kept her from having an adequate supply of nutritious food on hand. As a result, the boy was slowly starving to death.

And, as Bette Gabrian rightly says, situations like this are common in Haiti, where the population is destitute, medical care is inadequate and food is scarce.

Because of this severe poverty, Bette has had to see countless children die from heartbreaking — and totally preventable — maladies. But she has also won many battles, conquering such illnesses through HHF's programs, supported by Cross International Catholic Outreach.

Fortunately for Raisin, Bette happened to visit his rural village with her mobile vaccine clinic. She recognized his classic symptoms before it was too late.

Responding to the boy's urgent needs, Bette took little Raisin to a nearby HHF facility where caring nuns treated his Potts Disease and anemia, de-wormed him, and lovingly fed him back to health. It took a whole year for the weakened boy to reach the level of health and vitality appropriate for a five-year-old. At that point, he could return home.

"But the important thing about this situation is that the boy wasn't simply brought home and left to fall back into his previous condition. We knew that was a risk, so we assigned a health agent to return to his village and do follow-ups," Bette explained. "That's the point of having resident village health workers, who are local people trained by HHF to provide health care to their own people. They do more than put a Band-Aid on the problem — they become part of a long-term process that improves the quality of life for the people in a meaningful way."

Cross International Catholic Outreach fully supports HHF's strategy, recognizing that the constant presence of a trained health worker greatly augments the care given by doctors who come to the village only for emergencies or for occasional wellness visits. Cross has supported these efforts and would like to find ways to expand and strengthen the outreach.

"Clearly, these resident health workers are essential to maintaining the work that's been accomplished by doctors and nurses. HHF has shown the creativity and commitment that marks most Catholic ministries for the poor. This isn't just a job for them. It's a mission and ministry. It's an expression of their love for God and love for others," explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross International Catholic Outreach. "This is precisely the type of ministry we American Catholics should be supporting overseas."

Cavnar added that HHF's method of training local people to better their own circumstances is also right in line with how Cross works. It's a method that is both empowering and extremely cost effective in the long run. And this too makes it a wonderful project for U.S. Catholics to support.

"Ultimately, it doesn't take a huge grant of aid to save lives in rural Haiti," said Cavnar. "Pennies can literally mean the difference between a child receiving a lifesaving antibiotic or losing a limb from a staff infection; an expectant mother getting access to medical care or dying in childbirth; or an infant getting vaccinated or succumbing to measles. It only costs us pennies to help — and therefore not helping can cost lives.

"Like Bette, we should all feel concerned when we see children suffering. We should all wonder what God thinks as He watches our response," he added. "And as Bette says, something should be done... and it can. All it takes is a commitment to get involved and support dedicated Catholic ministries like HHF, and thereby stand with them in their struggle to help the poor. Then, when God watches... He will have reason to smile."

Readers interested in hearing Bette Gebrian describe HHF's lifesaving work in Haiti can listen to interviews posted at www.crosscatholic.org/podcast.

Cross Recognized, Endorsed by U.S. Catholic Bishops

As Cross International Catholic Outreach has continued to extend the range of its relief work to help the poor overseas, a growing number of Catholic bishops in the United States are taking notice and commending the organization for its efforts.

"We've had many endorsement letters come in the last year or so, and our staff is encouraged by the kind words and well wishes these bishops have shared," explained James Cavnar, president of Cross International Catholic Outreach. "It motivates us to want to push harder and do even more."

Most Reverend Gerald Barbarito shared: "Seeing Christ in the poor and extending assistance in His name is the very core of what we are about as Church. You are to be commended."

Most Reverend Timothy Dolan was equally enthusiastic, saying: "I am pleased to wholeheartedly endorse Cross International Catholic Outreach. It is my hope that the clergy will familiarize themselves with Cross and its outreach and share Cross' message with their parishioners."

Most Reverend Tod Brown has a similar position, explaining: "As a universal Church, it is our duty to become aware of and support the missionary works of the church. I heartily endorse Cross International Catholic Outreach, its worthwhile mission and its dedicated preachers."

Most Reverend Curtis Gillory, singled out the ministry's good stewardship of funds, saying: "I realize the great assistance that Cross International Catholic Outreach provides for the poor at a very cost effective rate. I want to be supportive of Cross in whatever way we are able to do so."

Cavnar is inspired by these endorsements and the notes of encouragement coming in from other U.S. bishops, but he feels the praise should really be aimed at the thousands of American Catholics who contribute to Cross and make the ministry's work possible.

"None of what we do would be possible without the donations we receive from the men, women and children in parishes from across this country. Those gifts, large or small, are what give us the financial power to send the food, dig the wells for water, build the houses, deliver the medicines, open the schools — everything," Cavnar said. "I say, God bless those benefactors. God bless their generosity and their willingness to sacrifice for the benefit of others. Their commitment to helping the poor has made all of this possible."

Priest's Timely Rescue of Haitian Orphans "Wouldn't Have Been Possible" Without Help From U.S. Catholics

The men standing in Fr. Marc Boisvert's doorway had terrible news. A nearby orphanage had just collapsed under financial pressure, and sixty-four boys were in urgent need of help. Many of the children had already gone hungry for days, and some were sick and needed medical attention.

No one else was capable of dealing with the problem — could he help?

Having worked with orphans for several years, Fr. Marc could easily imagine what the children were going through as they awaited word of their fate. First there would be shock. Then loss and emptiness, followed by fear.

Ultimately, these children would relive the full, crippling sense of abandonment that overwhelms all orphans.

"When I heard about these kids, my mind raced, and I wondered if I could do anything about it. My own orphanage already housed hundreds of children and we were financially strapped ourselves," Fr. Marc recalled. "I knew I had the heart for the job, but there were so many practical and financial hurdles to overcome. Could I afford to take those children in? And on the other hand — could I afford not to? This is Haiti, I thought. What are their chances if I turn my back on them? They might not survive."

Knowing that some kind of outside help would be necessary to properly feed, shelter and educate the new children, Fr. Marc quickly contacted several large international charities seeking their support. All of them turned him down... except one.

Within hours of hearing from Fr. Marc about the plight of the orphans and his desire to help, Cross International Catholic Outreach made a firm pledge of support and wired all of the funds needed to get the rescue underway. Every one of those children was saved.

"The first week involved some adjustments," Fr. Marc explained. "They came in with nothing but the clothes on their backs, no shoes and many were clearly malnourished. They ate ravenously that first night. The next morning at breakfast, one of the kids seemed surprised and wondered if the food he was being served would be his only meal for the day. He wasn't used to eating every day — and certainly never more than once a day."

"What are their chances if I turn my back on them? They might not survive."

Fr. Marc Boisvert, Project Espwa

Over the next few weeks, Fr. Marc turned these new "visitors" into family. Meanwhile, Cross International has had to mobilize its programs to get the financial support that was needed.

"It's been a big undertaking," explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross International Catholic Outreach. "Fr. Marc had to have beds, sheets and towels, clothing, shoes and school supplies, among other things. Funds were also needed to bring in a doctor to examine and treat children that were ill or suffering from malnutrition. Now we are working on supplying food and other day-to-day needs."

For Fr. Marc, it has been a tremendous relief to have so willing a partner help handle the emergency.

"Here in Haiti, a Catholic priest is constantly in the midst of life-or-death situations — people come to him because they're desperate for food or have dying children in need of medicines or face some other urgent needs," he explained. "When they come to us for help, we want to respond, but we can't unless we have outside resources — food for the hungry, medicines to treat the sick or the other materials needed to get the job done. It's a real blessing to have Cross as a partner in times like those. In fact, without their support, taking in these additional orphans wouldn't have been possible... and these children wouldn't have the peace and hope they enjoy today."

Although the story of the rescued orphans is still unfolding, Cross is committed to providing Fr. Marc with the tools he needs to care for them... and give them new hope. To accomplish this, the ministry hopes to secure support from Catholics in the U.S.

"I'm confident that when Catholics in America hear about this urgent need and about Fr. Marc's goal of rescuing these children, they will want to help. We Catholics value life as a gift from God, and we have always supported our missionaries overseas," explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross International Catholic Outreach. "This situation gives us an opportunity to put our beliefs into action. Our involvement is meaningful and it will have a tangible impact — these children will have hope and a better life because we chose to become involved."

In addition to seeking help from U.S. Catholics for these rescued orphans, Cross is also hoping to gain support for Fr. Marc Boisvert's larger goal — the development of "Project Espwa," a major housing and self-help program for Haiti's neediest orphans. Its goal is to take children off the dangerous streets in Haiti and place them in a safe, rural setting where they can recapture their childhood and take part in educational programs that will help shape a new future.

"Espwa means hope, and that is what this project is all about. It includes safe housing and food — the basic necessities of life — but its staff is ultimately working toward self-sufficiency for the children who will grow up there," Cavnar said. "Their goal to educate the children and teach them skills on the farm is a wonderful plan we should get behind and support. This approach does more than meet the immediate needs of these children. It gives them the gift of a brighter future. It literally gives them espwa — hope."

Navy Chaplain Leaves Success, Opportunities to Accept Christ's Call for "A Few Good Men"

While serving in the U.S. Navy, Chaplain Marc Boisvert, a veteran of "Desert Shield/Desert Storm," made a trip to Haiti. He went, in part, to confirm stories he had been told about the plight of the poor living there.

What he saw changed his life forever — not simply because it altered his perspective on poverty or changed his political views, but because it moved him to act.

"What I saw — particularly the condition of the children — demanded my immediate action. I saw life or death situations, and I knew I could help... but only if I got deeply involved," Fr. Marc recalled.

After resigning his commission in the US Navy Chaplain Corps, Fr. Marc was honorably discharged as a Lieutenant Commander.

"I sold most of my worldly possessions — all 17 of them — and moved lock, stock and barrel to Haiti. That was on January 1st, 1998," He recalls. Today, Fr. Marc directs one of Haiti's finest Christian orphanages, serving hundreds of children (see story above).

"You don't have to be a brain surgeon to see how devastating poverty is for children here. Haiti is the poorest country in the Western hemisphere and that is almost a death sentence to the kids here. Poor sanitation, polluted water, no access to decent medical care, no money for school and often no money for food."

Fr. Marc, while serving in the U.S. Navy

"Still, some ask why I do this. In part, it is a response to Christ's words in Matthew 25. Jesus explains that in serving Him, we serve the poor. As a Christian, you can't read that and not take it seriously. You have to do something. You have to feed the hungry, clothe the naked and respond to the needs of the poor."

Death-row inmates caution troubled youths in new book

BY LAURIE STEVENS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

TOLEDO, Ohio—Dennis Skillicorn can't change his past, but he believes he can change the future for young people in danger of repeating his mistakes by sharing his story and others like it.

Using contributions from prisoners throughout the country, the 48-year-old inmate from Missouri's death row edited a book of essays, poems and artwork chronicling the choices that brought prisoners to where they are today.

With the help of volunteers at a Catholic parish in the Toledo Diocese, "Today's Choices Affect Tomorrow's Dreams" is being distributed in juvenile detention facilities around the country to remind young people about the importance of their decisions.

The book, written by death-row inmates and prisoners serving life-without-parole sentences, is distributed through Compassion, a nonprofit organization that produces a bimonthly newsletter written by and for death-row inmates in the United States.

The concept came from Skillicorn, editor of the Compassion newsletter since 2003.

In a phone interview with the Catholic Chronicle, Toledo's diocesan newspaper, from Potosi Correctional Center in Mineral Point, Mo., Skillicorn discussed his work with Compassion and his hopes for the book.

"Prison systems around the country are flourishing," he said. "And we're filling those institutions with our young people because they're making bad choices."

Many prisoners share a desire to prevent young people from repeating their mistakes, Skillicorn said.

"A lot of these guys have children themselves, and what kind of man would want his own child to make the same stupid mistakes he's made?" he asked.

With the help of people on the outside, he believes the book can make a difference for youths. The purchase of one book allows two books to be provided for free to juvenile detention centers.

None of the proceeds go to inmates, Skillicorn added. All finances are handled by volunteers at St. Rose Church in Perrysburg.

Compassion initially sent 100 copies to juvenile facilities, but it has since received more than 200 additional requests for the book. Skillicorn said he has received letters of appreciation from judges and others involved in the juvenile justice system.

"Professionals have recognized this as a piece of material that could actually make a difference in kids' lives," he said.

Skillicorn, who was incarcerated on two other occasions before being convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to death in 1996, hopes young readers learn the importance of choosing good role models and realize they are not invincible.

"I live in an institution with 800 offenders in it," he said. "Every single one of those guys at one time or another thought they were invincible."

He recounted his own turning point in 1994, after his arrest for the crime that put him back in prison.

"I was literally at the bottom of my life and I just had nowhere to look but up," he said.

He became a Christian, and has since become passionate about restorative justice projects with Compassion and other organizations.

The Compassion newsletter prints introspective essays, poetry and artwork from death-row prisoners throughout the country. Death-row inmates edit the publication, while volunteers at St. Rose Church oversee its publication and finances.

Compassion is distributed free to all 3,400 U.S. death-row inmates with the support of outside subscriptions and donations. Half the subscription fees and undesignated donations are used to award college scholarships to the immediate family members of murder victims.

Skillicorn said a number of inmates have already expressed interest in creating a second volume of essays for young people to follow "Today's Choices Affect Tomorrow's Dreams."

God works through us, transfigures us

BY SHARON K. PERKINS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

I belong to a small prayer group composed of women, mostly fellow graduate students, who have been meeting on Sunday nights for well over a year.

When the discussion last week turned to the ways in which we felt that "God had been made glorious through us," we sat in silence.

Later, each of us sheepishly confessed that we didn't feel as comfortable "boasting" as we did recounting our failures before God and focusing on the ways that we needed to improve!

With that admission behind us, we then were able to share quite a few stories of how we had been instruments of God's blessing that week. We were not only free to marvel at God's goodness but also to celebrate how we had been instruments of it.

The readings for this Sunday disabuse us of false modesty and remind us of God's great pleasure in not only granting us blessings, but making us blessings.

The caveat, of course, is that our greatness, like Abraham's, is all gift. God grants it "according to his own design," through the "grace bestowed on us in Christ Jesus" and not by our own merits.

It was this same sort of magnanimity that prompted the Father in today's Gospel to say of the transfigured Jesus, "This is my beloved Son, with whom I am well pleased."

And when Peter, James and John cowered in fear at the enormity of God's glory revealed to them, Jesus lifted them up with the admonition, "Rise, and do not be afraid."

Sometimes I find it easier to retreat from the idea that God could actually take great pleasure in revealing himself through me. The notion is too overwhelming, my shortcomings too apparent, for me to accept it.

Yet the doctrine of the Incarnation, the historical fact of God taking on human flesh, requires me to believe nothing less.

The Gospel passage ends with the words, "And when the disciples raised their eyes, they saw no one else but Jesus alone." May we surrender so completely to God's gracious love that when others see us and the good that we do, they see only his Son.

Question:

When have you been aware of God's goodness flowing to another through you? Meditate this week on how much God takes pleasure in you, his beloved son or daughter.

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"I will make your name great, so that you will be a blessing" (Genesis 12:2).

Top-10 children-family movies of 2007

BY HARRY FORBES
AND JOHN MULDERIG
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Editor's note: This is part two of a two-part series. Last week was a list of movies reflecting Catholic and/or strongly humane values.

NEW YORK —Not all the titles on last week's 10-best list would be appropriate for youngsters, and some (like "The Lives of Others") are strictly for mature audiences, so we have compiled 10 children-friendly movies for worry-free family viewing.

"Arctic Tale": An involving story charting the parallel journeys of a polar bear cub and a walrus pup in the Arctic Circle from birth to maturity and showing how they manage to survive a changing environment with ever-decreasing ice seriously impeding both their natural habitat and their ability to obtain food.

This impressively photographed documentary "fable" vividly dramatizes the challenges facing these creatures in light of global warming, rendering the film a vivid animal counterpart to Al Gore's "An Inconvenient Truth." (A-I, G).

"Bee Movie": Generally engaging animated feature about a scrappy bee who decides to sue the human race for stealing the honey manufactured by his hard-working bee brethren and brings the case to court, with the help of a sympathetic florist. An often very funny script, terrific voice work, and ultimately, a valuable ecological lesson. (A-I, PG).

"Bridge to Terabithia": Coming-of-age fantasy based on a children's novel about a young loner who befriends a new girl in town, also an outcast, and together they create a magical world — Terabithia — where they can escape their real-life troubles. The young leads are charming and the sweet story gently imparts worthy messages about friendship, family and the power of imagination. A-II (PG)

"Enchanted": Clever musical romance follows a maiden from the world of animated fairy tales into contemporary, live-action Manhattan where she falls in love with a lawyer, despite the entreaties of her princely suitor and the meddling of an evil queen.

With affection and wit, the film gently spoofs the cartoon fairy-tale genre, on which Disney built its reputation, never losing sight of its traditional values and perennial charms. (A-I, PG).

"Evan Almighty": Surprisingly felicitous contemporary spin on the Noah story, as a TV anchorman turned congressman is instructed by God to build an ark in light of an impending flood.

Imparting an overall message about how one act of random kindness can change the world. Slapstick, sentiment and surprising reverence are skillfully combined (A-II, PG).

"Fred Claus": Generally funny yet bittersweet tale of a sad-sack Chicago repo man who travels to the North Pole to help his younger, more popular brother, St. Nicholas, at Christmas, while a devious efficiency expert threatens to shut down the elves' toy factory.

Underneath the laughs, this is a surprisingly resonant take on sibling rivalry, with lots of heart-tugging sentiment, and solid messages about family, self-esteem, forgiveness and, ultimately, redemption (A-II, PG).

"Mr. Bean's Holiday": The perennially pleasing Mr. Bean wins a trip to the French Riviera, but before reaching the beach he manages to complicate the lives of many. The film is an unmitigated delight: gentle, ingenious and equally appealing to children and adults. (A-I, G).

"Martian Child": Delicate, highly unusual story about widowed science fiction writer who adopts a strange little boy who insists he's come from Mars.

The slightly surreal tone keeps you guessing whether the child is simply delusional or actually an extraterrestrial being, and a poignant script underscores themes of nonconformity, loss, and the power of love (A-II, PG).

"Shrek the Third": The saga of the lovable ogre continues in the same high quality vein of the first two films, as Shrek — aided by a potential heir to Far Far Away's throne — must rescue his wife, Fiona, and the kingdom's other residents who have been captured by an assortment of fairy-tale villains.

The script's careful emphasis on good values such as believing in yourself, sacrificing for others, eschewing violence, and trusting in mankind's innate goodness override the occasional crude and mildly suggestive gags (A-II, PG).

"Underdog": An ordinary dog is given extraordinary powers in this charming film adaptation of the classic 1960s television cartoon series. The live-action adventure combines the best of 21st-century special effects with a genuinely engaging story line, some wry humor and unimpeachable family values.

Occasional crass language, some mild innuendo, and scatological humor and cartoon violence perhaps preclude the film for very young children. A-I (PG)

Forbes is director and Mulderig is on the staff of the Office for Film & Broadcasting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

The Office for Film & Broadcasting classifications for the films listed above:

A-I — general patronage; A-II — adults and adolescents; A-III — adults; L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling.

Motion Picture Association of America ratings for the films listed above:

G — general audiences. All ages admitted; PG — parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children; PG-13 — parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13; R — restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

Boston Catholics criticize fitness-club ad with women dressed as nuns

BOSTON (CNS) — A representative of women religious in the Boston Archdiocese said an advertisement in Boston Magazine for a fitness center that featured women in habits sketching a nude man was an insult to those in religious life.

"This ad is in such poor taste," said Sister Marian Batho, a member of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet and delegate for religious in the archdiocese.

"It shows a terrible lack of understanding of religious life and what religious life is all about," she said.

The ad ran the same week that the Catholic Church was preparing to celebrate World Day for Consecrated Life, which was Feb. 2.

Titled "Figure drawing," the ad depicts three heavily made-up young women dressed in traditional black-and-white habits who are sketching a nude male model in a pose reminiscent of Michelangelo's "David."

One woman has the skirt of her habit hiked up above one knee. In the background another young woman in a habit peers wide-eyed into the room from behind an iron door grate.

"It is insulting to all women who have chosen this life," Sister Batho said. "How we live and what we do is really the complete opposite of this ad."

The ad, which ran as a two-page spread in the February edition of Boston Magazine, was created by the Minnesota advertising agency Fallon Worldwide to promote Equinox Fitness, a chain of fitness centers that has just opened a branch in Boston.

In a statement issued in response to the sharp criticism, Equinox Fitness defended its advertisement, saying "the ads capture the energy and artistry of the well-conditioned body in a thought-provoking fashion, blending fantasy and impact."

An agency spokeswoman said the women were not nuns, but just "female models wearing black-and-white costumes."

Bill Donohue, president of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, the nation's largest Catholic civil rights organization, said in a statement that Equinox's "patently stupid ad" suggests "the company must hype its edgy image in order to compete."

"That's too bad — apparently their targeted demographic group isn't lured by the prospect of more barbells and fruit bars. Hence, the need to rip off Catholic imagery in a sophomoric soft-porn ad," he said. "Of course, Equinox could have asked Fallon to replace the nuns with Islamic women covered with veils. But that was probably too edgy, even for these trendy types."

Rosemary Abendroth, global communications director for Fallon Worldwide, defended the ad, saying it was one of four ads in a campaign "based on the insight that there are deep and powerful motivations behind why people work out."

"We're not saying they're nuns. They are all models who are dressed in a certain way. It isn't meant to be a religious commentary," she said, speaking by phone from her Minnesota office.

Abendroth referred to the women in the ad as "female models wearing black-and-white costumes," and added: "For those who jumped to the conclusion they were nuns, they should be corrected."

C.J. Doyle, executive director of the Catholic Action League of Massachusetts, called that claim "ludicrous."

"That statement is insulting the intelligence of Catholics. The models are obviously dressed to resemble Catholic nuns in traditional habits," Doyle said.

In a Jan. 12 blog post on AdAge.com, Advertising Age magazine columnist Bob Garfield panned the Equinox campaign, calling it "cheap posing as provocative, sophomoric posing as sophisticated, soft porn posing as self-actualization."

He also said the ad shows that "nobody's religion is too sacred to blaspheme."

Pope: Aim of science to help not same as respect for life

for the Doctrine of the Faith, which held its plenary meeting at the Vatican.

U.S. Cardinal William J. Levada, congregation prefect, told the pope that much of their four-day meeting was devoted to studying several questions related to morality in the field of bioethics.

The cardinal said the study might lead to a new document applying the principles outlined in the 1987 congregation instruction "Donum Vitae" ("The Gift of Life") and Pope John Paul II's 1995 encyclical, "Evangelium Vitae" ("The Gospel of Life").

Since those documents were published, the cardinal said, "the biomedical sciences have made notable progress that, on the one hand, opens up therapeutic possibilities unknown until now, but on the other hand raises ethical problems that were not explicitly considered" in the earlier documents.

"For example," the cardinal said, there are "the questions of cloning, of embryonic stem cells (and) the unresolved situation of thousands of frozen embryos," preserved for implantation but never used.

Pope Benedict told congregation members, "The two fundamental criteria for moral discernment in this field are unconditional respect for the human being as a person from the moment of conception to natural death, (and) respect for the originality of the transmission of human life through the acts proper to spouses."

The pope, who was head of the doctrinal congregation when the two documents were published, said the church was criticized at the time by those who saw the documents as "an obstacle to science and the true progress of humanity."

However, he said, "the new problems connected, for example, to the freezing of human embryos, the reduction of embryos, pre-implant diagnosis, research on embryonic stem cells and attempts at human cloning demonstrate clearly how, with extracorporeal artificial fertilization, a barrier put in place to safeguard human dignity has been breached."

"When human beings in the weakest and most defenseless stage of their existence are selected, abandoned, killed or used as purely 'biological material,' how can one deny that they are not being treated as 'someone,' but as 'something,' putting in question the very concept of human dignity," Pope Benedict said.

The Catholic Church "appreciates and encourages" scientific research aimed at improving human lives, including research using adult stem cells, fertility treatments and research aimed at curing genetic illnesses, he said.

But, the pope said, the church also "feels an obligation to enlighten the consciences of all so that scientific progress truly respects every human being."

Pope Benedict also thanked members of the congregation for the two documents they published in 2007, one clarifying the Catholic Church's teaching that it is the one true church of Christ and another insisting that the Christian obligation to evangelize does not violate its commitment to interreligious dialogue.

The pope said the two documents offered clarifications "necessary for correctly undertaking ecumenical dialogue and dialogue with the religions and cultures of the world."

The document on the church, he said, "confirmed that the one and unique church of Christ has its substance, permanence and stability in the Catholic Church and, therefore, the unity, indivisibility and indestructibility of the church of Christ are not annulled by the separation and division of Christians."

Pope Benedict said the affirmation should not create difficulty for ecumenical dialogue, but rather should help clarify the serious beliefs separating Christians, beliefs that theologians involved in dialogue still must tackle.

The pope said an idea that the one church of Christ is something that lies hidden and only will be revealed at the end of time "can do nothing but generate a slowing of and, ultimately, the paralysis of ecumenism itself."

He said the document on evangelization was needed because of a "persistent religious and cultural relativism" that treats all religions as equally valid paths of salvation.

"The recognition of elements of the truth and goodness in the religions of the world," their openness to dialogue and to collaboration in serving humanity, he said, "cannot be understood as limiting the missionary task of the church, which obliges it to unceasingly proclaim Christ as the way, the truth and the life."

Papal Mass tickets a popular request

Hundreds apply for diocese's limited allotment of tickets to Mass at Yankee Stadium

BY DAVID HAINS
SPECIAL TO
THE CATHOLIC NEWS & HERALD

CHARLOTTE — One of the hottest tickets over the last week in the Diocese of Charlotte was a ticket to the papal Mass in New York.

And having completed a random drawing, the diocese will be distributing its 100 available tickets for the Mass to be celebrated by Pope Benedict XVI at Yankee Stadium April 20, part of his upcoming U.S. visit April 15-20.

The Catholic News & Herald reported Feb. 1 that the Diocese of Charlotte had received an allotment of 100 tickets to the papal Mass. The availability of tickets was first announced to priests in the diocese, then to the secular news media.

Within a few days, more than 700 applicants from 27 states requested more than 1,300 tickets through the Web page set up by the diocese to accept applications.

Applicants were allowed to request one or two tickets. Applications were received from as far away as Massachusetts, Oregon and Hawaii.

When the acceptance window closed Feb. 5, applications were placed in a spreadsheet and assigned a number. A random number generator — a mathematical tool used to select numbers randomly — was utilized to identify the ticket winners.

Winners were notified via e-mail.

For security purposes, the tickets are non-transferable. Ticket winners who could not attend the Mass were asked to inform the diocese so their tickets could be redistributed to others on the list.

The 100 winners will be among the 65,000 people expected to fill Yankee Stadium for the papal Mass.

The pope will be in Washington April 15-17, where he will celebrate Mass April 17 at Nationals Park, which will seat up to 45,000 people for the event. Ticket distribution for that Mass has not been finalized.

"The Archdiocese of Washington has received requests for thousands of tickets to the planned Mass at Nationals stadium," said a statement on the archdiocesan Web site.

"In the past, the custom for major events has been to distribute tickets primarily through our parishes, dioceses and organizations with whom we collaborate in the pastoral care of the local church," it added.

will live the rest of their lives in the Benedictine community at Belmont Abbey.

The monks made their promises before family, friends and students of Belmont Abbey College. Upon Abbot Solari's acceptance of the vows, the congregation responded with a standing ovation.

The two new monks read their own professions. They then each signed their profession on the altar, witnessed by their spiritual directors, Benedictine Fathers Arthur Pendleton and Agostino Fernandez.

At the ceremony's conclusion, the new monks each received a black choir robe, which is a sign of solemn profession, in which each man will be dressed at the time of his burial.

The profession of solemn vows is the final step in a typically four- to five-year formation period.

After entering as postulants, the men spend a year as novitiates, studying monastic practices, church teaching and Scripture, the rule of St. Benedict and Benedictine history.

They then took simple vows and spent the following three years moving more fully into the life and work of the monastic community.

"During that period, we are trying to discern if the monastic life is really for us," said Brother Mancuso. "And, of course, the community is trying to decide if we're for them."

"We are also asking ourselves, 'Do we want to spend the rest of our lives in this community?' he said. "For Brother Anthony and I, the answer is clearly a resounding 'yes.'"

The two men traveled different paths to living and serving at Belmont Abbey.

Born in Meridian, Miss., in 1964, Brother Swofford worked in the gourmet food industry before entering the abbey in 2004.

During his three years in simple vows, he served as an assistant in the monastery's business office, doing most of the shopping for the monastery and supervising the monastery kitchen.

He is pursuing his bachelor's degree in business management at Belmont Abbey College and will graduate in May. As a senior monk, he will become the monastery's procurator.

Born in New York in 1966, Brother Mancuso worked as a graphic designer before entering the monastery in 2004.

He has utilized his computer skills in the college's marketing department, and currently serves as the monastery's "guestmaster," leading tours of the monastery and college grounds. He also works in the campus bookstore, The Catholic Shoppe.

"Belmont Abbey is a place of profound beauty and peace. Praying and working as a monk here has given me the most peace I've ever had," said Brother Mancuso.

"The monks of Belmont Abbey are blessed to have these men become a permanent part of our community," said Abbot Placid in an earlier statement.

The great tripod of Lent

We must accept, follow where the Lord leads us

When I was pondering whether to enroll in a master's program in pastoral studies, my cousin Mary gave me some simple yet solid advice.

Mary had already been through the program, and she knew it was an expensive degree, and that money was a concern.

"If the Lord leads you to it, the Lord will lead you through it," she said.

OK, maybe you don't like catchy little aphorisms, but I do. For one thing, I can remember them easily, and often at their kernel is some profound advice that bears remembering.

So, believing that the Lord was leading me to it, I enrolled and have never been sorry.

During Lent, I would like to pull aside the rich young man of the Gospels — he appears in Matthew, Luke and Mark — and say to him like a wise and firm auntie, "If the Lord leads you to it, the Lord will lead you through it."

The rich young man (Mt 19:16-22) is so very like me, and probably like most of you reading this. He was a good person, and he lived righteously. He could honestly say that he kept the commandments.

My guess is that he also fulfilled the mandates of his Hebrew faith to be generous to the widow and the orphan. He was a solid member of his community.

And now, of his own volition, he sought out Jesus to ask, "What more do I need to do?"

Sadly for him, the answer was more than he was willing to trust himself — or the Lord — with.

✠ "Go and sell your possessions and give the money to the poor. ... Then come, follow me," Jesus said.

So the rich young man went away sad because, Matthew tells us, "he was a man of great wealth."

Don't you love to imagine what happens to the characters in the Gospels as they disappear from the text?

I imagine the rich young man goes home and continues to lead a righteous, comfortable but probably uneventful life. He becomes the Gospel equivalent of the Chamber of Commerce president.

And when he dies, he dies painfully or peacefully with his family all around him in the comfort of his accumulated wealth, but always with a nagging sense of "what if?"

For to how many people in the Gospel did Christ direct individually those magical words, "Come, follow me?"

The young man was privileged to hear them and he turned away.

From what did he turn? Perhaps a life of privation, on the road preaching the good news. Maybe he turned away from martyrdom in the footsteps of Peter and Paul, Stephen and so many others.

For sure he turned away from adventure, from a chance to change lives, from a chance to rub shoulders with the great men and women of the first century. He turned away from a chance to meet death with all his integrity intact.

Mostly he turned away from what the Lord was leading him to.

What is the Lord leading us to this Lent? What's preventing us from following?

Where I am too fond of my accumulated wealth or my time, my addictions to food or drink or television or shopping or fear?

Prayer, penance, charity — that's the great tripod of Lent. Like the three-legged stool, Lent can't stand up unless we honor all three.

What a great chance to ask the Lord sincerely in prayer, "What more can I do?"

And then step with trust into the perhaps life-changing acts of penance and charity through which he will lead us.

Overcoming one of the darkest days in U.S. history

Soon all persons will be acknowledged as equal

On Jan. 22, 2008, many Americans had their eyes focused on the financial markets with considerable anxiety.

Within minutes, the market was down more than 460 points — the largest drop since the twin towers fell on Sept. 11 — before extraordinary short-term action by the Federal Reserve calmed matters down.

As consequential as Jan. 22 was for the economy, the date has even greater salience for American Catholics, and indeed any person of faith.

Thirty-five years before was one of the darkest days in American history, for on that day in 1973 the U.S. Supreme Court had the temerity to presume — for the second time in its history — that it could define the essence of the human person.

The stark memory of this judicial hubris seemed especially poignant this year since by happenstance we honored the memory of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. only a day earlier.

Rev. King's nonviolent courage overcame the dehumanization of the black man and woman that had also been declared by the Supreme Court a century before the abortion ruling.

In dreaming his dream, Rev. King spoke and dreamt for us all. But the victims of what the late Supreme Court Justice Byron White called "an exercise of raw judicial power" have too often not had a voice capable of being heard or a dream capable of being realized.

The voice and dreams of millions of unborn children have not been heard since the court pronounced that state laws limiting the life-taking horror we hide with the term "abortion" were unconstitutional.

And likewise, we have not heard the voice of female citizens who, because of the awful personal circumstances of abuse or inverted cultural pressures or economic troubles like those we are confronting today, contemplate — what in a better world — would be unthinkable.

The state laws dealing with abortion were enacted by the democratic will of the people, and they did not transgress a single word of the Constitution's text. Rather, their asserted invalidity illustrates all too tragically the dangers of judicial activism.

when those who are given the honor of being called "Justice" render to us neither justice nor law, but only personal preference.

To whomever we decide to give the awesome responsibility and privilege of serving as the next U.S. president, let this solemn promise never be breached again: Those appointed to the federal bench shall fully affirm the Declaration of Independence when it proclaims life to be an "unalienable right."

Nearly every year since the court handed down its opinion in "Roe v. Wade," hundreds of thousands of marchers have in song, silence and prayer stood before the Supreme Court building asking for life, and the authentic American Constitution, to be respected.

The 2008 March for Life under veteran organizer Nellie Gray drew large numbers of families as well as high school and college students from around the nation.

The Catholic University of America just a few miles up the road from the Supreme Court is home to many of the marchers every year. They spend the night on the floor of the university's gymnasium or in the halls adjacent to that magnificent Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

As one walks among them, one feels the palpable presence of the Holy Spirit. CUA is a place of serious scholarship and splendid teaching, but no more so than on this day.

In the words of Catholic University's president, Vincentian Father David O'Connell, "Our greatest strength is our Catholic identity, for it gives form and substance, shape and direction to all that we do as a university."

Father O'Connell's words are put into action as thousands step off to march behind a banner proclaiming the 2008 theme: "Build Unity on the Life Principles throughout America. No Exception! No Compromise."

There is indeed reason to hope. Abortion rates are the lowest in 30 years and a December Time magazine poll reveals that more than half of Americans oppose abortion in nearly every circumstance.

A Fox News poll in October showed that 45 percent of Americans want to know a candidate's position on abortion before they vote.

Washington may be broken, and in the matter of abortion it is broken in spirit, but the day when all persons — born and unborn — will be acknowledged as created equal may not be far off.

Living out the works of mercy

DSA is a way to help many in diocese

Several years ago I took a reporter friend with me to Greensboro for a story and photo shoot relating to the Diocesan Support Appeal.

We started the day at a senior center where residents were putting together Christmas gifts for the poor. It was light and cheerful and I remember thinking to myself: "Wow, this is great. They're enjoying one another's company and providing a service that will be a wonderful comfort to those less fortunate."

From there we traveled to a state prison facility just outside Greensboro, where we were met by a member of the prison ministry team.

It was definitely a contrast to the earlier experience at the senior center. We signed in at the office and went into the prison armed with a Bible, notebook, pen and camera. We were actually locked up in a cell and met with the inmates one at a time for Scripture sharing, interviews and photographs.

I was touched by the witnesses of the inmates, testifying to the importance of the Bible study and the weekly visits from the prison ministry team members.

The final leg of our journey took us to an old school building that served as an evening shelter and soup kitchen, where families from St. Pius X Church in Greensboro were volunteering that evening. It was bitter cold and we had to wait outside with everyone else for the doors to open. There I spoke with one homeless man who was hoping to someday reconcile with his family. But that day he just wanted something to eat, a warm coat and a blanket for the night.

Once inside, each person received a meal, one item of clothing and a blanket. It was not an overnight shelter, so with a full belly and something to keep them warm, the homeless left again for the streets.

My reporter friend said, "Wow, Barb, you really know how to show a girl a good time!"

She was being facetious, but to be honest, that day really had quite an impact on me. I thought about Sister Joan Lorraine, my third-grade teacher at Our Lady of the Assumption School in Charlotte, and how she drilled us on the spiritual and corporal works of mercy.

I had a chance to experience so many of them in one eight-hour period — feeding the hungry, giving drink to the thirsty, clothing the naked, sheltering the homeless, visiting the imprisoned, comforting the sorrowful and praying for the living and dead.

Today, as I reflect on these works of mercy, I am drawn to the list of ministries funded in part by the Diocesan Support Appeal — such as, the Catholic Social Service ministries that reach out to those in need of counsel, comfort and basic necessities of life; the diocesan educational ministries that instruct our children, youths and adults on Catholic teachings; the multicultural ministries that provide instruction and outreach to our Hispanic, African American, Hmong and Native American brothers and sisters.

I think of the diocesan housing ministry that helps find shelter for those in need, and the diocesan vocations office that provides formation for our priests and deacons, whose lives will embrace all of the works of mercy.

I know that, as a Catholic, I am called to live the beatitudes and incorporate the works of mercy in my own life. But I may never again have the opportunity to visit the imprisoned. I really don't have the credentials to counsel the doubtful.

So it gives me great satisfaction to know that my contribution to the Diocesan Support Appeal will help fund ministries throughout the Diocese of Charlotte that provide all of these services and much more.

Pope says Lent is time of conversion, return to God

The Pope Speaks

POPE BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Lent is a time to return to God's loving embrace and to remember that true happiness can only come from being a friend of Jesus, Pope Benedict XVI said.

The Lenten journey is a time of conversion which means "letting oneself be overcome by Jesus and with him return to the Father," the pope said during his weekly general audience Feb. 6, Ash Wednesday.

"When modern man declares his total independence from God, he becomes a slave to himself, and often he finds himself inconsolably lonely," Pope Benedict said.

Pope Benedict said he wanted to remind Christians that they are called to "not idolize earthly goods, but to use them as a means for living and helping those in need."

The Lenten journey entails prayer, reflection, penance, sacrifice and works of charity, he said.

By promoting almsgiving, he said the church teaches its flock to be on the lookout for those in need and imitate Christ who made himself poor so others might become rich.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Today, Ash Wednesday, marks the beginning of our annual Lenten journey of prayer and penance.

In the early church, Lent was the time when catechumens prepared for baptism, accompanied by the prayers of the whole Christian community. Today, too, the Lenten season is a privileged moment of conversion and spiritual renewal for the whole church.

The rite of the imposition of ashes is a summons to return to God and, in doing so, to discover authentic freedom and joy. Jesus reminds us that only by "losing" our life will we truly "find" it. Our ultimate fulfillment is found in God alone, who satisfies our deepest longings. By taking up our cross and following the Lord, we experience redemption, inner peace and loving solidarity with our brothers and sisters.

During Lent, in addition to prayer and fasting, the church invites us to practice almsgiving as an expression of our desire to imitate Christ's own self-giving and his generous concern for others.

As we set out once again on this journey of spiritual renewal, may Mary, mother of the church, guide us to a fruitful celebration of Easter. A Blessed Lent to all of you.

Iraqi refugees deserve our attention, help

Catholics can make a difference with humanitarian efforts

I got an e-mail recently from my daughter Mary about some extraordinary people she met who work with Iraqi translators.

These Iraqis were targeted for death by the insurgents in their country because these translators were helpful to the United States. Now they are trying to immigrate to the U.S. — but they have no money.

Mary said some received help from the Education for Peace in Iraq Center. Wanting to know more about this humanitarian organization, I met with its founder, Eric Gustafson, who works continuously to inform Americans about the personal tragedies endured by Iraqis.

I wonder how many in the United States ever think about the people who used to live in their country of Iraq. I wager the answer is very few.

Yet, "four million innocent Iraqi civilians have been displaced by the violence and face an uncertain future," said Gustafson, who served in Iraq during the 1990-1991 Gulf War as a member of the U.S. Army's 864th Engineering Battalion.

"I came away recognizing how disastrous war can be," Gustafson told me.

His experience there led him to "become very active in human rights issues." His first stop, so to speak, was East Timor, when the country was invaded by Indonesia and 250,000 people, mostly Catholics, were brutally killed.

What was largely unknown to the world then, he said, was that Pope John Paul II visited East Timor, helping to put it on the radar. Other influential people such as then-U.S. Secretary of State Madeline Albright and Senator Russell Feingold also instigated U.S. support for East Timor, which became a sovereign state.

Through his work, Gustafson was approached by Catholics seeking to end the humanitarian crisis felt by the first Iraq war.

"I went on a fact-finding mission to Iraq and found such a demoralized society," he said.

"A half-million children under the age of 5 had died. All that galvanized me. I became an advocate for change, and in late 1998 I founded ... the Education for Peace in Iraq Center to aid people uprooted by violence in Iraq," he said.

During that time Gustafson met Lynn Friedrichson, now his wife, who worked for humanitarian aid with Catholic groups. Gustafson also found that the best home for him was the Catholic Church.

He converted and now belongs to St. Aloysius Church in Washington.

EPIC has specific goals, according to Gustafson:

— President Bush needs to stop his silence about the refugee crisis.

— We have to generate more assistance for Syria and Jordan, where one in 10 people are Iraqi refugees straining the resources of these countries.

— Congress needs to fund humanitarian agencies to aid victims in Iraq and to compensate civilians for their extreme losses.

EPIC's supporters have stormed more than 300 House offices and 94 Senate offices with a call for Congress to assist and protect Iraqi refugees. They continue to build support for Oregon Congressman Earl Blumenauer's Responsibility to Iraqi Refugees Act.

"To walk away and ignore Iraq is not an option," says Gustafson.

Responding with humanity and hope

CRS worker says agencies won't evacuate amid rising tension in Kenya

BY FRANCIS NJUGUNA
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NAIROBI, Kenya — A church aid worker said Catholic aid agencies in Kenya will not evacuate their staff, but he expressed concern over the increasing insecurity across the country.

"We will continue to keep a close eye on security issues and take action accordingly," said Ken MacLean, Kenya country representative for the U.S. bishops' Catholic Relief Services.

MacLean told Catholic News Service Jan. 30 that "CRS has staff members monitoring the situation in four of the most affected towns — Kisumu, Nakuru, Eldoret and Kericho."

Insecurity is at times preventing field visits, he said. But CRS, Caritas Kenya and the Catholic Agency for Overseas Development will not evacuate their workers, he said.

CAFOD is the aid agency of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of England and Wales; Caritas Kenya is the local affiliate of Caritas Internationalis, an international umbrella group of Catholic aid agencies.

MacLean added that the Interreligious Forum, with which the Catholic aid groups work, has recommended strongly the implementation of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission with the aim of addressing the underlying issues related to the violence.

"We ask Kenyans to choose peace and patience as the country's leaders resolve the political crisis," he said.

More than 1,000 people have died and more than 304,000 have been forced from their homes since the Dec. 27 presidential election; international observers claimed the election was rigged.

Although some media have reported the violence is related to ethnic tensions, many Kenyans say the violence is related to an economic divide.

In a Jan. 29 statement, CRS said the U.S. Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance committed more than $2.8 million for emergency relief and reconciliation activities.

"Relief efforts will reach an estimated 190,000 people, with CRS working directly with church partners and local dioceses to carry out the response as well as coordinating efforts with other international aid agencies and local community-based organizations," CRS said.

Bishop Cornelius Arap Korir of Eldoret told CNS he was concerned with the reported escalation of the violence.

"The humanitarian response from both the Christian and secular world has been very positive. We can at this juncture only hope that this will continue until we are through with this exercise of feeding and caring for the needy," he said.

Peter Kimeu, CRS' regional technical adviser for partnership, global solidarity and justice, said:

"The violence must stop now, and President Mwai Kibaki and opposition leader Raila Odinga are key to stopping this violence. They must each reach out to their followers and demand an immediate end to all violent acts."

Kimeu told CNS Jan. 30, "These two leaders must also take extreme care in their statements, choosing words that can pave a road toward peace instead of inciting Kenyans with new questions, frustrations, anger and resulting violence."

Kimeu expressed hope that political leaders and their mediation teams would be truly committed to the peaceful resolution of Kenya's crisis. Former U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan has been working with both sides.

In keeping with Pope Benedict's suggestion to honor St. Paul in this his anniversary year of 2008, we will present FIVE TALKS on St. Paul by FIVE different speakers.

'A march without end'

Catholics take part in annual Rev. King celebration

ATLANTA — It was a weekend for reflection as well as looking toward the future.

Eighty-four Catholics from churches around the Diocese of Charlotte participated in the Martin Luther King Jr. celebration in Atlanta, Ga.,
Jan. 19-20.

The trip was part of the Diocese of Charlotte's annual Rev. King celebration, sponsored by the diocesan
African American Affairs
Ministry. The trip also included visits to the Martin Luther King Jr. National Historic Site and Lyke House, the Catholic center at Atlanta University Center.

"It was a successful program that the African American Affairs Ministry can be proud to have sponsored," said Sandy
Murdock, director of the diocesan

Lourdes bishop says
Mary sought devotion

New artwork going up in downtown church

CHARLOTTE — You can't keep good art down.

It was February 2002 when the central portion of a fresco fell in St. Peter Church in uptown Charlotte. For more than a decade, the artwork — with scenes depicting Christ's agony and resurrection — had become well-known beyond its parish walls and was considered by many as an integral artistic contribution to the Charlotte community.

Six years later, the church has installed a new painting and has brought an artistic depiction of Christ and his teachings back to uptown Charlotte.

A large painting of Christ and St. Peter now resides

Breaking down marriage

Bishops' survey looks at Catholics' practices, views on marriage

Although nearly three-quarters of American Catholics say they are somewhat or very familiar with church teachings on marriage, a survey by the U.S. bishops indicates many are mistaken on certain church teachings, such as divorce.

MONASTIC ACCOMMODATIONS

Benedictine Sister Linda Campbell escorts New England Patriots fans Clint Mills Jr. and Clint Mills III from their guest room at Our Lady of Guadalupe Monastery and Retreat Center in Phoenix Feb. 1. The Millses and 18 other football fans found lodging at the monastery for the Feb. 3 Super Bowl in nearby Glendale, Ariz.

Benedictine sisters score needed funds during Super Bowl

PHOENIX (CNS) — While the NFL and advertisers used Super Bowl XLII as a chance to increase profits, some Benedictine sisters in Phoenix used the big game as an opportunity to further the work of the Catholic Church in spreading the Gospel.

By turning their Our Lady of Guadalupe Monastery and Retreat Center into an affordable hotel for football fans, the sisters raised much-needed funds for expansion, increased awareness of and promoted religious life, and established vocation and retreat contacts.

Sister Linda Campbell, prioress of the monastery and a season ticket holder for the Arizona Cardinals, knew football fans would appreciate the 3.5-mile drive from the Phoenix monastery to the Super Bowl at the stadium in Glendale.

The sisters opened their 10 retreat rooms — that feature twin beds, a shared bathroom and no TV or phone — to 20 fans, who filled the rooms.

The football fans — who included a blend of New England Patriots and New York Giants fans — got a decent deal on a room and the sisters raised $10,000. Their income stemmed from lodging fees and raffle tickets for a large, flat-screen TV to be given away Feb. 24.

The sisters treated them to a welcome dinner and a continental breakfast each morning. They also had access to a full kitchen, a cozy living room, a large backyard and a small chapel, where some of the guests attended Mass before the big game.

During his homily at the Mass, Father David Donnay likened the beatitudes to a pre-game pep talk. He said just like a coach huddles his players, Jesus probably gathered his disciples and talked to them about how to spread the Gospel.

"If they can come away with a really positive experience about religious life, I couldn't ask for anything better," Sister Campbell said about the guests.

They seemed to enjoy themselves, saying the game was secondary to their experience at the monastery.

The money will help pay what the sisters owe for land they purchased nearby. The two sisters and an associate living at the monastery have outgrown the current property.

The new land will ultimately expand the monastery's services. The Benedictine sisters offer meeting and retreat space, spiritual direction and a weekly Mass.

The sisters' Super Bowl offer also put them in touch with a retreat contact and helped them get 10 national retreat commitments.

"We've gotten a vocation contact out of it" as well, Sister Campbell said.

A California woman had been researching convents and saw the sisters' Super Bowl lodging on TV. The young woman now wants to go through further discernment with the Benedictine sisters' oblate program.

Church across street from sugar plant explosion becomes triage center

WASHINGTON (CNS) — After an explosion ripped through the Imperial Sugar refinery in the Savannah, Ga., suburb of Port Wentworth the night of Feb. 7, Father Michael Kavanaugh knew it would be a long night.

"I opened the church and turned on all the lights, and opened the parish hall and turned on all the lights, because I just knew there was going to be a crowd," he said.

"And there was," said the priest, who is pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church.

The church is directly across the street from the plant.

The church's front lawn served as a triage center for refinery workers injured in the blast.

No exact count had been made, but an estimated 95-100 people were believed working in the plant when the explosion occurred.

Six people had been unaccounted for the morning after the blast, and CNN reported at midday Feb. 8 that authorities had found three bodies.

Father Kavanaugh said he was writing thank you notes for his birthday party at the time of the explosion.

"It knocked me off my chair," he said.

After calling parishioners who lived on either side of the Imperial refinery to see whether they were all right — they were — the priest and some parishioners who had come by to see the fire that engulfed the plant set out to welcome the injured and family members.

Helicopters landed at a public school's football field behind Our Lady of Lourdes Church to take some of the injured to hospitals.

Officials suspected sugar dust, which can be volatile, as the cause of the explosion.

FROM THE VATICAN

Lent means following Jesus, taking responsibility for sin, says pope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — To enter into Lent is to get serious about taking responsibility for one's own sinfulness and about following Jesus, especially in caring for the poor, Pope Benedict XVI said.

Lent, the pope said, is "a time of particular commitment in the spiritual battle against the evil present in the world, in each of us and around us."

Pope Benedict spoke about the meaning of Lent at his Feb. 10 midday Angelus prayer, just a few hours before beginning a weeklong retreat. During the week, all papal audiences are canceled.

The pope said Lent is a time "to look evil in the face and prepare to battle against its effects and especially against its causes, to the point of the ultimate cause, which is Satan. It means not blaming the problem of evil on others, on society or on God, but recognizing one's own responsibility."

The only effective way to face sin is to be serious about following Jesus, who conquered sin through his suffering, death and resurrection, the pope said.

"The way of the cross is, in fact, the only path that leads to the victory of love over hatred, sharing over selfishness, peace over violence," he said.

The pope had met Feb. 9 with members of the Italian federation of directors of retreats and spiritual exercises.

He said that while there are a growing number of initiatives that offer people a spiritual experience, not enough people take the multiple days necessary to enter into the deep silence and prayer, Scripture reading and spiritual direction that spiritual exercises offer.

Time, quiet and guidance are needed to help a person progress in the process of "the purification of heart, the conversion of life (and) the following of Christ," he said.

MURPHY — Rev. Ben Bushyhead of the Eastern Cherokee will lead the reflection at an ecumenical Lenten service 12-12:30 p.m. March 5 at St. William Church, 765 Andrews Rd. The service is designed to strengthen ecumenical bonds within the community. For more information, call Joan Kennedy at (828) 837-8519.

Vatican's U.N. rep says economic policies must protect the poor

UNITED NATIONS (CNS) — As the world waits to see the extent of the global economic damage provoked by the U.S. mortgage crisis, national and international policies must protect low-income families and the working poor, said the Vatican's observer at the United Nations.

Archbishop Celestino Migliore spoke Feb. 7 at a meeting of the Economic and Social Council of the U.N. Commission for Social Development.

The archbishop said the cycle of economic growth and job creation followed by recession and job losses seems to be accelerating, straining individuals, governments and international economic partners that are not used to changing course quickly.

"At this very moment, with bated breath the world wonders where the ongoing financial woes provoked by the crisis in the real estate sector in some of the most developed economies would lead us," he said.

In the current crisis, the archbishop said, the international community must find ways "to protect low-income families and workers from financial collapse."

"Assisting them is a question of justice and solidarity, but it is also a financially sound measure to stimulate national economies and international trade," he said.

Archbishop Migliore said it is the task of the U.N. commission to work to ensure that the world's biggest economic powers do not enact policies that help their economies recover while ignoring or damaging the economies of the world's poorest nations.

"The Holy See wishes to recall that the compelling needs of the poor have a priority claim on our conscience and on the choices financial leaders make," he said.

"Economic policies that help low-income working people live dignified, decent lives should be a priority of any good society worthy of the name," the archbishop said.

Church's stolen statue of angel weighing 350 pounds is recovered

DETROIT (CNS) — Angels may have wings, but 350-pound angels are expected to stay put.

A bronze angel statue was returned to Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary Church in northeast Detroit Feb. 5 after having been missing for about a week and a half.

"Needless to say, we're happy to have it back," Father Ed Perrone, pastor.

The statue had been stolen from its place as part of a fountain in a floral garden in the parish cemetery at least as long ago as Jan. 25. Local TV stations and newspapers carried a story about it.

A member of the parish checked with area scrap metal dealers and found one that acknowledged having been offered the statue. But guessing correctly that it was probably stolen, the dealer refused the statue but was unable to provide any clue as to what might have become of it.

Media coverage led to the statue's recovery, when someone called the parish to report having seen it in an alley about a half-mile away. The thieves had either abandoned it or at least parked it there while searching for a buyer.

Another person then volunteered to take a truck and work crew and haul it back to the church.

"So, it's back, perfectly intact. It's dirty, but there doesn't seem to be any damage to it," said Father Perrone, who will have the statue blessed again once it is reinstalled, given what it has been through.

Overseas outreach

Knights of Columbus recognized for helping evacuate family from Iraq

CHARLOTTE — A U.S. flag that had flown in Baghdad is now in the care of local Knights of Columbus.

Jerry Senatore, a Knight of Columbus St. Matthew Council 10852, presented Grand Knight Richard White with the flag during a council meeting in Charlotte Jan. 27.

The flag had flown over the FBI's Baghdad operations center Sept. 11, 2007. It was presented in gratitude for the council's donations to help evacuate an Iraqi family to safety in Jordan in 2007.

"Above all else, the Knights of Columbus' number one mission is charity," said White. "We are honored and grateful to have been able to help this family in any small way possible."

Senatore, an FBI agent and training coordinator for the FBI Charlotte office, recently returned from his second rotation in Iraq.

There, he explained, his unit met an Iraqi widow and her two young children and nephew living in a mud-brick hut in a narrow strip of land between the Green Zone and the Tigris River, just outside the infamous Sadr City.

With violence mounting in the area, the unit determined the only viable solution was to evacuate them to a refugee camp in Aman, Jordan. The unit worked for weeks to obtain the necessary clearances and raise funds for the family's transportation and expenses.

Senatore e-mailed members of his Knights council, who responded immediately. They wired the requested funds to Iraq.

At last report, the family was doing well in Jordan.

White said he and his fellow Knights were proud of Senatore's actions in Iraq.

"To hear Jerry speak of his mission in Iraq, the dedication of our troops and the hardships faced on a daily basis by them and the Iraqi people was truly awe inspiring," said White.

"It is good to know we have people like Jerry doing their best to assist our Armed Forces and at the same time providing voluntary humanitarian aid to the people of Iraq," he said.

The Knights of Columbus is a Catholic fraternal organization founded in the United States in 1882.

New art goes up in downtown Charlotte church

behind the altar.

"We are very pleased with it, and the people seem very pleased," said Father Joseph Sobierajski, pastor of St. Peter Church.

The painting by Texas artist John Collier was inspired from a scene in the Gospel of John and depicts Peter begging for forgiveness for his earlier denial of Jesus. Around them, fishermen pull their harvest from a river.

"We asked him to do something on John 21 because we feel that 'feed my lambs, feed my sheep' is the mission of our parish," said Father Sobierajski.

The painting blends traditional and modern elements. Father Sobierajski said the artwork has received positive responses from most who have seen it, but it has also invited some questions about its images and meaning.

Father Sobierajski sees that as a teaching moment.

"Overall, it's a very effective painting," he said.

Collier was one of 100 artists invited to submit proposals to replace the fresco.

"Overall, it's a very effective painting."

— Father Joseph Sobierajski

"We liked his concept. He has a good grasp of Catholic liturgy," said Father Sobierajski.

The award-winning Collier was chosen from more than 30 artists to be the chief sculptor for the Catholic memorial at Ground Zero. His work is permanently installed at St. Joseph's Chapel, adjacent to Ground Zero in New York.

Collier began his work in St. Peter Church two years ago. Soon, two reliefs — sculpted artworks with modeled forms projecting from a flat background — also crafted by Collier will be positioned on either side of the painting.

Once installed, the parish plans to officially dedicate the new artwork. Collier will be on hand to discuss his work.

A new painting in St. Peter Church in Charlotte, seen in this Feb. 11 photo, will soon be flanked by two reliefs — sculpted artworks with modeled forms projecting from a flat background.

Fallen fresco

It was the morning of Feb. 20, 2002, one hour shy of midday Mass, when the fresco's central portion crashed down and left a parish community in mourning.

Father Sobierajski likened the fresco to "an old friend whom you see every time you come to church, and we are going to truly miss its presence."

Completed in 1989 by artist Ben Long, the fresco was painted directly into wet plaster on the church wall. It had become "a landmark on the southern end of Tryon Street for visitors," said Father Sobierajski.

With scenes depicting Jesus' Agony in the Garden, the Resurrection of Christ, and Pentecost, the parish with its fresco provided a place of solace against the backdrop of the vibrant city streets.

Efforts were made to preserve the larger pieces of the fallen fresco. The cause of the fresco's collapse has never been determined.

African American Affairs Ministry.

The Atlanta celebration, sponsored by the Archdiocese of Atlanta's Office for Black Catholic Ministry, was themed "Guide Our Feet into the Way of Peace."

Archbishop Wilton D. Gregory of Atlanta said the theme reflects Catholics' duty to continue Rev. King's message of freedom and equality.

"This work is a pilgrimage, an ongoing procession, a march without end," said Archbishop Gregory. "Our duty is to deliver this message, suffused with the blood and sweat of all those who have labored for its ideal in the past, as a vital component in the aspirations of every succeeding generation."

Archbishop Gregory was the principal celebrant for the Mass honoring Rev. King's life and legacy in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception Jan. 19.

"To make Dr. King's dream a reality, we must continue to strive for equality and justice, have faith in Jesus Christ, spread love among ourselves and forge beyond the bigotry and prejudices," said Murdock. "We must embrace the differences of the world with continued work for peace and goodwill."

On Jan. 20, the group visited the Martin Luther King Jr. National Historic Site. The site consists of several buildings surrounding Rev. King's boyhood home in Atlanta, including Ebenezer Baptist Church, where Rev. King pastored.

The group then visited Lyke House, the Catholic center at Atlanta University Center, a consortium that serves the city's historically black institutions.

It emphasizes Christianity's African roots. Mass in its 230-seat chapel starts with an African drum call. Its cruciform shape models one of the oldest Catholic churches in Africa.

"The Lyke House is a wonderful example of Catholic outreach totally encompassed in African and African-American symbolism and culture available to our college students through campus ministry — a haven in the midst of the vast university system," said Murdock.

Murdock said she hoped those in the group would be "inspired to enhance their spiritual journeys through the experience of being with other black Catholics and black Catholic clergy." And, she said, that they recognized "we are unified in our struggles, our challenges and our accomplishments."

The African American Affairs Ministry is funded in part by contributions to the Diocesan Support Appeal.

Living the legacy

Youth minister receives award for humanitarian efforts

HIGH POINT — Terril "Terry" Aiken's tireless work to bring people together has garnered him some profound recognition.

Aiken, youth minister at Immaculate Heart of Mary Church in High Point, received the 2008 Humanitarian Award from the High Point Human Relations Commission. The award was presented during the commission's annual Martin Luther King Jr. celebration in Andrews High School's auditorium Jan. 20.

Nine High Point high school students, including one in Aiken's youth ministry group, also received awards from the commission for their humanitarian efforts.

Aiken was nominated by parishioners of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, and was one of 17 people nominated this year.

"I didn't know anything about it until they made the announcement," he said. "It's been pretty surreal and unbelievable."

The award recognizes local citizens who have continued Rev. King's legacy of quality and justice for all.

Paul Siceloff, commission chairman, said Aiken, had risen "above and beyond the call of duty" to "use his talents to make his church, community and world a better place for all people."

"My efforts have been to work to help bridge gaps in the community and to improve relations within the city," said Aiken, who views Rev. King's legacy as his inspiration.

National Conference on Community and Justice and nationally with projects such as World Youth Day and Alliance of Youth.

Michelle Murphy, a member of the Immaculate Heart of Mary Church youth group, is following Aiken's example. A senior at High Point Central High School, Murphy also was recognized by the commission, which presents an award to a student from each high school in the city who best exemplifies the spirit of human relations.

Aiken believes everyone has an obligation to help others. "It's the work we all should be doing. We should be making a difference," he said.

The award, he said, will help open doors for him in his efforts.

"It will allow me to continue championing the legacy of Dr. King," he said.

Workshop explores theory, history of music

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ARDEN — From “do-re-mi” to Gregorian chants, the music recently studied at St. Barnabas Church in Arden was as diverse as those studying it.

Representatives from Catholic, Protestant and Jewish faiths met Jan. 26 for “Anatomy of Music,” a workshop presented by Tiffany Gallozzi, music director at St. Barnabas Church.

The group consisted of choir members, instrumentalists and those who had little musical background but wanted to learn more about the components and history of music.

The workshop spanned from basic theory to musical notes and their value, meter, pitch, rhythm and key.

“Music is written to get to your emotion,” said Gallozzi.

“You don’t even have to understand it. Music should be a crossover between our tangible and intangible worlds,” she said.

Gallozzi shared her experience with liturgical music.

“Church music is supposed to stylistically focus on the Mass,” she said. “Mass music should focus on the Eucharist.”

New church music, she said, is to be written in a way that reflects the history of the Catholic Church.

Gallozzi said she wanted participants to understand the music and its history to perform and sing it better.

After some practice in the afternoon, both experienced and novice singers were able to come together in harmony.

Over the next few months, Gallozzi hopes to continue and hold workshops on meter, counting, rhythm and music appreciation.

St. Barnabas Church has several choirs, including one devoted to Gregorian chant, which was the mainstay of liturgical music in the Latin Church from the ninth century to the middle of the 20th century.

Lourdes bishop says Mary sought devotion to Jesus

Lourdes, a statue of Mary stands on the right side and the altar for the Eucharist is at the center, he said, because the Eucharist is the center of devotion.

"The mission of Lourdes is to be a school of prayer, a place where it is easy, natural to pray," said Bishop Perrier.

Mary brought St. Bernadette to Jesus, said the bishop, noting that during the apparitions Mary was preparing the young St. Bernadette to receive her first Communion.

St. Bernadette initially was not allowed to receive her first Communion because she did not know her catechism well enough. The book was in French and St. Bernadette spoke the local dialect only.

However, St. Bernadette finally received the sacrament between the 17th and 18th apparitions.

The Lourdes jubilee year — which began Dec. 8, the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and runs until this Dec. 8 — marks the 150th anniversary of the Marian apparitions to St. Bernadette.

Welcoming the estimated 50,000 pilgrims, Bishop Perrier said that no one is excluded at Lourdes.

He said the Jubilee Way, the special anniversary pilgrimage in Lourdes of sites related to St. Bernadette's life, begins at the parish church, where St. Bernadette was baptized, and ends where St. Bernadette received her first Communion.

All of the Jubilee Way is in preparation for the Eucharist, said Bishop Perrier, who, like the tens of thousands of pilgrims thronging the streets of Lourdes for the feast day, wore a souvenir medallion marking his participation in the Jubilee Way pilgrimage.

The bishop said that when Mary appeared to St. Bernadette, Mary was smiling and laughing. Lourdes is a place of happiness and confidence, but also of penance and a difficult stage of conversion, he said.

Among the crowd at Mass was Anne Bisschop, 20, who was with a group of 200 youths from the international Community of the Cenacle.

The community provides care for young men and women from around the world who are suffering from drug addictions, depression, eating disorders and "people who need a new experience," said Bisschop, from Belgium, who voluntarily entered the community with a drug addiction five months ago.

Bisschop told Catholic News Service the community is "a school for life" that changes "our life with our religion."

On the outskirts of the Mass grounds, Sinead Boyle of Louth, Ireland, stood with her father on the lines for the baths, the waters of Lourdes said to give strength and healing.

She told CNS that she went to the baths the day before, but was willing to wait in line for at least the three hours until the baths opened to submerge in the chilly waters again.

Father Niall O'Leary of Holy Family Parish in Pasadena, Calif., was walking through the crowds of pilgrims leaving Mass and wishing "Happy feast day" to one another.

The priest was carrying the Eucharist from the Mass to give to a 93-year-old man who was too sick to attend. Father O'Leary told CNS the man's 19-year-old granddaughter brought him to Lourdes to participate in a 50-member pilgrimage from southern California.

Meanwhile, Pope Benedict XVI said in his Feb. 10 Angelus address at the Vatican that the message of Lourdes reminds the faithful to pray and do penance.

The pope said he promised to pray for all sick people during his annual Lenten retreat, which began the evening of Feb. 10.

Poverty, humility defined life of St. Bernadette Soubirous

LOURDES, France (CNS) — St. Bernadette Soubirous was 14 years old, poor, illiterate and did not know the catechism enough to make her first Communion when Mary appeared to her in the grotto at Lourdes.

Though St. Bernadette lived in poverty, she was born into a family with comfortable means.

Her mother, Louise, and father, Francois, took ownership of her grandfather's mill outside Lourdes, a small town of about 4,000 people in the Pyrenees Mountains.

The family was living comfortably when St. Bernadette was born in the Boly Mill Jan. 7, 1844. She was the first of nine children.

But times got bad for the family. In April 1845, St. Bernadette's younger brother died. He was the first of five of the family's children who would die in childhood. Three years later, St. Bernadette's father lost his eye in a work accident. Eventually, the family lost the mill and their money due to poor business decisions.

By 1854 Francois Soubirous was a day laborer and Louise Soubirous was working, but the money was not enough. They gave up St. Bernadette, first as a servant to her aunt, then to help on a farm outside Lourdes.

In 1857, the family could no longer pay rent and sought shelter from one of Louise's cousins, who offered the bottom floor of his house — a former town jail, or a cachot. That same year, St. Bernadette's father was falsely accused of stealing and was imprisoned.

for catechism classes in 1858. On Feb. 11 that year, St. Bernadette, her sister and a friend went looking for wood. As she was taking off her stockings and shoes to cross a canal, she heard a gust of wind and saw a young woman dressed in white. That was the first of 18 Marian apparitions.

But St. Bernadette shunned the attention that followed. She sought seclusion and entered religious life with the Sisters of Charity and Christian Instruction at Nevers, France.

She remained hidden from the world and died in 1879 of tuberculosis of the bone. She was canonized in 1933.

Her body is incorrupt and venerated at the altar of the Nevers convent.

Father John Putnam, judicial vicar and pastor of Sacred Heart Church in Salisbury, incenses the altar and a statue of Our Lady of Lourdes during a prayer service Feb. 9. The prayer service was to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Mary's appearance to St. Bernadette Soubirous near Lourdes, France, and to give participants the plenary indulgence authorized by Pope Benedict XVI to encourage renewed holiness and devotion.

A plenary indulgence is the remission of all punishment. Catholics can receive the plenary indulgence for taking part in any public or private devotion to Our Lady of Lourdes, according to U.S. Cardinal J. Francis Stafford, head of the Apostolic Penitentiary, a Vatican court dealing with indulgences and matters of conscience.

Each year, millions flock to Lourdes seeking physical, spiritual help

BY REGINA LINSKEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

LOURDES, France — Every year, more than 6 million people — including about 500,000 American Catholics — travel to Lourdes, ask for healing and forgiveness, and often leave with a bottle of holy water.

But without the spiritual and historical context, such journeys and their traditions can seem odd.

Pilgrimages are as old as worship, according to Ann Ball, author of the "Encyclopedia of Catholic Devotions and Practices." Prehistoric man felt the need to visit where his gods lived, the early Christians felt the need to visit where Jesus lived and the tradition continued, Ball said in the book.

Father Jeffrey Keefe, spiritual director of Our Lady of Lourdes Hospitality North American Volunteers, told Catholic News Service people participate in such pilgrimages because of a special devotion to Mary, and they often take a problem — physical, spiritual or with relationships — and offer it up to God at places "known to have good effects."

The New York-based Catholic organization recruits and organizes English-speaking volunteers and pilgrims for trips to the famous Lourdes' grotto, where Mary appeared to St. Bernadette Soubirous 150 years ago.

The 13th time Mary appeared to St. Bernadette Mary asked her to tell the priests that people should come to Lourdes and that a chapel should be built.

The first Marian procession took place May 12, 1858, and construction of the chapel began in 1862, the year the local bishop recognized the authenticity of the apparitions.

In 1866, two years after the first local pilgrimage from Loubajac, France, a railway was built connecting Lourdes to the rest of the country. In 1874, the first international pilgrims arrived from Belgium.

Today, people come from around the world to pray at the sanctuaries and visit the important sites related to St. Bernadette's life and her 18 Marian apparitions. And many pilgrims also take home a bottle of water from the Massabielle grotto, where Mary showed St. Bernadette a muddy spring and asked her to drink from it.

Lourdes is also a place where the sick and disabled visit to be healed. Sick pilgrims can stay at Accueil Notre-Dame, a sort of hotel-hospital, where each bed has an alarm bell and each unit has a doctor on call.

The Sanctuaries of Our Lady of Lourdes are nestled within the city. The churches are carved out of the Pyrenees Mountains, stacked above and below the grotto like a sandwich.

Outside St. Michael's Gate — the pathway connecting the sanctuaries to the rest of the city — narrow, winding streets are filled with shops selling Catholic trinkets.

Although Mary did not specifically tell St. Bernadette in the apparitions to welcome the sick to Lourdes, the city has become a center for those seeking physical and mental healing as well as spiritual growth.

Marked by painted handicap signs on the pavement, lanes designated solely for those in wheelchairs line a pilgrim-packed narrow street around the city.

Several pilgrims said Feb. 10 that in the busy summer season, the streets are filled with people in wheelchairs and on stretchers as they are guided by volunteers to the important sites connected to St. Bernadette.

In the late-evening hours, tens of thousands of people from around the world throng the sanctuaries with candles in hand for the rosary procession. The people slowly snake around the Marian churches, illuminating the sanctuaries with flickering light.

The Catholic Church recognizes as miracles 67 cures attributed to Mary's intercession at Lourdes. Father Keefe said there are probably thousands more.

But the most important miracles of Lourdes are the growth and spiritual changes people have there, Father Keefe told CNS.

This year is particularly important as Catholics around the world celebrate Lourdes' jubilee year, which began Dec. 8, the feast of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and runs until this Dec. 8.

Different events — such as a joint Catholic-Anglican pilgrimage — are planned for the year, and Pope Benedict XVI authorized a plenary indulgence, the remission of all punishment, to encourage renewed devotion.

Three worthy volumes offer spiritual fare for retreats or daily life

REVIEWED BY MITCH FINLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Double-dog dare you to read the long first paragraph of Barbara Beckwith's "Joan of Arc: God's Warrior — A Seven-Day Retreat," based on the famous French saint, and be able to put it down.

Here it is:

"Joan of Arc continues to fascinate us centuries after her life and death. She is a bundle of contradictions: simple yet sublime, an illiterate peasant who held at bay the powerful and learned, a mystic whose earthy response to her visions was to inspire an army, a girl soldier who remained a virgin, a feminist long before the women's movement, a political prisoner who remained resolute yet wavered at critical times, a fiercely independent pawn of historical forces beyond her control, a glorious military hero who ended up a failure, betrayed by her friends and burned at the stake by her enemies."

Author Beckwith, managing editor of St. Anthony Messenger magazine, guides the reader through seven days with St. Joan (1412-1431), each day with its own theme. These include "Listening to Mystical Voices," "Expanding Gender Roles," "Trusting in God" and "Battling the Church."

Each "day" includes meditations and prayers on the theme for the day, drawing on secondary sources about St. Joan of Arc. Enriching the content of the book are the author's many visits to sites in France associated with her subject.

This is a book that will lend itself beautifully to any actual retreat, of course. But anyone willing to set aside 30 minutes for seven days will find that this book will give his or her faith and spirituality an invigorating shot in the arm.

Of course, anyone is free to simply read Beckwith's book, and such readers may find themselves wanting to read it more than once. It's an ideal book for reading groups and book clubs, as well.

Similarly, in his "St. Paul: Called to Conversion — A Seven-Day Retreat," Sulpician Father Ronald Witherup provides seven days' worth of material that focuses on Paul as a guide in the ongoing conversion that lies at the center of the Christian life.

Following an excellent introduction to Paul and his writings, the material for each day includes reflections, prayers and excerpts from the Pauline texts.

Father Witherup is provincial superior of the U.S. province of the Society of St. Sulpice, and formerly he was a professor of sacred Scripture and academic dean at St. Patrick Seminary in Menlo Park, Calif.

His obvious skills include, however, an ability to discuss the writings of St. Paul in ways that the average reader will appreciate.

This isn't a Scripture study resource, of course, but rather a book to use in retreat and other spiritual enrichment contexts.

One of the fine things about a book such as this one is that it presents its material in ways that bring together the insights of Scripture studies and uses them to nourish in the reader a spirit of prayerfulness. This is a book that anyone will appreciate who wants to both understand St. Paul better and nourish his or her spirituality.

Most who make retreats at Trappist monasteries come away from the experience with more than enough in heart and mind to write a book, if they were of a mind to do so.

C. William Claassen, author of "Another World: A Retreat in the Ozarks," was of a mind to do so, and the result is a book that both Catholics and those otherwise oriented will appreciate and enjoy.

Claassen, apparently a spiritual seeker for many years, spent retreat time at Assumption Abbey, one of the most remote Trappist monasteries in the United States, located in the foothills of the Ozark Mountains of southern Missouri.

Chronicling the daily life of the monastery, and adding his own observations and reflections, Claassen also shares with the reader the results of interviews he conducted with individual monks.

"Another World" is, among the countless books published each year, a standout volume, a wonderful book that deserves countless readers.

Encounters with Jesus reveal much about ourselves

BY JEFF HEDGLEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

I was 26 when my mother died after a two-year battle with cancer. This event in my young life was traumatic, to say the least, but it was not marked with tears.

This surprised me. When she was diagnosed I was sad but didn't cry; I chalked that up to hoping for the best. I figured I would cry if things got worse.

In time, things got worse, and still I did not cry. This time I brushed it off saying I would cry at the funeral. The funeral came and went and still no tears flowed.

Though I was young and a man, I figured it was OK to cry at my mother's funeral, and the fact that I did not caused me to worry. I sought help from a counselor.

My experience in counseling was the second most important event in my life besides my conversion to Jesus. With the help of my counselor, I discovered that my emotions had been buried.

Week after week they were slowly excavated, and soon a more whole me was revealed, a person with a shelf full of wide-ranging emotions, not just humor and anger.

Lent is a time of discovery, renewal, sacrifice, sorrow and most of all healing. Healing waters await the catechumenate at the Easter Vigil, and the waters of our baptism continue to penetrate our lives, gradually weathering away all the sin that covers our true selves.

It is such a moment that finds Jesus at Jacob's well giving living water to the Samaritan woman.

True to form, Jesus cuts to the heart of the matter and reaches into the deepest recesses of the woman, revealing past hurt and the effects that linger still.

Instead of condemnation, Jesus offers healing. Instead of death, he offers life in the form of living water.

Through my counselor, Jesus told me everything I needed to hear, and this gave birth to a well of tears, living water that still flows today. Yet I know Jesus has more for me.

So I stand next to the woman at the well saying "Sir, give me this water, so that I may not be thirsty."

Questions:

How has the living water of Jesus quenched your thirst? What have your encounters with Jesus revealed about you?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"Whoever drinks the water I shall give will never thirst; the water I shall give will become in him a spring of water welling up to eternal life" (John 4:14).

LA CROSSE, Wis. — First there was YouTube. Then there was GodTube. Now there's Catholic-Tube.

Streaming video is all the rage on the Internet, and some people are starting to realize how valuable a tool this technology can be in reaching out to young Catholics.

If St. Augustine were alive today, he "would have done his 'Confessions' in video and streamed it on the Internet," said Travis Boudreaux, the tech-savvy Louisiana Catholic who founded Catholic-Tube.com several months ago.

On his Catholic-Tube blog, Boudreaux posts daily some of what he considers the best Catholic videos and podcasts uploaded to major sites such as YouTube.com and GodTube.com, as well as smaller Catholic operations such as LoveToBeCatholic.com and SQPN.com.

A veteran Web watcher, Boudreaux believes that video is the future of the Internet.

"There will always be room for audio and the written word, but video provides a dynamic that's not there otherwise," he said.

"Imagine if you could see St. Augustine's emotion. There's so much that's lost without voice inflection and hand gestures," he said.

YouTube.com was created in 2005 and was bought by Google Inc. in October 2006. According to Alexa.com's statistical analysis, YouTube is currently the third most frequented Web site on the Internet.

On YouTube, users can upload, view and share music videos and television clips, as well as video content of their own creation. More than 65 million videos have been uploaded to date.

While no pornographic or nude videos are permitted, YouTube relies on its community of viewers to identify and flag such uploads, meaning there is a definite time lag before they come down.

A quick search of YouTube's contents for "Christian" will return a staggering 329,000-plus videos, while a search for "Catholic" will yield 21,000-plus results.

Several bishops use the site, including Philadelphia's Cardinal Justin Rigali, who posted a series of reflections, and Toronto Archbishop Thomas Collins, whose monthly "Lectio Divina" meditations have been watched by thousands of viewers.

But nearly half of the videos on the first page of search results for "Christianity" portray the faith in a negative light.

And while a search for "Catholic" will yield an inspirational video by "KaterinaMarie" called "Why I am Catholic," and a clip of a Mass with Bishop Fulton Sheen in 1941 among its initial results, there's also a video parodying the church sex abuse scandals, as well as many others that are anti-Catholic or contain salacious material.

"That's why we believe biblical topics need to be discussed in a forum that is respectful of the Word," said GodTube.com co-founder and chief executive officer Chris Wyatt.

With its first version launched last January, GodTube's quick growth has been phenomenal.

The site, which recently added an alternative to the secular networking site Facebook.com, already contains more than 48,000 videos.

Wyatt said the site logged more than 10 million visitors by the end of 2007.

But accusations of anti-Catholicism have plagued GodTube, as some users have posted videos that try to discredit the church's teaching on the priesthood, the sacraments, the papacy and other things.

Wyatt, a Baptist, said anti-Catholicism would not be tolerated.

"We don't stand for that," he said, although he admitted there were some anti-Catholic videos on the site until a recent string of articles brought them to the company's attention.

Even with these videos removed, clips claiming to discredit elements of Catholic teaching remain on the site, including a John MacArthur lecture series on "The Pope and the Papacy."

Thomas Hall, founder of LoveToBeCatholic.com, believes he has come up with a better alternative.

"About a month ago, I typed 'Catholic' in on YouTube, and six of the first 10 responses were anti-Catholic propaganda," said Hall.

"I felt Catholics needed an equal voice and a safe environment to learn about their faith and to evangelize," he said.

With a background including Web work with Fortune 500 companies, Hall, who just moved from Chicago with his family to Minneapolis, naturally turned to the Internet.

At the end of October, he launched LoveToBeCatholic.com as a test. Like YouTube and GodTube, LoveToBeCatholic is a Web platform for people to post videos.

But unlike them, LoveToBeCatholic is specifically Catholic, and Hall works to ensure that nothing anti-Catholic gets posted.

Hall said the online Catholic community has embraced his site.

"In the first month I went from zero to 3,000 visitors per day," he said.

"I immediately ran into bandwidth problems. I've had to upgrade the servers twice, and I'll have to do that again this year. But that's a really nice problem to have," he said.

Videos range from priests' sermons to humorous skits and church events.

Some of Hall's favorites are vocations videos that show young religious in habits engaged in sports or other activities with youths.

"You can't capture that in text or audio," he said.

Breaking down marriage

Bishops' survey looks at U.S. Catholics practices, views on marriage

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Although nearly three-quarters of American Catholics say they are somewhat or very familiar with church teachings on marriage, many mistakenly believe that a non-Catholic spouse must promise to raise the couple's children as Catholic and that church teaching accepts divorce in cases of marital infidelity.

Those were among the results of a nationwide survey commissioned in April 2007 by the U.S. bishops' Committee on Marriage and Family Life on U.S. Catholic attitudes and practices regarding marriage.

The survey was carried out in June 2007 by the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate at Georgetown University via the Internet polling firm Knowledge Networks and was made public Feb. 11.

"This is the first time that such a varied and comprehensive body of data about Catholic patterns in marriage has been collected and analyzed," said Archbishop Joseph E. Kurtz of Louisville, Ky. He is chairman of what is now the bishops' Subcommittee on Marriage and Family Life of the newly renamed Committee on Laity, Marriage, Family Life and Youth.

"The study establishes a needed base line of demographic information about the marital status and related characteristics of adult Catholics across a generational timeline," he added in a statement released with the 250-page survey report.

The margin of error for the survey of 1,008 self-identified Catholics 18 or older was plus or minus 3.1 percentage points.

The report said marriage patterns among U.S. Catholics were similar to those for all Americans, with 53 percent of Catholics married, 25 percent never married, 12 percent divorced, 5 percent widowed, 4 percent living with a partner and 1 percent separated.

Including those who have remarried,

23 percent of American Catholics have been divorced at some time.

Among those currently married, nearly a third (30 percent) had not been married in the church or had their marriage "convalidated," or formally blessed by the church. For those who were separated or divorced at the time of the survey, more than half (51 percent) said they had not been married in the church or had their marriage convalidated.

Of those divorced, 85 percent had not sought an annulment and another 8 percent had asked for an annulment but it was not granted. An annulment had been granted to only 7 percent of the divorced Catholics surveyed.

Asked whether they had heard a variety of statements presented as a teaching of the Catholic Church on marriage, a majority of all respondents said they had heard that marriage between two baptized persons is a sacrament, that openness to children is essential to marriage, that the church does not consider a second marriage after civil divorce to be valid and that marriage is good for the community as well as for the individual couple.

But nearly six in 10 (59 percent) also had heard that a non-Catholic spouse must promise that the couple's children will be raised Catholic, an inaccurate statement.

Similar percentages of those who had heard that a marriage between a Catholic and a non-Christian is a sacrament and that church teaching "is accepting of divorce in cases of marital infidelity" believed that those false statements were true church teachings.

Asked for their views on the general acceptability of divorce, more than three-quarters of U.S. Catholics (76 percent) said it was "acceptable in some cases" and another 17 percent said it was "acceptable in all cases." Only 7 percent said divorce was "not acceptable in any case."

When they were asked about whether divorce was acceptable in specific circumstances, 96 percent said it was in cases of physical abuse, 92 percent said yes when there was emotional abuse and 85 percent said it was acceptable when there was infidelity.

The report divided respondents into four generational groups: pre-Second Vatican Council generation, ages 65 and over in 2007, who made up 19 percent of the respondents; Vatican II generation, ages 47-64, 31 percent; post-Vatican II generation, ages 26-46, 40 percent; and millennial generation, ages 18-25, 10 percent.

"Agreement with church teachings is ... often relatively high among the oldest Catholics. ... To a lesser extent this is also true of the millennial generation," the report said. "Agreement with church teaching is sometimes lowest among the generation of Catholics who came of age during the changes associated with Vatican II and among post-Vatican II generation Catholics."

The report also found that frequency of Mass attendance served as "a strong indicator of the general importance of Catholicism in a person's life and his or her level of commitment to living out the faith. Those who attend Mass every week are six times as likely as those who rarely or never attend to report that their view of marriage has been 'very' informed by their Catholic faith."

"They are also more than two and a half times as likely to describe themselves as 'very' familiar with church teaching on marriage," it said.

The survey also explored such topics as what kind of marriage preparation couples received and how valuable they found it, whether couples contemplating divorce requested or received assistance from anyone in the church, what kind of information they would like to receive about marriage and its challenges, and what values they think help sustain a marriage.

"Not surprisingly, the study paints a mixed picture," Archbishop Kurtz said. "It gives us reasons to be grateful and hopeful. It also raises concerns and presents us with challenges."

Although many couples find value in marriage preparation courses, "it is sobering to note that relatively few Catholics seem willing to seek church-sponsored help for difficulties once they are married," he added. "We must find ways to offer couples a more integrated, continuous and varied ministry that will help them grow in happiness and holiness through the entire life cycle of a marriage."

The archbishop also expressed concern that 41 percent of younger Catholics were choosing to marry outside the church and that "more than half of unmarried young Catholic adults do not consider it important to be married in the church."

The survey was commissioned as part of the bishops' National Pastoral Initiative for Marriage, which the bishops launched in 2004 to call attention to the value of married life.

MACS students compete in Academic Games

CHARLOTTE — Students from Our Lady of the Assumption and St. Patrick schools in Charlotte recently participated in the Mecklenburg Area Academic Games competition.

The competition, sponsored by the Academic Games Leagues of America, was hosted at Our Lady of the Assumption School Jan. 26.

Forty Catholic students comprising the MACS (Mecklenburg Area Catholic Schools) team competed against players from Metrolina Regional Scholars Academy on presidential facts and propaganda techniques used by politicians, media and advertisers.

The MACS team took first place and will compete in the national Academic Games competition in Orlando, Fla., in April.

Academic Games Leagues of America is a nonprofit organization founded in 1991 to encourage and conduct academic games competition at local and national levels.

There are currently state chapters in Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

Another Mecklenburg area competition on equations will be held in March.

A look at Lent

A general introduction to the season

* Lent is the season the Catholic Church gives us to take stock and review our lives, to root out all that is not good and true and replace it with the faithful and the holy.

In these 40 days, the Catholic Church turns to the ancient penitential practices of fasting, almsgiving and prayer. These practices remain as rich and life-giving in the year 2007 as they were when practiced by the early Christians and by our Jewish forbearers.

Fasting reminds us of our hunger for God, which no worldly thing can satisfy. Almsgiving reminds us that love of God and love of neighbor are inextricably intertwined, and that we bear responsibility for each other. Prayer reminds us to center our lives on God who alone gives meaning to all we do.

Lent is a most special time. The liturgies and devotions of Lent call us to a kind of spiritual "spring cleaning," identifying relationships that are disordered and sins that imprison and then seeking forgiveness and healing.

We root out the darkness of sin so as to enter the Easter mysteries with a clean heart bathed in the healing, life-giving light of Christ.

Guidelines for Lent

1) The time of Lent is to be observed by Catholics as a special season of prayer, penance and works of charity.

2) Ash Wednesday, Feb. 6, and Good Friday, March 21, in particular, are the most important penitential days of the liturgical year. They are days of both fast and abstinence. All Fridays in Lent are days of abstinence.

3) The rule of fasting states that only one full meal a day can be taken. Two small meals, "sufficient to maintain strength," are allowed, but together they should not equal another full meal.

Eating between meals breaks the fast, but drinking liquids does not. The rule of fasting binds all Catholics from age 18 to 59.

4) Abstinence refers to the eating of meat. Under the present law, it does not include egg or milk products, meat stock soups or gravies.

The rule of abstinence binds all Catholics 14 years old and older.

5) The substantial observance of the laws of fast and abstinence is a serious obligation. Those whose work or health would be impaired are excused from fasting and abstaining.

The individual conscience can decide if there is a proper cause to excuse. A more serious reason should be present to excuse from Ash Wednesday and Good Friday penance.

6) Self-imposed fasting on the other weekdays of Lent is recommended. Abstinence on all Fridays of the year is also highly recommended.

The 1983 war and peace pastoral letter of the U.S. bishops, stating that prayer is incomplete without penance, urges Friday abstinences as something all American Catholics should offer up for the sake of world peace.

7) Parents and teachers should see to it that even those who are not bound by the laws of fasting and abstinence because of age are brought up in an atmosphere that is conducive to a sense of penance.

8) The faithful should be clearly and positively encouraged to receive the sacrament of reconciliation during Lent. There should be adequate time scheduled for confessions before Easter.

Group reconciliation services should not be scheduled for the last days of the Holy Week. At no time is it permitted to schedule a group reconciliation service for the purpose of giving general absolution without individual confessions.

9) The liturgical directions of the Sacramentary and the Lectionary must be faithfully observed regarding all the special Holy Week rites.

10) Funeral Masses are not allowed on Holy Thursday, Good Friday or Holy Saturday. The funeral rite outside of Mass can be held either in church or at the chapel on those days, with a funeral Mass later.

11) The RCIA is incorporated into the liturgy during Lent. The rite of election is celebrated on the first Sunday of Lent. On the third, fourth and fifth Sundays of Lent, the Scrutinies take place during Mass.

Inside look at the 'tool of faith'

Blessings and curses going hand in hand with Catholic media

Catholic media enjoy many blessings but suffer from many curses.

February is Catholic Press Month, an opportunity to consider the role of media and Catholics. While I've always been partial to newspapers, "media" these days must also include Catholic radio, TV and other avenues of proclaiming the Gospel. (After all, remember that "Gospel" means "good news.")

So, if you're reading this, God bless you.

Catholic media share much with their secular brethren, competing for the same readers, for the same advertising dollar, for the same opportunity to make their point in the mass market. (That's mass with a lowercase "m.")

That's one of the curses.

But unlike secular media, which often seem to exist to make noise and a profit, Catholic media exist to make a point and a difference. That's a blessing. (OK, there's "prophet," too, though that's probably stretching the pun.)

True, some secular publications don't fit that mold, and some Catholic ones — probably too many — are judged more by their balance sheets than by their content. Still, the comparison is valid.

Like secular journalists, their Catholic counterparts get a kick out of what they do. When I labored at the Chicago Sun-Times, I enjoyed watching anonymously as fellow commuters paused over something I wrote.

Later, as editor of the Archdiocese of Chicago's Catholic New World, I smiled when I saw a young woman on my bus pore over the current issue.

One big curse is that people often let secular media define the church.

Secular media can be a great ally to the church. However, they cannot always be counted on to understand faith, especially when being outrageous gains more notice than being truthful.

A few years ago, a Chicago daily reported — on the front page no less — that Cardinal Francis E. George "sanctified" and blessed a high-end car showroom. The article was correct.

However, at best it came across as tongue-in-cheek; at worst it was snide.

No matter that there's a grand tradition of blessing homes, people and even places of business. There are worse things than acknowledging the presence of God in everyday life.

The church ministers daily to the world's hurts and pains. Its work among the poor, its efforts to keep inner-city schools open and its many calls for justice often go unnoted by the secular media.

But blessing a business — even a generous business whose donations help support the church and its works — that becomes Page One news?

Such dismissive reporting can diminish the church.

Guest Column

TOM SHERIDAN
GUEST COLUMNIST

Without Catholic media, expecting Catholics to understand what's happening in the church or what the church is saying is, frankly, foolish.

The clergy sex abuse crisis has also taken its toll on the church's reputation. Yes, secular media took the lead in exposing, though sometimes sensationalizing, the problem. However, many Catholic publications did a credible job of reporting it, warts and all.

The church is working to repair its battered public face, though you'll read about that more in church media than in secular. That, sadly, is often dismissed as "cheerleading."

But Catholic media must be more than just cheerleaders; they must offer perspectives not available elsewhere.

Sometimes, though, that "church perspective" becomes yet another curse rather than the blessing it ought to be. Many Catholics aren't pleased with church positions on war, poverty, immigration and even the death penalty.

Others balk at the renewal of the Latin Mass and similar traditions, taking it out on the church's media.

In his Jan. 24 message for World Communications Day (May 4), Pope Benedict XVI acknowledged that secular media's "meteoric technical evolution" gives them the potential for more blessings and curses.

He encouraged secular media to cease being proponents of manipulation and instead press for justice by espousing information based in truth.

The challenge for Catholic media is much the same, though one would think it at least has a head start. That, surely, is a blessing.

Here's a comparison which might help explain the value of Catholic media, especially this month. The Wall Street Journal, that most secular of newspapers, once turned a slur from a Soviet leader into a slogan: "Capitalist tool."

If the worst that can be said about Catholic media is that they are a "tool of faith," I'll take it.

And if you're reading this in a Catholic publication, you deserve blessings, too.

People still ask why God allows so much suffering

Trust and belief in Lord shall provide comfort

Rosa Baines of Edmonton, Canada, recently wrote, "I have at times wondered whether God allows sorrow and pain into our lives so that we can truly appreciate the times of happiness and joy ... a sunrise or sunset, birds soaring, flowers blooming, celebrating Christmas with family and friends, watching children play."

Pain is often unavoidable, but our understanding of it can make a big difference in the way we deal with it.

Here are some things to consider when times of pain come upon you:

God sends friends to console us.

First lady Bess Truman suffered a terrible shock when she was 18 — her father committed suicide. It was an unbearable loss.

Her friend Mary Paxton heard the news and came over right away to be with her in her hour of need. Bess cried for hours, and Mary listened quietly, consoling her.

Years later, when Truman was living in the White House, she looked back and said, "Mary's loving presence was exactly what I needed at that terrible time."

God is like a good friend who sits silently at your side when you're most in need. Believe and it shall be done unto you.

"The Lord is with us, protecting us, and leading us to future joy. He who will be our bliss when we are in heaven is our protection while we are here on our way. Let us flee to the Lord, and we shall be comforted" (Blessed Julian of Norwich).

Trust is the answer.

When we go through unbearable suffering in life, it causes us to lose our bearings.

If that ever happens to you, try to remember that you are never alone.

Jesus said, "Fear is useless, what you need is trust."

Jesus knew there would be times when we wouldn't be able to free ourselves from suffering. At those times he asks us to look upon him on the cross and trust his love.

He came to enter our pain and ease it with his love.

"Do not fear what may happen tomorrow. The same loving Father who cares for you today will care for you tomorrow and every day.

"Either he will shield you from suffering or he will give you unfailing strength to bear it. Be at peace then and put aside all anxious thoughts and imaginings" (St. Francis de Sales).

Behold the face of God. See God's face in the beauty of nature; for instance, a sunset is God's way of saying, "I love you."

"The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy" (Henry Ward Beecher).

C. S. Lewis wrote, "We do not merely want to see beauty, ... we want to be united with the beauty we see, and pass into it, and receive it into ourselves, and become part of it."

Beauty invites us to experience the bliss of union with God.

We really don't understand why God allows so much suffering in our world, but we do know, through faith, that he sent his only begotten Son to be near us at those times and to lead us safely home.

"Christ came to bring joy; joy to children, joy to parents, joy to families and friends, joy to the sick and elderly, indeed joy to all humanity" (Pope John Paul II).

The difference between civility and incivility

The Human Side

FATHER EUGENE HEMRICK
CNS COLUMNIST

After a heated debate between Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, I began to wonder if the line between civility and incivility had been crossed because of the vicious way each was out to trip up the other.

Ironically, two days after the debate the church looked at the Gospel of the man with the withered hand asking Christ to heal him. The Pharisees, looking for an opportunity to trip him up, watch closely to see if Christ will heal on the Sabbath. When he does, they feel they now have a right to bring him down.

The word "civility" is related to the word "home." At first reflection this doesn't seem to make sense. What does home have to do with civility? On further reflection, it has much to do with it.

To be civil is to make another feel at home. In the Gospel, the Pharisees should have recognized Christ's goodness and made him feel at home, but because their hearts are hardened they don't.

Interestingly, in the same Gospel, we have a beautiful lesson on what it means to actually make another feel at home. Christ cures the withered hand. A word closely related to cure is "care," and care means to attend to another.

When we think of feeling at home, isn't it true that we think of parents and friends who attended to our needs; who left us free to express ourselves without worrying about eating our words? To feel at home is to feel supported and free to be one's self.

In the psalms, the new Jerusalem that represents heavenly bliss on earth is pictured as a place where grain, oil and wine are abundant, and people are freely and openly enjoying each other's company. It is a picture of civility par excellence.

It would be naive to think that heated debates shouldn't exist. When, however, do they cross the line and become uncivil? Isn't it when we no longer feel at home with the debaters because they mirror the Pharisees out to get the other to the point that caring for others is overshadowed by a ring of selfish ambition?

Some may argue that heated debates are about caring and self-assertion, and it isn't nasty to tear apart another who is seemingly using the wrong approach in accomplishing this, that appearing strong and well-informed justifies the means.

If, as some observe, there is unease with the behavior of certain candidates, could it be the line between civility and incivility is being crossed?

In the end, the next president should be elected on his or her ability to be a respected, true statesperson with whom we truly feel at home because of his or her Christ-like caring.

Finding faithful solutions Invoking Archbishop Romero in pursuit of peace and justice

On March 14 there will be a lecture in Camden, N.J., the eighth in an annual series honoring the memory of Archbishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador. It is sponsored by the Romero Center, a ministry of St. Joseph Pro-Cathedral in Camden.

Why Camden? Because it is one of the poorest and most crime-ridden cities in the country.

Why Archbishop Romero? Because his legacy is an expression of the church's preferential option for the poor.

The Romero Center fosters an understanding and application of what might be called Romero principles to pressing urban social problems.

The annual lecture is held on the Camden campus of Rutgers University, which is more than a convenient venue; without the application of the intellectual resources that a university has to offer, Camden's social problems will just get worse.

The lecture topic on March 14 is "Faith and Politics: How Does Our Faith Inform Us as We Prepare for the November Elections?"

If it is interesting to see a cathedral and a state university cooperating in this way, it is even more noteworthy considering the planners of the lecture seem to believe, to acknowledge that the link between faith and politics needs exploration to find solutions to practical problems of urban crime and poverty.

There is, of course, in the United States a separation of church and state that has to be respected, but there is no separation of church and society.

The church — in this case the Camden cathedral — has to be involved if the city is to become more receptive to the coming of the promised kingdom of God, which is to be a reign of justice, love and peace.

Lowering the barriers to the coming of the promised kingdom means reducing injustice, hatred and all forms of violence.

In facing up to this challenge, the people of God in Camden can show other local churches the way.

Past Romero lectures, all seven of them, are available in a new book titled "Romero's Legacy: The Call to Peace and Justice." The pastor of St. Joseph Pro-Cathedral, Father Robert McDermott, is a Camden native, vicar general of the diocese and founder of the Romero Center.

His chapter in "Romero's Legacy" puts the reader "In the Footsteps of Martyrs: Lessons from Central America."

After making a pilgrimage to

El Salvador, Father McDermott says he was able "to grasp better and to radicalize the Gospel in my own ministry and in our work here in Camden."

He observes that "Archbishop Romero wanted the church to be neither a museum piece nor a political organization. But he knew that to be the true continuation of the Incarnation, the church had to take up the challenge of justice in all of its political, social and economic dimensions."

No surprise, then, to find subsequent chapters highlighting "The Eucharist and Social Justice" (John P. Hogan), "If You Want Peace, Work for Justice" (Bishop Thomas J. Gumbleton), "Liberation Theology for the Twenty-First Century" (Father Gustavo Gutierrez), and chapters on the death penalty (recently banned in New Jersey) by Sister Helen Prejean, on racism by professor Diana Hayes, and on immigration by Daniel F. Groody.

This small book offers much to stimulate thought.

Camden's poor will have to wait and see if it stimulates action.

MIRACULOUS MEDAL?

CNS BY FRANK J. METHE, CLARION HERALD

Ursuline Sisters Joan Marie Aycock, Kathleen Finnerty and Damian Aycock share a joyous moment following the New York Giants' 17-14 upset victory over the New England Patriots in Super Bowl XLII in Glendale, Ariz., Feb. 3. Sister Finnerty, superintendent of Catholic schools for the Archdiocese of New Orleans, sent a medal of Our Lady of Prompt Succor to Giants' president John Mara before the Super Bowl for "a little extra divine intervention."

Nuns say medal might have helped Giants win Super Bowl

NEW ORLEANS (CNS)—Ursuline Sister Kathleen Finnerty, superintendent of schools for the Archdiocese of New Orleans, knows the limitations of Catholic theology as well as anyone.

So when she mailed a small medal of Our Lady of Prompt Succor to the New York Giants president, John Mara, before Super Bowl XLII, she knew there was no way she could "guarantee" his team a victory over the heavily favored New England Patriots.

"I never guaranteed him anything, but I wrote in the note that I thought he could use a little extra divine intervention," Sister Finnerty said. "I sent it off and completely forgot about it."

Miraculous or not, the Giants, 11-point underdogs, shocked the previously unbeaten Patriots 17-14 on the strength of a memorable touchdown drive in the final two minutes engineered by New Orleans native Eli Manning.

During the game-winning drive, Mara was caught on TV pacing in the owner's suite of the University of Phoenix Stadium and reaching into his shirt pocket.

It turns out he was praying silently and touching the religious medal sent to him by the former principal of Resurrection Grammar School in Rye, N.Y., where Sister Finnerty got to know the Maras and their three young children from 1984 to 1991.

"He coached the boys and girls in basketball, and he was always at parish events and fairs and at Mass,"

Sister Finnerty said. "The Maras were at all the events and activities where parents generally get involved. They're wonderful. They're a very strong family."

When Pope John Paul II visited Giants Stadium in 1995, the Maras allowed Resurrection parishioners, teachers and students to use their luxury box.

When Sister Finnerty came to New Orleans from Delaware last August to become superintendent, she met Ursuline Sisters Damian Aycock and Joan Marie Aycock, who have a penchant for sports of all kinds and who have followed closely the careers of former New Orleans Saints quarterback Archie Manning and his two sons, Eli and Indianapolis Colts quarterback Peyton Manning.

It was Sister Aycock who suggested that Sister Finnerty send the Our Lady of Prompt Succor medal to Mara after the Giants advanced to the Super Bowl.

"Sister Damian said before the game, 'We have to get the 'Lady' on this,'" Sister Finnerty said.

"I love the Giants because they didn't seem to have a chance against the Patriots," Sister Aycock said.

"You really and truly have to give Eli credit," she added. "He himself doesn't know how he got out of the grasp of those Patriot defenders and to throw that great pass, and yet he seemed to walk out of their grasp."

Catholic theology, too, sometimes involves mystery.

Rabbinical group asks Vatican for clarification on Good Friday prayer

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Rabbinical Assembly of Conservative Judaism has asked for clarification from the Vatican as to whether a revised Good Friday prayer for the Jews in Latin calls for the conversion of Jews.

The new prayer replaces the one contained in the 1962 Roman Missal, which is no longer generally used by Catholics but which may be used by some church communities under recently revised norms.

Pope Benedict XVI has reformulated the Good Friday prayer for the Jews, removing language about the "blindness" of the Jews, but it asks for prayers for the Jews and that "all Israel may be saved." Some Jewish leaders criticized the phrasing as a call for Jews to accept Christianity.

A Feb. 14 resolution by the Rabbinical Assembly said that it "is dismayed and deeply disturbed to learn of reports that Pope Benedict XVI has revised the 1962 text of the Latin liturgy."

The New York-based assembly, with an international membership of 1,600 Conservative rabbis, passed the resolution during a meeting in Washington.

The vast majority of Catholics on Good Friday will hear a prayer in the vernacular formulated in 1970 and favored by Jewish leaders.

In a Feb. 13 letter to Rabbi David Rosen, chairman of the International Jewish Committee on Interreligious Consultations, Cardinal Walter Kasper, president of the Vatican Commission for Religious Relations With the Jews, said that "the reformulated text no longer speaks about the conversion of the Jews, as some Jewish critics wrongly affirm."

The prayer is inspired by St. Paul's Letter to the Romans and expresses "hope that at the end of times all Israel will be saved," Cardinal Kasper said.

"I cannot see why this prayer should present any reason to interrupt our dialogue," said the cardinal.

FROM THE VATICAN

Pope reduces waiting period for sainthood cause for Fatima visionary

COIMBRA, Portugal (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI has lifted the five-year waiting period to start the canonization process for Carmelite Sister Lucia dos Santos, one of the three children who saw Our Lady of Fatima in 1917.

The decision means that the diocesan phase of the sainthood process can begin immediately.

Cardinal Jose Saraiva Martins, head of the Vatican Congregation for Saints' Causes, made the announcement at a Feb. 13 Mass in Coimbra commemorating the third anniversary of Sister Lucia's death.

The cardinal said Pope Benedict had reduced to three years the waiting period so the Diocese of Coimbra, where Fatima is located, can begin the initial phase of the sainthood investigation.

On May 13, 1917, when Sister Lucia was 10 years old, she and her cousins — Francisco, 9, and Jacinta, 7 — claimed to have seen Mary at Fatima, near their home.

The apparitions continued once a month until October 1917 and later were declared worthy of belief by the Catholic Church.

In 2000 Pope John Paul II beatified Sister Lucia's cousins, who died as children.

The diocesan phase of the investigation includes gathering and examining Sister Lucia's writings to see that they are in keeping with the faith and gathering evidence to see if she lived an exemplary Christian life.

Subsequent phases involve the Vatican congregation evaluating evidence that miracles attributed to her intercession occurred. One miracle is needed for her beatification, the step before canonization, and another miracle occurring after her beatification is needed for her to be declared a saint.

New U.S. ambassador to Vatican arrives in Rome

ROME (CNS) — The new U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, Mary Ann Glendon, arrived in Rome Feb. 15 and said she looked forward to working with the Vatican on issues of religious freedom and religious tolerance.

Glendon, a Harvard University law professor, has served with Vatican agencies and diplomatic missions in the past. She said she hoped that experience would help her advance U.S.-Vatican relations in her new post.

The United States and the Vatican have a "common commitment to the human dignity of every man, woman and child," she said to reporters at the Rome airport Feb. 15. "Both the United States and the Holy See have a long history in which faith and reason are inseparably united in that quest."

Glendon said the United States works for human dignity by "vigorously promoting human rights and religious freedom and by striving to foster dialogue and tolerance among persons of different faiths and cultures."

As ambassador, she said, she expects to work with the Vatican "to advance those lofty goals."

"I will do everything in my power to build on and enrich the strong relationship between (the) United States and the Holy See," she said.

Glendon has resigned her position as president of the Vatican's Pontifical Academy for Social Sciences, but will remain a member of the academy, embassy sources said.

She was expected to present her credentials in an audience with Pope Benedict XVI at the end of February.

Glendon spoke in a ceremonial room at Leonardo da Vinci Airport, standing at a podium flanked by U.S. and Vatican flags.

She said she looked forward to spending a year in Rome, which has been like a "second home" to her. Glendon's oldest daughter and three grandchildren live in Rome.

Pope John Paul II and Cuban President Fidel Castro check the time as the pope arrives in Cuba in this 1998 file photo. Castro said Feb. 19 that he is retiring after nearly a half-century in power.

Castro's rule marked by stormy relations with Cuban church

WASHINGTON (CNS) — During nearly 50 years of rule, Fidel Castro had an often-stormy relationship with the Cuban Catholic Church.

The Jesuit-educated Castro was equally comfortable defusing the Cuban church as an institutional force during the early years of his revolution in the 1960s as he was bantering casually with Pope John Paul II during the papal visit to Cuba in 1998.

The 81-year-old Cuban leader announced Feb. 19 that he was retiring as head of the island nation. He had temporarily ceded power to his younger brother, Raul Castro, in July 2006, after undergoing surgery because of intestinal bleeding — but he never returned to office, ending more than 49 years of continuous rule.

He came to power Jan. 1, 1959, after leading a successful guerrilla rebellion against unpopular dictator Fulgencio Batista. Initially, his successful rebellion had ample support among Catholics, cultivated by his insistence his revolution was motivated by Christian principles.

But in 1961, he declared himself a Marxist-Leninist and made Cuba the first communist state in the western hemisphere, moving it into the Cold War camp of the Soviet Union.

His government began institutionally dismantling the church, nationalizing 350 Catholic schools and expelling 136 priests. Church activity was monitored and restricted to religious services on church property.

Despite the crackdown on the church, Castro never broke diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

After a 1996 Castro visit with Pope John Paul at the Vatican, plans developed for the 1998 papal trip, interpreted as a sign of improved church-state relations based on a willingness by the government to give the church more breathing space in the post-Cold War era.

Castro met the pope several times during the Cuban visit, allowed church officials to mobilize Catholics to attend papal events and permitted papal activities to be televised and reported in the state-controlled media.

Immaculate Heart of Mary School in High Point, and meeting with local religious, youth and pro-life groups.

A pro-life activist since 1986, Father West was ordained as a priest for the Archdiocese of Newark, N.J., in 1991.

In 1998, he joined Priests for Life, an association of Catholic clergy with special emphasis on the pro-life teachings of the church.

Based out of Priest for Life's Staten Island, N.Y., office, Father West has spoken at more than 300 churches throughout the United States and has appeared on radio and TV spreading the Gospel of Life.

"We are very happy to have Father West come for our parish mission," said Father James Stuhrenberg, parochial vicar at Our Lady of Grace Church.

During the Lenten mission, Father West discussed pro-life issues in the Old Testament and, utilizing a variety of Scripture references, he emphasized that God is the master of all life.

"All human life is precious in the eyes of God," said Father West.

"Not even a murderer loses his or her human dignity," he said.

Father West said that in order for Satan to influence people with his lies, humanity must first dehumanize the vulnerable — whether they be Native Americans, African Americans, Jews, women, the disabled or the unborn.

This, he said, was how Adolf Hitler's holocaust was able to occur.

It is also how the "holocaust of abortion" — the "greatest evil in the world today" — is able to exist, said Father West.

"The United States must go back to the roots of its founding documents, where life, liberty and the pursuit of

DID YOU KNOW?

Priests for Life was established in the early 1990s as an association of faithful to work for pro-life issues.

Under the leadership of Father Frank Pavone, national director, Priests for Life serves as a resource on pro-life issues to effectively build up the "culture of life" by giving public witness to the defense of the weakest of the weak against the horrors of abortion, euthanasia and genetic manipulation.

According to Father Peter West, a priest associate with Priests for Life, there are three full-time and three part-time staff members, with an expanded membership of priests and deacons throughout the United States.

happiness had meaning. Yet the most important of these is life, for without it everything else is meaningless," he said.

Father West said Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion virtually on demand, shattered all legislation protecting our rights.

During a question-and-answer session, Father West explained why he became so actively involved in the pro-life movement.

He said he "saw pictures of the unborn who were murdered. That pushed me over the edge."

Calling abortion the "greatest social ill of today," Father West said there are more babies murdered in one year than the lives lost in all the wars fought by the United States to this day.

According to a report released in January by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, the number of abortions in the United States in 2005 was 1.2 million.

Nearly 50 million babies are estimated to have been aborted since 1973.

Father West also spoke about the sinfulness of embryonic stem-cell research and discussed ways to find out which organizations support such research and abortions.

Parishioner Tim Mainhart said he attended the Lenten mission to "learn more about the work of defending life, from its beginning to its natural end."

"Like Father West said, 'so many people fail by doing nothing about abortion,'" said Mainhart.

"It's very clear from the Old Testament that life is precious to God — from conception to death," he said.

Valetine's dinner becomes affair of heart for tornado victims

Father Ernest Hardesty, Assumption Church pastor, opened the parish doors to provide lunch and dinner for firefighters, police officers and other relief workers.

On Feb. 11, the Federal Emergency Management Agency took over a parish hall as the official Pope County Disaster Recovery Center to register victims with FEMA and get help from state agencies and charities.

Father Hardesty said he witnessed "three miles of destruction." His church, about half a mile from the tornado, was not damaged.

Victims included parishioners William and Cindy Ehemann. They arrived home from work around 4:50 p.m. and soon learned that a tornado was heading toward them.

They gathered their three cats and two dogs and hid in the master bedroom's walk-in closet.

"William said he felt like Jesus was holding him down," Cindy said.

When they opened the closet door, the roof and one cat were missing.

The tornado tore the roof completely off and destroyed the workshop from which William Ehemann operates his construction business.

"I feel like we have been blessed," Cindy Ehemann said. "We are not as much of a victim (as others were)."

Volunteers helped the couple clean up. When they were taking apart the couple's bed, the volunteers discovered the missing cat under the bed. The cat was traumatized but not harmed.

"It has been tested," Cindy Ehemann said of her faith. "I'm trying to get in good spirits. To me, I'm just thankful I am alive. All of this stuff can be replaced."

Al Hettel said it takes such a tragedy to find out "that people are a lot better than you think they are."

Hettel and his wife, Kay, also members of Assumption Church, live in one of the hardest-hit areas of Atkins. Three of their next-door neighbors died in the storm.

A neighbor encouraged them to seek shelter in another neighbor's storm shelter.

"Boy, it's a good thing we did," Hettel said. "Fifteen minutes later, everything came apart."

About 24 hours after the storm, the Hettels joined other Atkins Catholics for Mass on Ash Wednesday.

"We really had something to be grateful for," Al Hettel said.

The same tornado traveled 123 miles across the state. A second tornado took a 14-mile-path across Marion and Baxter counties. At least 13 mostly rural countries were affected.

IN THE NEWS

Catholic parish provides comfort after campus shooting

on their campus.

Five students died in the shooting, when a 27-year-old man opened fire with a shotgun and several handguns in a school auditorium. He shot at least 22 people and sent dozens of students running and crawling toward exits.

The gunman, a former graduate student at the university, then turned the gun on himself and died on the auditorium's stage. University officials said they had no motive for the gunman's actions, but an investigation was continuing.

As word of the shootings spread across the campus, buildings and dorms were locked down.

Within hours, parishioners at Christ the Teacher Church, home to the university's Newman Center, brought cartons of sodas and chips to the parish in preparation for students who might come to pray or seek comfort.

Of the estimated 25,000 students enrolled at Northern Illinois University, approximately, 9,000 are Catholic. DeKalb is located in the heart of the 11-county Diocese of Rockford, which stretches from suburban Chicago to the Mississippi River.

Msgr. Glenn Nelson, pastor of the campus parish and vicar general and chancellor of the Rockford Diocese, was away from DeKalb when news broke of the campus shooting.

He immediately returned to campus and began taking phone calls, including one from Father John Grace of the Newman Center on the campus of Virginia Tech, in Blacksburg, Va., where a student killed 32 students and faculty members in April 2007 and then took his own life.

"Father John called us to say their students are united with us and they are praying for us," said Msgr. Nelson.

Last year, students and parishioners at Christ the Teacher Church made rosaries in the Virginia Tech colors of maroon and orange and sent them to the students there.

Father Grace said he was confident students at Northern Illinois University would see "the power of community for each other," as the Virginia Tech students did after their shooting.

Msgr. Nelson said the first response at Christ the Teacher Church was to prepare to keep the building open as long as necessary.

Msgr. Nelson visited students on the Catholic floor of University Plaza, a private dormitory a few blocks from where the shooting took place. Another priest from the parish had been at the local hospital where many of the victims had been taken.

During the evening after the shooting, small groups of students wandered into the church. Some joined the rosary, others shared conversation in the lounge, and still others sat before computers in a study room, monitoring the news.

A young woman sheds tears while attending a memorial service Feb. 15 at the Newman Center at Northern Illinois University for the victims of a shooting on the DeKalb, Ill., campus. A former 27-year-old graduate student walked onto the stage of a lecture hall at the university and opened fire on a packed science class Feb. 14, killing five students and wounding at least 16 before committing suicide.

On Feb. 15, the daily Mass was for the victims of the tragedy, and an ecumenical prayer vigil was scheduled for the evening.

Rockford Bishop Thomas G. Doran called Msgr. Nelson Feb. 14 and assured him of his prayers and support for his efforts and for all the students and parents involved in the unfolding crisis.

In a Feb. 15 statement, the bishop said he offered his prayers for "all the souls who were murdered in this event and are now in the hands of God. They were innocent victims of a horrible crime. Our thoughts too go to the students and others who were injured and we pray that their injuries will be swiftly and surely cured."

The bishop also offered prayers for the entire university community, asking God to "give them the grace to deal with this tragedy which is almost beyond words."

Controversial coverage

College strikes abortion, contraception from insurance policy

BELMONT — Health care coverage contradictory to Catholic Church teaching has been removed from Belmont Abbey College.

In December 2007, college officials realized the college employee health care plan covered abortion, contraception and voluntary sterilization.

"As soon as we discovered this, we immediately removed these procedures and prescriptions from the health care plan provided by the college for our employees," said Dr. William Thierfelder, college president, in a letter to faculty, staff, students and alumni.

Founded in 1876, the Benedictine Belmont Abbey College is consistently ranked one of the best liberal arts colleges in the South by U.S. News and World Report and The Princeton Review.

Abbot Placid Solari, head of the monastic community at Belmont Abbey and chancellor of its college, met Jan. 18 with college faculty and staff to explain the reasons behind the change in policy.

Late in 2007, the college's health insurance provider changed the cost and structure of its coverage for college employees. In reviewing the new paperwork, a faculty member noticed the policy covered abortion, contraception and voluntary sterilization.

It was later discovered that the particular coverage had been in place for some time.

"(That is) something we all regret and for which we apologize," said Thierfelder.

College officials are unable to determine when and how the coverage got into the policy.

"When this discovery was brought to the attention of Abbot Placid, he and I immediately asked our health insurance provider to eliminate coverage for abortion, contraception and voluntary sterilization from the college's group medical plan," he said.

"It is the clear, consistent, incontrovertible, public, official and authoritative teaching of the Roman Catholic Church that abortion, contraception and voluntary sterilization are actions which are intrinsically wrong and should not be undertaken because of their very nature," said Thierfelder.

"As a Roman Catholic institution, Belmont Abbey College is not able to and will not offer nor subsidize medical services that contradict the clear teaching of the Catholic Church."

Since the policy change, eight faculty members filed formal complaints with various state and federal agencies, demanding the reinstatement of these coverages, said Thierfelder.

The group filed charges with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, claiming the change in insurance benefits was an act of discrimination on the basis of their religion or sex.

The college has retained legal counsel regarding the EEOC complaints.

The National Women's Law Center in Washington, D.C., has threatened a lawsuit against the college on behalf of the eight faculty members. The college, however, will not reinstate the coverage.

"As a Catholic College sponsored by the monks of Belmont Abbey, Belmont Abbey College will not offer nor subsidize these coverages. To do so would be to act contrary to the college's stated mission and identity," said Thierfelder.

Pope Benedict's first visit to U.S. as pope features diverse encounters

BY JOHN THAVIS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI's first visit to the United States as head of the Catholic Church features a diverse series of encounters with government leaders, interreligious and ecumenical representatives, the academic world and the Catholic faithful.

The pope's events in Washington and New York April 15-20 include a meeting with President George W. Bush at the White House and a visit to Ground Zero in lower Manhattan.

His address to the United Nations April 18 will be the international highlight of the trip, offering the pope the most significant global platform to date in his three-year pontificate.

It will be Pope Benedict's eighth foreign trip and the first papal visit to the United States since Pope John Paul II made a 30-hour visit to St. Louis in 1999. At the Vatican, too, church officials say this could be the most important papal trip in years.

Here is how the pope's itinerary will unfold:

Tuesday, April 15

The pope is expected to arrive at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington in the late afternoon on his chartered Alitalia jet. He will be greeted by Bush and the first lady, as well as by local church dignitaries, and both the pope and the president are expected to make brief remarks. Afterward, the pope will go to rest at the apostolic nunciature, the Vatican's version of an embassy.

Wednesday, April 16

Bush welcomes the pope on the south lawn of the White House at 10:30 a.m.; then the two leaders go inside for private talks. It's only the second time in history that a pope has visited the White House, and it takes place on the pope's 81st birthday.

At 5:30 p.m., the pope presides over a prayer service with about 350 U.S. bishops at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception. Before the service, the pope will greet well-wishers outside.

Thursday, April 17

At 10 a.m., the pope celebrates Mass in Nationals Park. At 5 p.m., the pope addresses the heads of more than 200 U.S. Catholic colleges and universities at The Catholic University of America. Also attending will be school superintendents from U.S. dioceses.

At 6:30 p.m., the pope will join Buddhists, Muslims, Jews, Sikhs, Hindus and representatives of other religions for a meeting at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center.

Friday, April 18

After flying from Washington to New York, the pope addresses the U.N. General Assembly at 10:45 a.m. At 6 p.m., the pope holds a prayer service with representatives of other Christian denominations at St. Joseph Church, a historic German parish in the Yorkville section of Manhattan.

Saturday, April 19

At 9:15 a.m., the pope celebrates Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral in midtown Manhattan for priests, deacons and members of religious orders. The day marks the third anniversary of the pope's election. At 4:30 p.m., the pope presides over a gathering with young people at St. Joseph Seminary in Yonkers.

The pope will meet with about 50 disabled youths, then speak to several thousand young people — including hundreds of seminarians — at what's being described as a rally/prayer service.

Sunday, April 20

At 9:30 a.m., the pope will visit Ground Zero, the site of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center. At 2:30 p.m., the pope will celebrate Mass in Yankee Stadium.

The pope departs John F. Kennedy International Airport at 8 p.m. on Shepherd One, his chartered Alitalia jet.

Big, open spaces not an option for D.C., N.Y. papal events

for a multicity tour in 1987, celebrating liturgies in the New Orleans Superdome, a California racetrack, an empty San Antonio field and other huge spaces.

When Pope Benedict makes his first trip to the United States as pope April 15-20, the opportunities for the public to see him will be limited to Masses at two baseball stadiums in Washington and New York, with capacities of probably no more than 45,000 and 65,000, respectively, and a rally for perhaps 15,000 youths and seminarians.

Other events in both cities are invitation-only.

One reason the liturgies with Pope Benedict won't be on the National Mall or in Central Park is simply that neither locale was available, according to communications officials with the Washington and New York archdioceses.

Susan Gibbs, communications director for the Washington Archdiocese, said the pope's visit follows immediately after the city's National Cherry Blossom Festival and the Mall — the expanse of lawn between the Washington Monument and the U.S. Capitol — could not be booked.

For one thing, the National Park Service schedules time for the mall's grassy areas to recover after big events, especially in the spring, Gibbs told Catholic News Service. The time to construct a stage for an altar and the related spaces necessary for staging a Mass concelebrated by hundreds of priests also would have been a problem.

Joseph Zwilling, communications director for the New York Archdiocese, said that "Central Park wasn't an option" for this papal visit.

As recently as 1995, Pope John Paul celebrated Mass in New York's Central Park, and it was attended by an estimated 250,000 people.

Then, tickets were required for certain sections but the general public could walk up and participate in the liturgy from outside the Great Lawn, with the help of jumbo television screens.

But not long after that Mass, as well as some huge concerts on the Great Lawn, the city restored the well-trampled field and imposed new restrictions on how the space can be used, Zwilling said. Papal Masses are no longer a possibility there.

The cost of a Mass on the Mall would have run into the millions of dollars, Gibbs said.

A Washington Post report on the logistics of the 1979 Mass on the Mall estimated the cost to the city and the archdiocese at $1.9 million, or about $4.25 million in 2007 dollars.

The archdiocese's share, about $400,000, would translate to more than $1.1 million today.

And those expenses included none of the contemporary security measures that such a Mass would require today, such as metal detectors and fencing to keep out people who haven't been screened.

Both Zwilling and Gibbs acknowledged that security is much easier to handle at a structure like a baseball stadium. When Pope John Paul first came to the United States, no tickets and no security checks were necessary to attend Masses on the Mall or in other open venues.

After a would-be assassin seriously wounded the pope during a public audience in St. Peter's Square in 1981, open events such as those on Pope John Paul's 1987 itinerary required people to have tickets and go through some security.

Gibbs said security measures would need to be even more rigid after the 2001 terrorist attacks, especially in the cities of New York and Washington, both targets on Sept. 11, 2001.

Gibbs and Zwilling said the staffs at both baseball stadiums have been extraordinarily helpful in accommodating the demands of hosting Masses with the pope.

"We had considered several sites, including the Mall," Gibbs said. "The Nationals Park stadium was our first choice. The building will be very new, and will have many of the services we would need already in place, including hospitality, security, seating, areas for priests to vest, an audio system and so on."

In addition, a new entrance to the Metro subway system a block away from the stadium, should be ready by opening day for the Major League Baseball season, two weeks before Pope Benedict arrives.

The church present and future

In U.S., pope will find multicultural church marked by stronger laity

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — What kind of Catholic Church will Pope Benedict XVI find when he arrives in the United States in April?

How similar to or different will it be from the U.S. church community that greeted Pope John Paul II on his first papal visit in 1979 or his last trip to the U.S. in 1999?

Scholars and experts contacted by Catholic News Service at Catholic universities around the country did not always agree on the answers to those questions, but several themes emerged.

They saw a church dealing with parish consolidations or closings and a declining availability of priests, but also experiencing a new vibrancy in lay ecclesial ministry.

They saw what one called "a chastened church" after the clergy sex abuse scandal but a church that has learned important lessons about accountability. And they saw a church already more than one-third Hispanic and still learning how to adapt to the realities of multiculturalism.

There's no doubt that the United States Pope Benedict will visit has more Catholics than the country to which Pope John Paul came in 1979 or 1999.

The Catholic population in the 50 states was less than 50 million in 1979 but grew to more than 59 million in 1999 and 64.4 million today, according to the Official Catholic Directory.

That growth has roughly mirrored the rise in total U.S. population, from 218.6 million in 1979 to 232.4 million in 1999 and 300.7 million in 2007.

The number of U.S. parishes has remained relatively steady over those years, with 18,695 parishes in 1979, a slight rise to 19,186 in 1999 and a drop back down to 18,642 last year.

But the number of diocesan and religious-order priests serving U.S. Catholics has sharply declined, from 58,430 in 1979 to 46,355 in 1999 and 41,446 in 2007.

Alan Schreck, chairman of the theology department at the Franciscan University of Steubenville in Ohio, said the alarming drop in the number of priests also has had a happy consequence in the rising number of Catholic laypeople involved in church ministries.

Parishioners Gilberto, Refugio, Evangelina and Evelyn Garcia pray during a 2007 Mass at St. Cecilia Church in Mount Prospect, Ill. U.S. scholars and experts agree Pope Benedict XVI, during his April visit, will find the U.S. church experiencing a new vibrancy in lay ecclesial ministry and one that is already more than one-third Hispanic and still learning to adapt to the realities of multiculturalism.

At Franciscan University alone, there are more than 500 undergraduate theology students, "the vast majority of them laypeople," he said, and more than 100 graduate each year with the training once given only to clergy.

Schreck believes Pope Benedict will find "a greater maturity, a greater sense of direction and mission" among American Catholics today than Pope John Paul did 28 years ago.

"For me, the most positive thing in 2008 is that laypeople are immensely more aware of their responsibility for the church present and future," said Paul Lakeland, director of the Center for Catholic Studies at Fairfield University in Connecticut.

Lakeland said the clergy sex abuse crisis had one positive result: It convinced Catholics that "we need to have more of a voice in our church."

"It didn't matter if you were on the left or the right," he added. "You were equally scandalized."

Michael O'Keeffe, a theology professor at St. Xavier University in Chicago, said he hopes Pope Benedict will acknowledge during his visit that the issues raised by the sex abuse scandal are not over.

"I believe that the pope would be well served by speaking to people about this issue and becoming more engaged in helping the church to heal," O'Keeffe said. "I might also ask the pope to take the time to hear about the health of the American Catholic Church, not simply from the bishops, but from the people."

Charles Zech, professor of economics at the business school at Villanova University, near Philadelphia, and director of the school's Center for the Study of Church Management, said the sex abuse scandal brought "pressures at all levels to be more transparent."

And the decline in the number of priests led more and more laypeople to take on "responsibility for the things priests and nuns used to do," he said.

Together, those trends have left many laypeople in need of "the skills to run a faith-based nonprofit," Zech said, adding that the 2-year-old National Leadership Roundtable on Church Management is working to fill those gaps.

Msgr. Kevin Irwin, dean of the school of theology and religious studies at The Catholic University of America in Washington, said Pope Benedict will find "a higher awareness of the multicultural reality of the church" than Pope John Paul might have seen on any of his U.S. visits.

Hispanics now make up an estimated 35 percent of the U.S. Catholic population, and more than half of all U.S. Catholics under age 25 are Hispanic or Latino.

With Mass celebrated in more than three dozen languages around the United States, "there's lots of work being done" to promote multiculturalism, "and more that needs to be done," Msgr. Irwin said.

Eileen Burke-Sullivan, director of the master's program in ministry at Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., said most U.S. Catholics today are "willing to work on their own faith, be loyal to their own local clergy if they feel attended to by them," and are "somewhat uncaring about the universal expression of the church."

Schreck hopes Pope Benedict will inspire "a revitalization" that will help American Catholics resist "the increasing pressure toward secularization, to be part of the mass culture."

"Catholics in America do need to be reminded we are in a struggle" against the prevailing cultural norms, he said. "They have to understand this is really a battle."

Georgetown professor assesses how well candidates 'thump the Bible'

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Presidential politics might seem like an unusual topic for an associate professor of Jewish civilization at Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service to tackle.

But the Jesuit-run university's Jacques Berlinerblau sees his latest book, "Thumpin' It: The Use and Abuse of the Bible in Today's Presidential Politics," as a natural follow-up to his 2005 work, "The Secular Bible: Why Nonbelievers Must Take Religion Seriously."

The earlier book focused primarily on the Hebrew Bible and the way it is used in modern American society. A move from the New York area to the U.S. political capital of Washington led Berlinerblau to a heightened interest in politics.

He began analyzing the presidential candidates in terms of how well they were responding to the religious sensibilities of their fellow citizens.

So far, the candidates who are getting the highest marks from Berlinerblau for using — but not overusing — the Bible in their campaigns are Democratic Sens. Barack Obama of Illinois and Hillary Clinton of New York.

They are following in the footsteps of two people dubbed "masters of the craft" by the Georgetown professor — President George W. Bush and his predecessor, former President Bill Clinton.

"Both routinely salt their presidential rhetoric, ever so lightly, with scriptural allusions," Berlinerblau writes. "Their consistent, albeit understated, invocation of Scripture convincingly established their bona fides with an electorate for whom such things are important."

"In addition," he writes, "their forays into the Bible did not endanger their campaigns by generating scads of negative publicity," something the author says former Democratic candidates Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts and Sen. Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut did.

Less successful in his religious references was former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, who withdrew from the Republican presidential race at the end of January. Berlinerblau said it was not surprising that Giuliani, a Catholic, did not often cite Scripture in his talks because Catholics in general "are not given to paroxysms of scriptural citation."

But Berlinerblau said Giuliani's "unshakable, though imperfect" relationship with his faith made him similar to most religious Americans — a resemblance he believes could have helped Giuliani with Catholic voters down the road.

Berlinerblau isn't the only one focusing on the faith connection in the 2008 presidential race. Beliefnet.com, an independent online resource on faith and spirituality, has its God-o-Meter, which ranks the presidential candidates on a scale that ranges from secularist at 0 to theocrat at 10.

In an end-of-January assessment, Obama was ranked highest at 9, with Democrats Hillary Clinton and New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson, who has withdrawn from the race, each receiving 8 points. Among Republicans, former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, a Baptist minister, received an 8, as did former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, who also has withdrawn, and Rep. Ron Paul of Texas.

At the bottom of the pack — at least in the view of God-o-Meter blogger Dan Gilgoff — are former Democratic Sen. Mike Gravel, a Unitarian Universalist, ranked at 4, and former Republican Sen. Fred Thompson, at 3.

Thompson, a member of the Church of Christ, pulled out of the presidential race Jan. 22; Gravel is still in the race.

Gilgoff moves the candidates up and down on the God-o-Meter based on a complicated set of criteria.

This includes whether he or she delivers a speech or makes an appearance in an overtly religious setting, whether he or she buys ads in religious media or grants an interview to a religious broadcaster or publication, and whether he or she discusses publicly how faith would influence his or her presidency.

Berlinerblau isn't saying whether religion should or should not be a part of presidential politics. But he does warn that when the Bible enters the political arena, care must be taken.

"Scripture and politics are highly combustible materials. Mix them together and the possibilities for an occasional 'work accident' are considerable," he said. "When discussing the Bible in public, an element of volatility is always present."

But that is not likely to keep presidential candidates present and future from citing the Bible as evidence that God backs their political stands.

"Not only the American experience but 2,000 years of biblical interpretation have demonstrated that no empire, no society and rarely even one denomination has ever been able to agree on what the Bible says," Berlinerblau said.

Scripture calls us to discern God's will for us

BY JEAN DENTON
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

A few days ago, my husband and I visited face to face with our representatives in the state legislature as part of a Catholic advocacy effort.

Our aim was to promote the Catholic faith community's position on several key issues the legislators would consider in the current session.

Being a citizen advocate was a new role for my husband, who recently retired from a long career as an editorial writer. He knows the issues well and can articulate a position easily.

After years of continuing dialogue he also knows well, and personally, our state senator and delegate.

As our delegate welcomed us into his office it appeared that this familiarity might head off serious discussion. Initial light verbal jabs and laughs indicated the two men's understanding that they stand at opposite political poles.

Finally, the delegate said, "So what have you got for me?"

I handed him our packet of written materials. He cursorily thumbed through the pages as my husband amiably reminded him that, "We are Catholic and you probably know where Catholics stand on most of these issues."

They discussed the delegate's longtime support of the death penalty and briefly argued its value as a deterrent to violent crime. The delegate mentioned, however, that his thoughts on the issue have been "evolving" recently.

At that point I sneaked into the conversation, suggesting he consider the matter in terms of societal respect for humanity. He and I had never met before so he thoughtfully responded in kind to my serious tone.

With that small opening he and my husband engaged in a new conversation about faith and human dignity that seemed to open a possibility to this young man's eventual change of heart.

Once they had broken through the veil of certain expected behaviors, they could see each other differently and communicate in a clearer, new way.

This weekend's readings are about seeing God's vision of human life, a vision obscured by daily minutiae, popular culture and familiarity. The Scriptures call us to be blind to the worldly view so we can discern God's perspective — and his will for us.

For me, it usually means physically removing myself from what is familiar to get a better God's-eye view. It's a constant battle, but once our eyes are opened, our wills have a chance to follow his path.

Questions:

What things in your daily living obscure spiritual perspective? How can you "get away" from world-bound concerns and familiarity to see life as God sees it?

Locals, tourists, famous singers flock to Panama’s Black Christ

BY IOAN GRILLO
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

PORTOBELLO, Panama — His face is dark brown like coffee. His lips and nose are thin and delicate like the Amhara people of Ethiopia. His wooden body is detailed and strong, hewn by a forgotten Spanish sculptor thousands of miles from the sweltering Caribbean village where he now rests. Known as the “Black Christ of Portobelo,” the 17th-century statue of an African-looking Jesus has become a year-round tourist attraction and the destination of pilgrimages for tens of thousands of Latin Americans of African descent. As transportation has improved in recent years, more and more people swarm to the annual gatherings every Oct. 21, the date the Black Christ, or Nazarene, was believed to have washed ashore. The Black Christ, warmly call “Naza” by local residents, also attracts a broad section of other people from across the continent who believe a visit will heal them or create a miracle. Among the more unusual visitors are Hindus from Panama’s small Indian community. Many believe a local Hindu girl was cured of a disease several decades ago after visiting the statue. Swami Jagadish at Panama City’s Hindu temple said he has no objection to the Hindu faithful venerating the Black Christ. “They are free to make their own decisions,” he said. Other devotees of the Black Christ have included famous singers. Giants of salsa music such as Cuban Celia Cruz and Puerto Rican Pete “El Conde” Rodriguez have visited the statue. Ismael Rivera, the Puerto Rican crooner who scored a series of hits in the United States, first visited the statue in 1975 and said the encounter saved him from a drug addiction that would have killed him. Rivera traveled to Portobelo every October for the next 10 years and composed a song named after the statue, which became a hit in Panama. Following his death in 1987, the Portobelo community built a statue to Rivera; it now stands a few meters from his beloved Black Christ. Carved on Rivera’s statue are the lyrics of his hit song. The faithful believe the Black Christ was brought miraculously to this Panamanian village to care for a people who lived through slavery in the Spanish empire, worked to death on the Panama Canal and still struggle in poverty-stricken communities early in the 21st century. “They can identify with this image of Catholics carry the Black Christ of Portobelo, a sculpture of Jesus Christ in the image of an African, in Portobelo, Panama, in this Oct. 21, 2007, file photo. Every year, tens of thousands of the faithful, including many of African descent, make a pilgrimage to Portobelo to see the Black Christ.

Christ. They feel it gives them a special way to communicate with God,” said Father Jose Cedeno, priest at Portobelo’s St. Philip Church, where the statue is kept. “They feel that when they talk to the Black Christ, God will understand their poverty. He will understand if they have sinned or turned to crime.” Many people on the margins of society, including criminals and drug addicts, are among those who honor the statue, Father Ortega said. Most people believe the statue was washed up from a Spanish galleon in 1658 and landed on the beach at Portobelo, then a community of slaves working on harsh tropical plantations. It is not clear why a Spaniard carved the statue in this style. One theory is that it was made for the African population down the coast in Cartagena, Colombia, but the ship was sunk by a storm off Panama. The Catholic hierarchy did not immediately warm to the veneration of the Black Christ and at several times over the centuries bishops did not assign priests to Portobelo, leaving the local community to pray to the statue without the approval of Rome, Father Ortega said. But by the late 20th century, the bishops in Panama City fully endorsed the veneration, helping the annual gathering mushroom to its present size. The modern ceremony has attracted some criticism for the bloody acts of penance undertaken; for instance, a few of the faithful drag their knees on the rocky road into the village. Father Ortega said the acts of penance are carried out by only a handful of worshippers and are not the most important aspect of the ceremony. “The media tend to focus on the blood rather than the other beautiful things,” he said. In the last three annual ceremonies, some 50,000 devotees have prayed around the statue before breaking into a night of singing and dancing until dawn. The Black Christ put onto a huge wooden base more than 60 feet long. One hundred and fifty men then carry the statue through the streets, while dancing to lively rhythms bashed out on congas.

From side kicks to photography, students study the arts at Asheville Catholic

BY CAROLE MCGROTTY
CORRESPONDENT

ASHEVILLE — First a bow, then a kick. That's how students enrolled in tae kwon do began the spring semester's fine arts elective program at Asheville Catholic School Jan. 25.

The fine arts electives allow middle school students to pursue one of three activities — martial arts, photography and filmmaking — every Friday afternoon throughout the semester.

Junior Master Tony Morris of Asheville Sun Yi's Tae Kwon Do led the martial arts class, one of 15 sessions during which students will practice the five tenets of Korean martial art — courtesy, integrity, self control, indomitable spirit and perseverance.

"Technique is everything," said Morris, a fourth-degree black belt with more than 20 years of experience.

His class will help students develop character and self-defense throughout the semester. But first, he taught them to show respect. They were to address him as "sir" or "Mr. Morris," and to bow and acknowledge each other by name when they begin each session.

In the photography class, professional photographer Moni Taylor will teach students light, composition and the art of both color and black-and-white photography. Her main goal for the class is to teach the students photography as art and to view it in new ways. By focusing their visions, she said, they could create art from almost nothing.

Students will learn to take photos in four styles: portrait, landscape, urban and journalistic. Through weekly assignments and field trips, they will have opportunities to shoot numerous subjects. At the end of the semester, they will present their work.

In the third elective class, students are learning the art and science of making movies.

Taught by Curt Arledge, program development director for Asheville's public access channel URTV, the class will learn how to operate film and editing equipment, write scripts and then create a four- to seven-minute film.

The short film will be aired on URTV.

Fasting for justice

Christ's followers are obliged to identify with the less fortunate

Fasting is not easy. It's a difficult Lenten practice to embrace. After all, eating good food is one of life's joys. But too much of even a good thing is unhealthy.

For those of us who consume more than we should, eating less or denying ourselves fattening treats improves not only our physical health, but aids our spiritual life as well.

Saying no to the urge to eat more helps build the discipline we need to say no to the more serious temptations — like self-centeredness — thrust at us by Satan.

Fasting is meant to help us temper our desires and concentrate more on the needs of others. And if it doesn't do that, it's nothing more than a form of dieting.

Fasting is not an end in itself. Rather, fasting should serve as a means to a more compassionate lifestyle.

By denying ourselves a bit of food, we begin in a very small way to experience hunger. And that taste of hunger should lead us to a higher level of concern for the countless men, women and children who suffer the terrible pains of hunger and poverty every day.

Our highly consumerist society with its constant bombardment of messages to buy more things we simply do not need tempts us to ignore the genuine needs of the poor.

So instead of giving from our substance, as Pope John Paul II urged, we throw crumbs to the poor from our abundance.

The U.S. government does the same thing. The former chair of the board of directors of Catholic Relief Services, Bishop John Ricard of Pensacola-Tallahassee, Fla., said, "The United States is the richest nation on earth. And it is a scandal that we are the last among the industrialized nations in terms of per capita spending on development assistance for the poorest countries in the world."

As Catholic citizens we need to urge local, state and national public officials to permanently fast from indifference toward the poor and greatly increase funds for poverty reduction.

In the Book of Isaiah, the prophet reveals the kind of fast that is truly pleasing to God: "To loose the bonds of injustice ... to let the oppressed go free ... to share your bread with the hungry, and bring the homeless poor into your house; when you see the naked, to cover them."

Because most of us are not suffering from injustice, not oppressed, not hungry, not homeless, not poor or naked, we don't really understand the pain of those who do suffer these cruelties.

As followers of the Christ, who made himself poor, we are obliged to find ways to identify with those who have so little. And fasting is a way to begin. But we should not stop there.

Educating ourselves on the causes of hunger and poverty, assisting at a soup kitchen or homeless shelter, volunteering to help programs like Habitat for Humanity and sponsoring a child in the developing world are some of the ways we can begin to understand and respond to the pain of those who suffer.

"Then," in the words of Isaiah, our "light shall break forth like the dawn"; we will call out and "the Lord will answer ... 'Here I am.'"

Self-sacrifice in the defense of life

What kind of disciples do we want to be?

On Palm Sunday, Jesus rode into Jerusalem on a donkey.

Though he was God, he humbled himself to come among us as an embryo. He was born in a stable, worked as a humble carpenter and now he rides into Jerusalem on a donkey knowing he will be betrayed, rejected and crucified.

Christ's Passion reminds us of how great his love is for us. He humbled himself and willingly submitted to such tremendous suffering for us.

The Passion should remind us of our dignity and the dignity of each and every human being created in the likeness of God.

Cardinal John Henry Newman points out that even if you were the only sinner in the world, Jesus would have undergone his Passion just for you. We are made in the image and likeness of God, redeemed by his blood. Our destiny is to share everlasting happiness with him in heaven.

This dignity belongs to every human being from the moment of conception to natural death. If we fail to appreciate our dignity in the eyes of God or out of sinful pride reject God in his commandments, then we will begin to evaluate others falsely by wealth, health, prestige, outward appearance, size and stage of development.

Many live as if there was no God or they make themselves like gods or claim rights that belong to God alone — who lives, who dies, interfering with God's plan for procreation through contraception, in-vitro fertilization, abortion, cloning and experimenting on human embryos, euthanasia or physician assisted suicide.

We can be tempted to separate ourselves from others, caring only about ourselves and our families alone, with little thought given to eternal life or correcting injustices. But Jesus taught us that we must imitate his humble service.

He taught us the way to salvation was to take up our own cross and follow him.

A true follower of Christ will not be afraid to make sacrifices and even face death. By his death and resurrection, Jesus has taken away the sting of death.

Shortly before his own death, Pope John Paul II said: "We must get used to thinking confidently about the mystery of death so that the definitive encounter with God occurs in a climate of interior peace."

Christians don't fear death, but nor do they cause death. When the early Christians embraced the faith, they rejected abortion and infanticide that were common at that time.

The Second Vatican Council called abortion and euthanasia infamies that poison human society. It said they do more harm to those who practice them than to those who suffer the injury.

Guest Column

FATHER PETER WEST
GUEST COLUMNIST

Sin always hurts the sinner more than anyone. Judas and Pontius Pilate did more to harm themselves than they did to hurt Jesus.

A woman who had an abortion once said to me about her abortion "The baby dies once, but the woman dies a little bit every day." But the good news is that Christ died for sinners. And through Rachel's Vineyard retreats and other post abortion ministries, we promote a message of forgiveness and hope.

All of us are called by Christ to serve, to spread his Gospel of mercy and life. What kind of disciples will we be? Will we be like the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. John the Apostle and St. Mary Magdalene who stood faithfully at the foot of the cross?

Or will we be like Peter who denied Jesus, Judas who betrayed him, Pontius Pilate who condemned an innocent man or the crowd who called out for Barabbas?

Ask God to help you recognize your dignity as a child of God who died for you. Pray that God will help you to protect the dignity of others, especially those most threatened.

Through the Eucharist, which Christ left us as a memorial of his suffering and death, may he give us the strength to build a culture of life.

Considering the Catholic concept of marriage

Points of light in a culture that shrugs off commitment

When a National Football League coach's commitment to return next season rates a news conference, when a popular movie's title for the marriage commitment is "Definitely, Maybe," it is refreshing to hear a more accurate view of commitment.

A nationwide survey of U.S. Catholics' attitudes and practices regarding marriage was released earlier this month by the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate at Georgetown University in Washington.

Commissioned by the U.S. bishops, the survey found marriage patterns among Catholics consistent with all Americans: 53 percent married, 25 percent never married, 12 percent divorced, five percent widowed, four percent living with a partner and one percent separated.

While the survey may cause bishops as teachers some concern about Catholics' knowledge of church teachings concerning marriage, it offers much, suggesting that a plurality are living out the quality of marriage that those very church teachings are meant to bring about.

Eighty-seven per cent said their views are at least somewhat consistent with the belief that marriage is a lifelong commitment. Slightly over half feel the same about marriage being a calling from God or a vocation.

Pretty good numbers in a culture that shrugs off commitment.

Much was made of the coach returning, but little was said about the contract that committed him to another term. Doesn't that count?

The movie's theme centers around a divorced father recounting to his young daughter his earlier love life, having her guess which of the three women her mother is.

Neither is the model of commitment.

The survey sought opinions on how Catholic marriage differs from the concept of marriage in secular society or other faiths. Common themes of many responses mentioned the sacramental nature of marriage, the presence of God at the wedding and in their marriage, and a stronger, long-lasting commitment.

There were some difficulties in correctly answering questions about raising children Catholic and specific teaching on divorce.

"Not surprisingly, the study paints a mixed picture," said Archbishop Joseph E. Kurtz of Louisville, Ky., chair of the sponsoring committee. "It gives us reasons to be grateful and hopeful. It also raises concerns and presents us with challenges."

Surveys filled with relational databases to be crosschecked can be chock full of information. Often lost in the demographics, numbers and percentages is the humanity.

The CARA survey, in an appendix, provided answers to open-ended questions. Reading page after page of these brief replies limited to 100 words is to overhear thoughtful reflections.

Some are inspiring, some are poignant, a few humorous. All seem to concretize a theology of marriage.

"I have a wonderful husband and our problems are few and far between," wrote one woman. "Our thoughts are so close together and we work on whatever comes our way and manage to sort things out. That is what marriage is all about."

"Faith plays an important part when problems arise," wrote another. "Prayer and faith help to resolve all issues."

"Love is a choice made daily and not a romantic interlude," one respondent noted.

Asked about important values, one person said, "Complete trust of each other in everything. Honesty, concern and love for the welfare of the other."

However, in the "I bet you wish you didn't say that" category, responding to how Catholic marriage differs, another answered, "We believe the man should be in control."

Not all responses, of course, were positive. Many stated they saw no distinct difference between Catholic and secular marriage.

"The Catholic concept of marriage is somewhat out of date with the fast changing world," one person replied.

To that may we say amen and thanks be to God.

another beautiful insight on how to cope with aging. During his papacy he was forever emphasizing the human dignity of the person.

More than this, he believed that God's breath is in each of us.

The word "enthusiasm" comes from the Greek, meaning God's spirit/breath is within us. When the divine energy in enthusiasm combines with the human energy of imagination, we have a perfect formula for staying young at heart.

To cope with the fears of aging, three basic principles of our faith must be kept alive:

1. Believing that God's living breath is within us and is at the heart of our enthusiasm.

2. Imagining what God's will is for us in our particular stage of life.

3. Maintaining our God-given gift of humanity in the midst of debilitating aches and pains.

Pope says Lent is time to live as witnesses of charity

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI said Lent is a time for Christians to live as "witnesses of charity," demonstrating that love is a defining characteristic of their faith.

"Lent is a privileged time for all Christians to recommit themselves to conversion and spiritual renewal. In this way, we rekindle a genuine faith in Christ, a life-giving relationship with God and a more fervent dedication to the Gospel," the pope said at his general audience Feb. 20.

"Strengthened by the conviction that love is the distinguishing mark of Christian believers, I encourage you to persevere in bearing witness to charity in your daily lives," he said.

The pope continued his series of audience talks on St. Augustine, citing numerous works that have influenced the life of the church and helped form Western culture.

St. Augustine's best-known work was "Confessions," in which he confessed his own weaknesses and praised God's grace and mercy, the pope said.

The "Confessions" had a great impact even in St. Augustine's day. The pope quoted the saint as acknowledging that the work had "pleased many of my brothers."

Looking up from his text, the pope said with a smile, "And I have to say that I am one of these brothers."

The packed audience hall broke into applause.

The pope wrote his doctoral thesis on the notion of the people of God in St. Augustine, and the fifth-century theologian and bishop has influenced deeply the pope's own writings.

In his audience talk, the pope explained that while St. Augustine was a great intellectual, he dedicated much of his life to more simple pastoral works and sermons.

The saint once suspended his dictation of the great work, "De Trinitate" (On the Trinity), because he thought the writing was too difficult for all but a few people, and he wanted to spend more time on pastoral tracts, the pope said.

"So it was more useful for him to communicate the faith in a comprehensive way to everyone rather than write great theological works," the pope said.

Rather than closing himself off from others, St. Augustine lived his life in dialogue with God and with other people, he said.

"Although Augustine is renowned for his towering intellect and vast body of writings, his primary concern was always to spread the Christian message," said the pope.

From aging agelessly to staying young at heart

God's breath is in each one of us, guiding us always

When actor Charles Durning received the Lifetime Achievement Award during the 14th annual Screen Actors Guild Awards show, he recalled a time he considered leaving the acting business:

"When I said I was ready to quit, my wife Mary Ann said, 'Yeah? Then what?'"

As I chuckled upon hearing this, I recalled an article by Jesuit Father Myles Sheehan, who is also a physician.

He points out, "There is something profoundly wrong in thinking that older persons need to rest and be entertained, ... to watch TV and listen to someone play old songs on the piano."

One of Father Sheehan's major concerns is what he calls "aging apartheid," which translates into "placing older persons in old-age communities or facilities where the old and sick are clustered together."

"Sometimes the biggest threats to health in aging are not a lack of medical resources," Father Sheehan contends, "but a lack of imagination in how we envision the life and role in the community of older persons, and how we welcome the elderly into the church.

"Health and aging require a broad look at what it means to be human."

Albert Einstein once said that "imagination is more important than knowledge."

When we study the lives of elderly people who were extremely productive and inspiring, we learn their secret to success was imagination. Take, for example, elderly actors and actresses who played imaginative, elderly roles that inspired us to be exemplary elders.

Many of the saints who lived to old age were forever seeking creative ways for increasing their selflessness and service. As old and hampered by a bad heart as Mother Theresa was, she taught us more in her old age about how to give 100 percent of one's self than she did when she was young.

Thanks to the indefatigable imagination of these elders, we possess awesome lessons from people who never retired, despite their infirmities.

Pope John Paul II gives us yet

Parishioners

presentation, Father DeAngelo tied together Gospel quotes and other books of the New Testament to emphasize God's love and mercy for his people and his desire to reunite sinners

Youth ministry members

The Stations, or Way, of with portrayals of Christ's passion held during the weeks leading up to Easter.

"The teens presented a meditation of the Lord's passion through the 14 stations," said Rosemary Hyman, parish communications coordinator.

"The power and reverence of their performance brought to life the power of Jesus' love for us, and the depths of the suffering he endured to ransom us from the sin of this world."

"Our teens demonstrated in our community," she said.

RELEASING THE ART WITHIN

Surrounded by woodworking tools, Precious Blood Sister Eileen Tomlinson works on a 70-pound walnut log in Dayton, Ohio, defining the basic form of a statue of her order's foundress, Mother Maria Anna Brunner. The 90-year-old artist spent up to two hours a day for four months on the carving.

At age 90, Precious Blood sister who is an artist still going strong

DAYTON, Ohio (CNS) — Most people looking at a block of wood or stone see a block of wood or stone. But Precious Blood Sister Eileen Tomlinson apparently thinks like the great Renaissance artist Michelangelo.

According to legend, Michelangelo said that when he looked at a block of marble he saw the figure within, waiting to be released.

Last winter, Sister Tomlinson looked at a large log of walnut wood and saw more than what met the eye. She saw Mother Maria Anna Brunner, the Swiss-born foundress of the Sisters of the Precious Blood.

And she soon went to work to free her.

In their 162-year history, the Dayton-based Sisters of the Precious Blood have had no shortage of talented women, artists who work in almost every medium. But Sister Tomlinson's talents range across an incredibly wide artistic spectrum: oil, acrylic and watercolor painting, pen-and-ink illustration, calligraphy, sculpture and woodcarving.

Trained as an artist, Sister Tomlinson was an art teacher for many years in Ohio and California before she "retired" to the motherhouse in Dayton's Salem Heights area in 1997.

Since then she has been the unofficial artist-in-residence at the motherhouse, in constant demand for her artistic work.

The newest statue of Mother Brunner is just one in a long line of smaller predecessors. For several years now, Sister Tomlinson's statuettes of the foundress, in different sizes, have graced displays at congregational events and have been given as gifts to sisters for special occasions.

Because of the demand for the statues, it was impossible for Sister Tomlinson to keep making them herself. From her original sculpture, resin copies were made, but even now that they're commercially produced, Sister Tomlinson still adds her personal touch: She lovingly hand-colors each one.

The time commitment and sheer physical labor involved in transforming a large piece of wood into a finished statue are considerable. Wielding a heavy carver's mallet and carving tools is a challenge at any age — and Sister Tomlinson celebrated her 90th birthday last year.

But she was undeterred in beginning this labor of love.

"I guess I am just so fond of Mother Brunner that I felt I wanted to help out," she explained.

A donor provided the large walnut log. Almost 3 feet tall and 17 inches in diameter, the log weighed 70 pounds.

She devoted up to two hours a day on the carving, from mid-January through most of April 2007.

Last fall, the carving of the foundress was blessed and enshrined in a place of honor at the Maria Stein Center. There, Sister Tomlinson's labor of love is now enjoyed by many pilgrims.

Cuban bishops hope new president will respond to demands of citizens

HAVANA (CNS) — Cuba's Catholic bishops expressed hope that the country's new president, Raul Castro, and the governing council he heads will respond decisively to the demands of the island-nation's citizens.

In a Feb. 25 statement, the Cuban bishops' conference said it prayed that the legislature, known as the National Assembly of People's Power, the governing Council of State and the president would move ahead "decisively (with) transcendental measures that we know must be progressive."

The bishops said they hoped the moves "can begin to satisfy the longings and concerns expressed by Cubans."

The statement referred to the call made by the island's "top authorities" in September and October for Cubans to debate "the most urgent problems of all kinds" that were affecting the people.

Raul Castro was chosen Feb. 24 to replace his brother, Fidel Castro, who resigned because of illness after nearly half a century in power. Fidel Castro temporarily handed his duties over to Raul Castro July 31, 2006.

The bishops said they prayed, as they did in 2006, that "nothing will perturb the greater good of peace."

They said that the official designation of Raul Castro as president and the coinciding official pastoral visit to Cuba by the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, were events "of an exceptional nature."

Cardinal Bertone's Feb. 20-26 trip was 10 years after Pope John Paul II's historic 1998 visit to Cuba. Before leaving Feb. 26, Cardinal Bertone was scheduled to become the first foreign official to meet with the nation's new president.

FROM THE VATICAN

Vatican diplomat: Catholics, Muslims must learn more about religions

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Catholics and Muslims must learn more about each other's religions if they want to get along better, said the Vatican ambassador in Egypt and former president of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue.

"Rather than just knowing persons, we must know their religion more deeply in order to understand the people," Archbishop Michael Fitzgerald told Vatican Radio.

The archbishop was interviewed Feb. 24, the evening before the annual Catholic-Muslim dialogue meeting of Vatican representatives with members of Cairo's al-Azhar University.

"We know that among Muslims and Christians there are common points, although certainly not a common faith in Christ," Archbishop Fitzgerald said.

"We must respect the differences while trying to find spheres in which it would be possible to collaborate and help one another," he said.

The dialogue with the Cairo-based university, a point of reference for many Muslims around the world, was marking its 10th annual session.

Archbishop Fitzgerald said the theme chosen for the meeting was "Faith in God and Love for One's Neighbor as a Foundation for Interreligious Dialogue."

"I hope that this can give a new impulse to relations between Christians and Muslims in the world," he said.

Pointing to the October letter of 138 Muslim scholars to Pope Benedict XVI and other Christian leaders, the archbishop said there are signs that Muslims are increasingly interested in dialogue with Christians.

"It makes me very happy to see their initiative," he said. And the fact that the scholars' letter focused on love of God and love of neighbor, two key points for Christians, "gives new hope for reaching a deeper dialogue."

Everyone is responsible for caring for environment, says U.N. nuncio

NEW YORK (CNS) — Ongoing debate about climate change "has helped put into focus the inescapable responsibility of one and all to care for the environment," the Vatican's U.N. nuncio told the U.N. General Assembly Feb. 13.

This has resulted in "building consensus around the common objective of promoting a healthy environment for present and future generations," he said.

The underlying theme in the nuncio's statement to the 62nd session of the General Assembly was that a concern for humanity, in particular for those most vulnerable to the effects of climate change, translates into a concern for the environment.

"Thus we are better equipped to adopt strategies and policies which balance the needs of humanity with the urgency for a more responsible stewardship," he said.

He restated the Holy See's commitment to implementing the goals and objectives set out in the U.N. Climate Change Conference in Bali, held Dec. 3-14, 2007, and the "personal commitment and numerous public appeals of Pope Benedict XVI," who has called for "a renewed sense of respect for and the need to safeguard God's creation."

He noted that individuals and communities have started to change their lifestyle, knowing that "personal and collective behavior impacts climate and the overall health of the environment," and added that even the smallest effort "to reduce or offset one's carbon footprint" shows commitment to the environment.

Archbishop Migliore reminded the assembly that the Vatican has already taken steps to reduce and offset the carbon emissions of Vatican City State through the use of solar panels, to be installed this year on its audience hall, and its collaboration in a reforestation project in Hungary.

He explained that sustainable economic development must "take into account the demands of environmental preservation, climate change, economic development and basic human needs."

The archbishop also advocated the use of "clean technologies" as an important component of sustainable development.

It is important for highly industrialized societies to share with underdeveloped countries their more advanced and cleaner technologies to "avoid the errors that others committed in the past," he said.

Six U.S. prelates named as delegates, alternates to October synod

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Six U.S. bishops have been named as delegates or alternates to the October world Synod of Bishops that focuses on the Bible.

Among the delegates are the president and vice president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago and Bishop Gerald F. Kicanas of Tucson, Ariz., respectively.

The other two delegates are Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston and Archbishop Donald W. Wuerl of Washington.

Bishop William S. Skylstad of Spokane, Wash., the immediate past USCCB president, has been named as an alternate, as has Cardinal Justin Rigali of Philadelphia.

The U.S. delegates and alternates were elected by the bishops' conference and ratified by the pope; their names were released in February.

The outline for the synod, scheduled for Oct. 5-26, emphasized Christian belief that Jesus Christ is the fullest expression of the word of God and that the entire Bible can be understood only in reference to Jesus. The outline also mentioned the Bible as a potential source for promoting dialogue with other religions, particularly through explaining each other's sacred texts.

Catechists study prayer, work toward certification

MORGANTON — Catechists in the diocese recently spent a day with prayer.

As a continuation of its "Sowers of Seed" catechist training and adult faith formation enrichment series, the diocesan faith formation office's Central Region Leadership Team held "A Day with Prayer" workshops at St. Charles Borromeo Church in Morganton Feb. 16.

Approximately 40 participants took part in the English- and Spanish-language workshops that provided catechists with certification in the diocesan Catechist Recognition Process, a competency-based catechist formation process program.

There were two themes of the Spanish-language workshops: "The Bible and Catechesis" was led by Dario Garcia, Hickory Vicariate Hispanic ministry volunteer; and "The Creed and Catechesis" was led by Jose Cuahutemoc Gonzalez, Boone Vicariate Hispanic ministry coordinator.

The English-language workshops included a keynote address by Father Conrad Hoover, a retired priest of the Diocese of Charlotte.

Father Hoover spoke about the various forms of prayer, elaborating on specific prayer expressions such as the Jesus Prayer, "lectio divina" and the Liturgy of the Hours.

Father Hoover urged the audience to find and practice personally meaningful prayer methods and to set aside time for praying. He reminded them that while a "pray always" attitude is good, we cannot pray at all times without specific, intentional times of prayer.

Other segments included presentations by members of the Central Region Leadership Team. Mary Sorel, faith formation director at St. John Baptiste de la Salle Church in North Wilkesboro, offered information about temperamental prayer, in which prayer style is matched with personality type.

formation director at Queen of the Apostles Church in Belmont, led the group through the steps of "lectio divina" (praying with Scripture) using the first reading from the Liturgy of the Word for Sunday, Feb. 17.

Terri Martino, faith formation director at St. Charles Borromeo Church, divided participants into two choirs and led them through Morning Prayer, Matins, from the Liturgy of the Hours for that day.

To conclude the English-language workshop, Carol Brown, faith formation director for St. Elizabeth of the Hill Country Church in Boone, read aloud a guided meditation from the book "Nine Ways to Reach God."

The Office of Faith Formation is a ministry funded in part by contributions to the Diocesan Support Appeal. The 2008 DSA campaign runs Feb. 2-March 9.

Dr. Cris Villapando, director of faith formation programs for the Diocese of Charlotte, awards an official recognition by Bishop Peter J. Jugis to Arthur Aquino, unit servant leader of Couples for Christ, during a meeting at St. Matthew Church in Charlotte Feb. 17.

The recognition endorses the 2005 decree by the Vatican approving Couples for Christ as an international, private association of the faithful.

Formally named Couples for Christ Global Mission Foundation, Couples for Christ is a Catholic organization founded in 1981 in the Philippines and is now in approximately 160 countries. Its mission is for the renewal and strengthening of Christian family life.

The organization has chapters for youths (Youths for Christ), single women (Handmaids of the Lord) and single men (Servants of the Lord).

Baptized or bobbing?

Jim McCullough, director of religious education at Our Lady of Grace Church in Greensboro, discusses the topic "Were You Baptized? (Or Are You Just Bobbing Along?)" at Holy Infant Church in Reidsville Feb. 16. Baptism is one of the three sacraments of initiation (along with confirmation and first Communion) in the Catholic Church.

Parishioners examine 'Joy of Reconciliation'

The sacrament of reconciliation was given to the Catholic Church by Jesus on the day of his resurrection, said Father DeAngelo.

Jesus instituted the sacrament when he "breathed upon the college of Apostles and said, 'Whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven ... retained,'" said Father DeAngelo. Thus, "the church is in charge of the form this sacrament was to take."

Reconciliation is to help humanity "change our hearts," said Father DeAngelo, and priests are given divine authority to forgive sins.

"This means that priests are not in the confessional to be judge and jury, but to administer God's mercy and forgiveness," he said.

An important item for people to remember, said Father DeAngelo, is that "in the sacrament of reconciliation, people are coming to Christ, not to the priest."

"It was Jesus' desire not to condemn sinner but to set them free," he said.

When a sinner unveils his or her soul to Jesus in the person of the priest, the priest — acting in Jesus' name — forgives the confessed sins and offers a penance for the repentant sinner.

"Jesus is the greatest psychologist there ever was," said Father DeAngelo. "As the Son of God, Jesus knows human hearts. He knows our strengths and our weaknesses. Therefore, he understands that there needs to be human contact; that when the repentant sinner leaves the confessional reconciled, he knows that he has been touched by God and has been reunited to the faith community."

Father DeAngelo traced the sacrament of reconciliation from its inception in the early church, when it was administered only once in a person's lifetime and with severe penances.

This changed over time, said Father DeAngelo. By the 11th century, for example, Irish monks were administering it more often with less severe penances.

After Vatican II, the sacrament was emphasized as the "resurgence of the church's administration of God's love," said Father DeAngelo.

Today, he said, the sacrament should be received at least once a month and without "laundry lists of sins" to confess, even if only to gain the graces attached to the sacrament.

"For reconciliation is not the cleansing of sin only ... but the reconciliation of the sinner to the community," said Father DeAngelo. "Therefore, there is a need to look for remedies without feeling guilty over silly stuff. At the same time, there must be a healthy examination of conscience."

Audience members took away a new outlook on the sacrament.

"I discovered that it's OK to be human," said parishioner Bunny Pittman. "We must know that God is almighty, but that he is always with us. He knows more than we know what it is to be human."

DID YOU KNOW?

The sacrament of reconciliation can be administered according to three different rites: individual confession and absolution, a communal penance service with individual confession, and absolution or a communal penance service with generic confession and general absolution.

The use of the third rite is permitted only when certain strict conditions are met.

Confession is only part of the sacrament of reconciliation, not another term for the sacrament. Absolution is the sacramental act by the priest freeing penitents of their sins.

Study: Drop in U.S. Catholics offset by immigrants

Catholic Church has been hardest hit by these shifts, but that the influx of Catholic immigrants has offset the loss.

So, the percentage of the adult population that identifies itself as Catholic has held fairly steady at around 25 percent, it says.

The 148-page study, "U.S. Religious Landscape Survey," was conducted by the Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life and based on interviews with 35,000 adults last year. Its findings, released Feb. 25, show that roughly 10 percent of all Americans are former Catholics. Almost half of these former Catholics joined Protestant denominations, while about half do not have a religious affiliation and a small percentage chose other faiths.

"If everyone raised Catholic stayed (with their religious affiliation), Catholics would be one-third of the population," said John Green, a senior research fellow and a principal author of the study.

In a Feb. 25 teleconference with reporters, Green attributed the shifts in religious affiliation to "lifecycle effects," or the changes young people make when they are on their own. He also said the changes in religious affiliation could be explained in part by the diversity of today's American society where there are "a greater number of options."

The Catholic Church was not the only religious affiliation to lose members. Study researchers said they found an overall fluidity of religious affiliation.

Baptists experienced a net loss of 3.7 percent and Methodists lost 2.1 percent.

Figures relating to the Catholic Church show that 31.4 percent of adults in the United States said they were raised Catholic while only 23.9 percent of them identify with the Catholic Church today, giving the church a net loss of 7.5 percent.

"Everybody in this country is losing members; everybody is gaining members," said Luis Lugo, director of the Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life, during the teleconference. "It is a very competitive marketplace and if you rest on your laurels, you're going to be history."

According to the survey, 78.4 percent of Americans are Christians, about 5 percent belong to other faith traditions and 16.1 percent are unaffiliated with any religion, which the survey described as the fastest-growing religious category in America.

The respondents who said they were not affiliated with any particular faith today are more than double the number who said they weren't affiliated with any particular religion as children. Among Americans ages 18-29, one-quarter say they are not currently affiliated with any particular religion. The survey's researchers said the study also confirms that the United States is "on the verge of becoming a minority Protestant country."

Although roughly 51 percent of Americans said they are members of Protestant denominations, the study points to "significant internal diversity and fragmentation" among Protestants where "hundreds of different denominations (are) loosely grouped around three fairly distinct religious traditions — evangelical Protestant churches, mainline Protestant churches and historically black Protestant churches."

The researchers said the increase in Latin American members projects not only a future trend for the makeup of American Catholicism, but for the United States as a whole.

According to the survey, Latinos already account for roughly one in three adult Catholics overall and may account for an even larger share of U.S. Catholics in the future. It said Latinos represent roughly one in eight U.S. Catholics age 70 and older and account for nearly half of all Catholics ages 18-29.

In the 46-county Diocese of Charlotte, Latinos make up more than half the Catholic population.

CRS program for doctors in Congo helps ease plight of female victims, children

BY BRONWEN DAHCS
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — A church-run training program for rural doctors in the Democratic Republic of Congo has helped ease the plight of women in the war-torn eastern region where sexual violence is common, an aid worker said.

Because of the program, run by the U.S. bishops' Catholic Relief Services, doctors are able to help the seriously wounded, mostly rape victims, at village hospitals, said Lane Hartill, regional information officer for CRS in West Africa.

Otherwise, doctors would have to tell patients to walk long distances to bigger centers "on almost impassable roads in atrocious condition," he told Catholic News Service in a mid-February telephone interview from Dakar, Senegal.

Dr. Freddy Mubuto, 32, whom Hartill got to know on a recent visit to Congo from Dakar, where he is based, worked alone for two years at Nyamibungu hospital in South Kivu province before another doctor joined him this year.

Mubuto found it heartbreaking to refer his patients to Panzi hospital in Bukavu, eastern Congo's top medical facility, knowing that most of them would have to walk the 135 miles or be carried through the mud on "what resembles a goat track more than a road," Hartill said.

"There isn't much transport because the roads are so bad," he said.

After a training course at Panzi hospital provided to rural doctors in South Kivu last year by CRS, Mubuto is now able to perform simple operations to repair damage to women who have been raped, Hartill said.

Mubuto's Nyamibungu hospital serves a population of more than 100,000 people. Nyamibungu is close to a jungle that serves as a hiding place for Rwandan Hutu rebels who fled rather than face prosecution at home for their involvement in the 1994 genocide against Tutsis, Hartill told CNS.

These men are notorious for their violence, and villagers told him that they "come into the village at night and rape women and steal crops."

Warring rebels and militias signed a cease-fire in late January in eastern Congo, where conflict has raged for years despite the formal end of the country's 1998-2003 war.

Some 800,000 people were forced to flee their homes in the past year and sexual violence in the region has escalated, reported the British news agency Reuters.

Mubuto and other eastern Congolese doctors "see the results of brutal rapes where women are violated with guns and sticks," Hartill said.

The surgery Mubuto and other rural doctors are now able to perform is "life-changing for these women, many of whom are left incontinent after the attack," Hartill said.

Rape victims are generally "cast aside and ignored in their villages," he said.

And malnourished children now line up to see Mubuto, Hartill said.

"That didn't happen before the war — everything grows in Congo; it's a greenhouse," he said.

"But now with militias stealing crops and villagers displaced because of the fighting, Mubuto sees more and more malnourished children," he said.

Ghanaian proves how CRS is making a difference

Awiaipo's U.S. tour to thank Catholic communities for support and to raise awareness about hunger, relief and development overseas.

Awiaipo's Charlotte presentation was sponsored by the diocesan Office of Justice and Peace. He spoke of his experiences fighting poverty and hunger in Ghana through CRS, and also shared how he overcame his personal struggle against poverty through education.

He was born in northern Ghana around 1969, though he's not exactly sure when.

"I actually do not know how old I am. I do not know when my real birthday is," he said.

But he knows that his parents died when he was young, age 9 or so.

He does not know what disease took his parents, but he remembers them in their sickbeds. He had three brothers — two died and the eldest went missing.

He remembers appealing to the ancestors through animal sacrifices, and then came the day he felt he was on his own in the world.

As an orphan in the village of Wiaga,

"For me, CRS was a savior. I want the Catholic community in America to know about the work CRS is doing."

— Thomas Awiaipo

young Thomas survived by begging and becoming a child laborer. He would move from farm to farm, barefoot or wearing cardboard shoes, offering to work for food. He has never forgotten the fear that went with going to bed hungry.

He had never even considered going to school until he heard that students got lunch. He saw troops of happy children headed to school and made the decision to join them.

CRS provided the food that drew Awiaipo.

His village received help from CRS' Operation Rice Bowl. During Lent, Operation Rice Bowl participants pledge to pray, fast in solidarity with those around the world who suffer from hunger, learn about the global community and the challenges of poverty overseas, and give sacrificial contributions to those in need.

He sat through classes mostly for the meal of wheat and sorghum cereal and milk powder.

"I had come for the food, and I got the food, but I began to realize that I was enjoying the classes as much as the food," he said. Laughing, he added, "CRS used the food to trick me into getting an education."

Young Awiaipo was a smart child, and the Missionaries of Africa (once known as the White Fathers) who ran the school took notice. One priest gave him shoes and extra food.

"They stepped in and made life better for me," he said.

As he entered adolescence, he accepted the missionaries' offer to study

Christianity, and they asked him to take an exam that qualified him to attend a Catholic high school.

Awiaipo said he went from being hungry for food to being hungry for education. After high school, he went to junior college on scholarships. Then he went back to teach at his alma mater.

He went to the seminary for a number of years and then came to the United States to complete a master's degree in public administration.

Today he is married and is the father of three children.

He returned to Ghana to do, as he said, "as others did for him" — to bring help to those who hunger for both food and learning.

Now, it is part of his job to make sure schools in Ghana get food for lunches and snacks. He also trains community leaders throughout Ghana.

He knows many others from his village who went to school — because of the promise of a meal — and have since succeeded in life.

"For me, CRS was a savior. They built a school, put food in that school, and I went to that school," said Awiaipo.

"I want the Catholic community in America to know about the work CRS is doing," he said.

While in Charlotte, Awiaipo met with Msgr. Mauricio W. West, vicar general and chancellor of the diocese. To Msgr. West, Awiaipo expressed his sincere thanks to the people of the diocese for their support of CRS's work.

Two guides to greater communion with God and a resource on prayer

REVIEWED BY SISTER MONA CASTELAZO, CSJ
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Both "Prayer" by Servite Sister Joyce Rupp and "Prayer That Relieves Stress and Worry" by Eddie Ensley offer suggestions for personal communion with God.

"The Tradition of Catholic Prayer" by the monks of St. Meinrad explains the historical roots of traditional theologies and practices in the church.

Sister Rupp's book is a concise summary of her experience and teachings on prayer. Each chapter begins with an original poem and ends with reflection questions and a prayer.

Well-known authors, including Richard Rohr, Paula D'Arcy, Sandra Schneiders, Elizabeth Johnson, Dorothy Soelle, Margaret Silf, Thomas Merton and others, are quoted.

The author sees prayer as a process of transformation leading to personal wholeness, through experiencing both positive and negative feelings. Prayer styles change with growth and, depending on the circumstances, can even include "emergency prayers," such as the single word "Help!"

Sister Rupp herself found that she had to "slowly let go of the old message of having to earn God's love by matching up to some divine expectation."

She suggests that the goal is not to "pray right" but to become less egocentric and controlling and more aware and compassionate.

Although many different prayer forms are covered, Sister Rupp concludes that there is no "best way to pray" applicable to everyone. We must find and trust the type of prayer best suited for each of us and allow others to do the same.

Each chapter of "Prayer That Relieves Stress and Worry" contains scriptural passages, examples from Ensley's own life and those to whom he has ministered, prayers written by the author and questions for journaling.

"Worry is a disease of the imagination," writes Ensley.

The antidote he offers is mainly a type of prayer that utilizes the mind, such as imagining warm feelings and conversations with Jesus and addressing journal questions such as "If God wrote a letter to you about your worries and stresses, what do you think he would say?"

Ensley's book may be helpful for some, but its focus on prayer is limited to its use as a pain-reliever for stress and worry. It is specifically written for Christians and emphasizes imaging prayer in which we picture Jesus as a warm, consoling, safe presence who relieves us of our burdens by carrying them himself.

The author's pragmatic approach does not present prayer as an ongoing transformative process, but mainly as an "anchor for a restless soul" and a refuge from suffering.

"The Tradition of Catholic Prayer" offers a comprehensive history which describes traditional prayer practices in the church, their origins and their development.

The book is written by 16 monks of St. Meinrad, each taking a chapter and providing a helpful bibliography for further reading at the end.

The first section traces prayer traditions from the Old Testament to the present day.

From prayers of the early saints, martyrs and monastics, the authors cover such influential figures as Evagrius, Cassian, John Climacus, Gregory of Nyssa, Augustine, Julian of Norwich, Bonaventure, the Spanish mystics, Newman, Rahner, von Balthasar, St. Therese, Dorothy Day and many more.

The central section focuses on liturgical prayer, its historical development and specific detailed forms of ritual. The liturgical year, the Liturgy of the Hours, and the Eucharist are thoroughly explained.

The last section describes certain forms of prayers such as "lectio divina," prayers to Mary and the saints, visual aids to prayer and conversational prayer.

This work is neither a how-to book nor one to be used for inspirational reading. Although it presents no startling insights, it will be valuable as a factual resource text, providing a detailed history and description of traditional Catholic prayer practices and theological reflection.

Sister Castelazo, a member of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet, has taught English for many years in Los Angeles.

Redemption is worth waiting for

BY JEFF HENSLEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

Lent is a time of waiting and hoping and of sacrifice, knowing that hope will not disappoint, that Easter will come as a sign of life eternal.

I recently learned of a friend's trial with her daughter during the daughter's senior year of high school, of the distancing and pain the daughter put her mother through. Now a few years further on, their relationship is back on track again.

I think frequently these days of a taxi driver I rode with in Washington, a native of Kenya. When I asked if he had a tribal identity, Isaiah told me, "Everyone in Kenya is a member of a tribe."

I wonder which one he belonged to and how his relatives are faring. If they hold on to the end through the current violence, will there be an Easter day for Kenya?

And what of the waiting Europe had to endure from 1938 to 1945? More than a long Lent, more like enduring hell, how did they sustain hope?

Yet the message of Scripture, clear this weekend, is that holding out with hope, praying to the Lord for his blessing does yield fruit. Kids grow up; tribal groups reconcile; wars end; we come out on the other sides of trials, both personal and societal.

God offers us hope in Psalm 130 when the psalmist says, "More than sentinels wait for the dawn, let Israel wait for the Lord, for with the Lord is kindness and with him is plenteous redemption."

And that redemption was promised as far back as Ezekiel's time when the Lord promised in Ezekiel 37:13, "Then you shall know that I am the Lord, when I open your graves and have you rise from them, O my people!"

Jesus makes it graphically clear that this is not merely poetic language or a figure of speech when he raises Lazarus from the dead in the reading from John for this weekend: "He cried out in a loud voice, 'Lazarus, come out!' The dead man came out," wrapped in his grave clothes.

Easter is coming not just in a few weeks but in all the situations of our lives and our worlds, and it is coming in the redemption of each of us and of our entire world. Wait and see.

Questions:

What areas of your life are awaiting a redemption that only time and God can yield? How can you let go of your fears and actively wait for God's redemption?

Scripture to be Illustrated:

"I will put my spirit in you that you may live" (Ezekiel 37:14a).

Polish priest: Young priests plagiarize homilies from Internet

BY JONATHAN LUXMOORE
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WARSAW, Poland — A prominent Polish priest said young priests are using the Internet to plagiarize homilies for Masses.

"If a priest takes another person's text and presents it as his own from the pulpit, without pointing out where he got it from, this is unethical and against the law protecting authorship," said Father Wieslaw Przyczyna, co-author of the book "To Pinch or Not to Pinch."

"Unfortunately, the practice has become common here," he said.

Father Przyczyna, chairman of the Polish Homiletics Group, told Catholic News Service Feb. 25 that he had been accused of "harassing priests and exposing their weaknesses" by drawing attention to the plagiarism problem.

However, he added that more and more Polish Catholics were complaining about priests who read their Sunday homilies, while some Poles had traced the texts on the Internet and even come to Mass with their own copies.

"People realize priests are often not speaking for themselves, but merely reading someone else's sermon," said Father Przyczyna, who also heads the religious communication department at Krakow's Papal Theology Academy.

"Owners of Internet sermon Web sites have noticed increased use on Saturday nights, suggesting some priests are trying to rescue themselves at the last moment by finding a text to read out at the next day's Mass," said Father Przyczyna.

"This separates the priest from his congregation and poses a serious communication problem," he said.

Father Przyczyna said plagiarism mainly affected younger Catholic clergy familiar with the Internet.

However, he added that needs and expectations from Sunday homilies were also changing among Polish lay Catholics.

"People don't want to hear patriotic, romantic speeches today — they get enough politics from the media and come to church for a break," he said. "But there's also been a certain jauntiness and superficiality and a tendency for preachers to choose easy options."

"The homilies are often unreal and don't deal with issues affecting the lives of the real congregations standing before the pulpit," he said. "Priests should speak to people as they really are, not as virtual people."

The book, co-authored by Tomasz Naganowski, a Polish press law expert, said homily texts were covered by the same regulations as other intellectual property. It said priests who publicly used texts without permission and acknowledgment could face prosecution and up to three years in jail.

The book said Polish seminarians should be instructed on the legal situation as part of their training.

Sister Nancy Murray performs one-woman show in Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — The sister of nationally-known comedian Bill Murray recently brought her one-woman show to Charlotte.

Dominican Sister Nancy Murray performed "A Saint for Our Times," a dramatization of the life of St. Catherine of Siena, at St. Gabriel Church in Charlotte Feb. 23.

The performance benefited Sacred Heart Communications, an organization providing Catholic radio programming in the Diocese of Charlotte.

Dressed in an old-fashioned Dominican habit, Sister Murray as St. Catherine speaks out against injustice in the church and world, a theme that resonates with modern-day audiences.

The saint also taught that love of God means love of one's neighbor. The real St. Catherine, a nurse and mystic, advised popes and princes on the issues of the day. She proved to be one of the sharpest theological minds in the 1400s, even though she lacked formal education.

The Italian-born visionary's letters are considered among the most brilliant writings in the church. She died at age 33.

In 1970, Pope Paul VI named St. Catherine a doctor of the church — a title conferred on eminent ecclesiastical writers because of their learning and the holiness of their lives.

Grace Narus, a member of Sacred Heart Communications' promotions and marketing committee, conceived the idea to bring Sister Murray's play to Charlotte after reading an article about her in The Catholic News & Herald.

Sister Murray joined the Dominicans, an order of preachers and teachers, in 1966. Over the past five years, her dramatic recreation of the saint's life has evolved into a full-time ministry.

To date, Sister Murray has performed the play about 340 times, all over the world. Her brother, Bill, has seen the play twice.

One Moore byline

New writer joins staff of The Catholic News & Herald

CHARLOTTE — A new byline will soon be gracing the pages of your diocesan newspaper.

Kathleen "Katie" Moore has been hired as the new staff writer of The Catholic News & Herald.

Moore is a product of Catholic education in the Diocese of Charlotte — she attended St. Ann School and Holy Trinity Middle School in Charlotte.

She graduated from Charlotte Catholic High School before earning her bachelor's degree in communication studies from the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

At UNC-Charlotte, Moore volunteered with Catholic campus ministry and managed its newsletter. She also served as vice president of Phi Beta Delta Honor Society for International Scholars and was a member of Lambda Pi Eta Honor Society of the National Communications Association.

Prior to joining The Catholic News & Herald, Moore wrote for the national desk of NBC news, as well as for Charlotte Parent magazine and Today's Charlotte Woman magazine.

"Finding a job that allows me to combine my passion for writing with my love of the Catholic faith is a dream come true," said Moore, a parishioner of St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte.

Katie Moore

"Working in the diocese where I grew up makes this job even more meaningful because I get to enjoy the support of family and friends," she said.

At The Catholic News & Herald, Moore's assignments will include reporting on diocesan events and maintaining the Diocesan Planner, a calendar of parish- and ministry-based events within the diocese.

"I look forward to getting to know the people of the Diocese of Charlotte and I can't wait to have the privilege of telling their stories," said Moore.

A LOOK BACK

Remembering Bishop Michael J. Begley

Feb. 6 marked the six-year anniversary of the death of Bishop Michael J. Begley, the first bishop of the Diocese of Charlotte.

In honor of Bishop Begley and his legacy, below are some facts about the diocese's first bishop.

— He became a Third Order Dominican in 1949.

— Though born in Massachusetts, he was encouraged to minister as a priest in North Carolina by Bishop William Hafey, who was the first Bishop of Raleigh and happened to be a distant relative.

— As chairman of the Commission on Religion in Appalachia, he was the leader of the 26 bishops who issued the joint pastoral letter "This Land is Home to Me" in 1975.

— He had two aunts who were consecrated religious. Both were members of the Sisters of Providence.

— His second cousin, Thomas Lyons, became auxiliary bishop of Washington, D.C.

— When he was serving as first pastor of St. Ann Church in Charlotte, he baptized the future Bishop Peter J. Jugis.

— In addition to earning a master's degree in social work from UNC-Chapel Hill, he was awarded honorary degrees (doctorate of letters) from Belmont Abbey College and his alma mater, Mt. St. Mary's College in Emmitsburg, Md.

In his words

"Mary sees the sufferings, the tortures which Christ is enduring. She actually desires to relieve him of these torments and to pile them upon her own slight shoulders.

"Indeed in spirit Mary did carry the cross of Jesus, for every step of the way to the top of Mount Calvary ....

"My friends, here is a model after which we may fashion our souls. Here is the Mother of God, showing us the way to store up our strength to carry the cross of Jesus on our way of life.

"We, too, can perform our daily duties for the love of Christ, and even as Mary received strength to perform that great heroic act of love at the gate of Jerusalem, so will we receive strength necessary to perform acts, however great they may be."

Students participate in mock United Nations event

KERNERSVILLE — You're never too young to learn to work together to solve problems.

Middle school students from Triad-area Catholic schools took part in a model United Nations competition at Bishop McGuinness High School in Kernersville Jan. 16.

Participating schools were Our Lady of Grace and St. Pius X in Greensboro, Immaculate Heart of Mary in High Point, and Our Lady of Mercy and St. Leo the Great in Winston-Salem.

Model U.N. is a simulation of the United Nations that aims to educate participants about civics, effective communication, globalization and multilateral diplomacy.

In the recent competition, the Catholic students researched countries and took on roles of their foreign diplomats to participate in a simulated session of an intergovernmental organization.

The students investigated and debated current international issues and developed solutions to world problems.

The teams and their participants were recognized with various distinctions during an awards ceremony.

Tony Barker, a Bishop McGuinness student and leader of its model U.N. club, organized the competition with assistance from faculty, parents and teacher volunteers.

A look at the new Eve

A Marian reflection anticipating Pope Benedict XVI's visit to America

Within a month of Easter, Pope Benedict XVI will make his first papal visit to the United States.

In anticipation of his visit, it is worth remembering how important his teaching about Mary, the mother of God, has been to the intellectual development of the church even before his elevation to the papacy.

For one thing, he reminds us that the terminology "mother of God" is deliberate, and, contrary to some erroneous instruction outside the church, Mary is more than the mother of Jesus, the man.

The proper terminology underscores the significance of the Incarnation, for Mary is the new Eve, the mother of life as God had always intended humanity to be.

Much of the modern storyline about Mary involves dispute over her proper place. This Protestant/Catholic divide

Faith & Precedent

DOUGLAS W. KMIEC
CNS COLUMNIST

Christians that the Catholic understanding of that Gospel is this: As close as Mary was to Jesus, she was not God.

And if one born without sin is still dependent upon her creator, there is no question that we are even more so. Moreover, theological study should not understate the power of Mary to bring people to the faith.

Those of us who are privileged to live in communities where there is a large Hispanic presence know how moving the story of St. Juan Diego and Our Lady of Guadalupe is. Juan was on his way to Mass when Mary appeared to him outside Mexico City, asking that he build a church. His vision was understandably received skeptically by the local bishop until the humble worker's cloak opened.

The roses he had gathered for Mary left her miraculous image, an image that can still be seen today in the basilica standing at that spot. The Holy Father has much more to say about the role of Mary, and some well-meaning people urge that her significance now be recognized with the title of "co-redemptrix."

This is going to the opposite extreme from the Protestant objection, however. Understanding redemption to be the removal of sinful limitation as Christ enters into us and we into him, the use of a redemptive appellation for our mother would only obscure.

It would be, as Pope Benedict remarks, "a correct intention expressed in the wrong way." Mary is born without sin because God anticipated the need to prepare for Christ's entry into humanity. As wonderful as Mary is, neither she nor any of us without faith in Christ could perform that task.

Yes, Pope Benedict has thought deeply about Mary, and I believe she would affirm his simple and direct message — practice faith, hope and love. It is out of true love that we get beyond ourselves.

But love is only inspired by faith. And, of course, it is faith that gives us hope.

The Holy Father's visit gives us much to look forward to indeed.

Connections hurt, connections heal

Faith can help prepare hearts for such connections

Guest Column

TOM SHERIDAN
GUEST COLUMNIST

The call was chilling. It came from our son who graduated from Northern Illinois University a decade ago.

He'd heard the news driving home from work in Chicago. A brilliant but broken young man stepped onto a stage in a campus lecture hall and began shooting. A score of people were hit by shotgun and handgun. Tragically, five died. Then, just as tragically, he killed himself.

Our son seemed shaken by the news about his school, his campus. He knew the hall; he'd had classes there.

In a way, the shootings connected his past and present.

We too knew the school, had a connection. We watched with pride as he became a freshly minted business school graduate in a room not unlike the one that became a slaughterhouse.

Tragedy always seems worse when there's a connection.

I've been in the news biz a long time. I knew how the media — TV, radio, the papers, even the Internet — would react. There would be a rush of information and it would dominate the news cycle.

After all, the cliché is true: If it bleeds, it leads.

The connections we had to the campus, however tenuous, pushed me in a different direction. It is human nature after all to pay attention to those things which touch us closely.

A tragedy across the world may elicit expressions of sorrow and even donations. But the emotional tie truly develops when there is a personal connection.

Tragedy always seems worse when there's a connection.

Hurricane Katrina shattered lives and sundered communities. But when parishes hundreds of miles away began rebuilding homes, a deeper connection was made. And Katrina became more than just someone else's problem.

When refugees showed up homeless and penniless in towns and cities hundreds of miles away, often assisted by agencies like Catholic Charities, the connection was strengthened.

I was working for the Archdiocese of Chicago when Katrina refugees began drifting in. Their presence and stories gave a human dimension to the plight of hundreds of thousands. Parishioners saw them, spoke with them, poured out their hearts and opened their purses.

Tragedy always seems worse when there's a connection.

In another generation, Vietnamese families fleeing war were "adopted" by U.S. families and parishes, again many through Catholic Charities. The faces of war that had only appeared in flickering TV images became real.

Today more than ever society is linked by media. We are inundated by every event — a missing child in Arizona, a horrific accident in Florida, a murder in New York.

A generation or two ago these incidents, no matter how sad or violent, may never have made it into our homes and consciousness.

How much we and our world have changed! We are more connected though personal links that make the connection emotional rather than just vicarious.

When our son called about the shootings on his former campus, we too became a little more connected. We suffered a little more with the victims, shared sadness a little more with their parents, wondered a little more about the demons that finally overwhelmed the killer. And we appreciated a little more the anguish the shooter's estranged father suffered.

Tragedy always seems worse when there's a connection.

Faith can help prepare our hearts for such connections. Our parish communities where we have the opportunity to share stories of life and faith give us — if we let them — a taste of the connections we can have with the larger world around us. Call it the globalization of conscience.

should not be passed over lightly.

Relying on limited Marian reference in the Bible (in Matthew, for example, Mary is hardly mentioned), non-Catholics are greatly troubled by Catholic attention given to Mary.

They characterize it as encroaching upon reverence due Christ himself. This may be seen by Catholics as an odd argument that unnecessarily assumes that Christ would begrudge his mother respect. But how should we respond to this concern from our Protestant brothers and sisters?

One answer given by Pope Benedict is the Gospel story at Cana, where Christ directly responds to his mother's intercession. This is instructive of Mary's influence and naturally draws us to rely upon her in distressful moments to help bring her Son closer to our side.

Of course, there is a bit of surliness in Christ's voice in his initial answer to his mother: "Woman, how does your concern affect me?"

That vocal tone, while perhaps so familiar to mothers worldwide, is perplexing coming from the Son of God, and as the pope observes, presents "opportunities for reflection and comment." Nevertheless, it reveals in ways that should be reassuring to other

A solution to ego terrorism is pre-overdue

Behavior, beliefs must be changed in order to change culture

Ever since childhood one is conditioned to recognize that a librarian is not one to be ignored.

Thus an e-mail recently received from the public library demanded instant attention.

It also caught the eye with its title: "Pre-overdue Notice." The notice informed the library patron that a book checked out is due to be returned within a matter of days.

At one time, this might have been called a courtesy notice or even a warning notice, certainly too harsh a tone in our more mellow times.

When does a book evolve from being checked out to being pre-overdue?

Is "pre-overdue notice" similar to the airline term "pre-boarding," which makes one wonder when that process begins — at the time of making the reservation or leaving home for the airport?

Having fun with words, even renaming things can be amusing in some cases, but it can be dangerously deceptive too.

Consider the term "road rage" now settled too comfortably upon the communal consciousness.

One incident occurred on an interstate highway in a metropolitan area as two drivers pulled to the shoulder of the road to settle a dispute.

One driver was severely beaten by the other in the presence of his two children.

News accounts report incidents of "road rage" much as they might relate news of a hurricane, tornado or flood — as though it were an uncontrollable or unavoidable event.

One driver does not properly yield to another driver when entering the traffic stream or a driver fails to properly signal a lane change, infuriating the driver behind him.

The power to confer a name upon something can make it acceptable. The term "road rage" is inappropriate conduct that should be regarded as violence and assault.

Road rage is a criminal matter.

A society is made less than fully civilized not only by the major things, such as war and crime, but also by the "me first" attitude: I am the one to be served, and if I am not, I'll bang my car into yours.

Or worse, assault you.

Today there is a tendency to appoint task forces and commission studies, and to seek grants to solve problems.

But who doesn't already know it is wrong to assault someone on the highway by vehicle or by fist?

Laws cannot change attitude, only behavior. A law can never change the attitude of one who feels a particular racial group is inferior.

It can, however, directly change the behavior of one who acts out that attitude by lynching or by arson.

Laws cannot change the attitude of those who bridle at criticism of their driving practices.

They can, however, change the behavior of those who would fire a weapon into the passenger compartment of an offending vehicle.

Law and culture are inextricably linked, and Americans have the right to expect the law to uphold key aspects of the moral structure of their culture.

If culture is to shape law, what is there to instruct culture?

The responsibility to change the culture belongs properly to those who believe in transcendent values.

Christians can't wait for culture to change. We must live out the Gospel in our own lives.

The root cause of many problems in society is selfishness — one more example of rampant individualism infecting the common good.

Let's call it "ego terrorism." And a solution is long pre-overdue.

Pope discusses St. Augustine's conversion, influence on his life

The Pope Speaks

POPE
BENEDICT XVI

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Calling St. Augustine "one of the greatest converts in Christian history," Pope Benedict XVI said the writings of the North African bishop have had a huge influence on his life as a priest and theologian.

At his Feb. 27 general audience, the pope spoke of his "personal devotion and recognition before a figure to whom I feel very closely tied because of the part he played in my life as a theologian, priest and pastor."

In addition, the pope said both his 2006 encyclical, "Deus Caritas Est" ("God Is Love"), and his 2007 encyclical, "Spe Salvi" (on Christian hope), were influenced heavily by the work of St. Augustine.

Concluding a series of audience talks about the doctor of the church who lived from 354 to 430, Pope Benedict focused on what he said were the three stages in St. Augustine's conversion.

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

Today we conclude our presentation of St. Augustine with a discussion of the process of his interior conversion. In reading his Confessions, we see that his conversion was a life-long journey marked by a passionate search for truth.

Despite living an errant life as a young man, Augustine had learned from his mother a love for the name of Christ. Platonic philosophy led him to recognize the existence of Logos, or creative reason in the universe, which he later came to understand more fully by reading St. Paul and finding faith in Christ.

He completed this fundamental phase in his search for truth when he was baptized in Milan by St. Ambrose.

The second stage of his conversion saw Augustine return to Africa and found a small monastery with a group of friends dedicated to contemplation and study.

Three years later, he was ordained a priest and turned to the life of active ministry, placing the fruits of his study at the service of others through preaching and dialogue.

The last stage was a conversion of such profound humility that he would daily ask God for pardon. He also demonstrated this humility in his intellectual endeavors, submitting all his works to a thorough critique.

Augustine has had a profound effect on my own life and ministry. My hope is that we can all learn from this great and humble convert who saw with such clarity that Christ is truth and love!

College faculty whiners should quit whining

In response to "Controversial coverage" (Feb. 22) — As a student at Belmont Abbey College, I received an e-mail about how the health coverage for employees will not cover abortions and contraceptives.

To the instructors and faculty who have filed a lawsuit against the college I ask them: What is the big deal? If you do not want a baby, don't have sex.

And the college faculty should be thankful they have insurance, because a lot of companies do not carry insurance on their employees.

So instead of trying to force the college to give you something you really shouldn't need, be thankful that you have something many people do not have.

Trust in God, not government

Tony Magliano's Feb. 22 column ("Fasting for justice") is right out of the Communists hand book.

His comments — "As Catholic citizens we need to urge local, state and national public officials to permanently fast from indifference toward the poor and greatly increase funds for poverty reduction" — is so anti-Christian that I have a hard time keeping my cool.

Letters to the Editor

It is the church that needs to fast and pray about where the money given from the tithing should be best used. It is we — the members of the Body of Christ — who need to increase our tithing and trust the church to do the work of Christ.

It is not the responsibility of the government to do the work of Christ. Jesus did not say, "On this rock I will build my government."

The more we, as the church, abdicate our responsibilities, the less we can expect God to bless us. The church, we are told, is the "storehouse" — not the government.

The huge question for the church is — Who do we trust more? The Lord God, or the government?

— Joe Massi

More like socialist justice

I see that while still attacking the United States, Mr. Magliano is now a physiologist and nutritionist ("Fasting for justice," Feb. 22). And he still is using that phony argument about the U.S. government's per capita spending on developing countries.

I guess that is the way a socialist like he is thinks.

CHARLOTTE — Permanent deacons of the Diocese of Charlotte recently gathered to commit once again to their diaconate service in the church.

Bishop Jugis celebrated the deacons' annual recommitment Mass at St. Patrick Cathedral in Charlotte March 1.

During the ceremony, the deacons' wives also promised to support their husbands in their vocations to the church.

CHARLOTTE — Students, teachers, parents and friends gathered at St. Ann School Feb. 28 to pay tribute to a man they fondly refer to as "Mr. Gabe."

The celebration recognized Gabriel Tindal for 35 years of service as the school's maintenance engineer.

Tindal ranks high among the memories students cherish from their time at St. Ann School, according to Linda Cherry, superintendent of diocesan Catholic schools.

"He has been a positive member of the St. Ann School community for 35 years, as shared by parents, staff members and the children who passed through the doors," she said.

For the celebration, students donned Charlotte

THE HEALING TOUCH

Gayle Johnson massages the hand of a client at Sister Rosalind Gefre Schools and Clinics of Massage in Sauk Rapids, Minn., in 2007. Clients, upon arriving at the clinic, are given the option of checking "yes" for prayer on their health history forms so it can be part of their visit.

For Minnesota nun, the message is the massage

SAUK RAPIDS, Minn. (CNS) — Jennie Lewis calmly walked up to her next client, who lay covered in white sheets upon a raised table. Lewis asked the client if it was OK to pray with her. The client consented and the massage therapist began her prayer.

"Lord Jesus, I thank you for sending her in today. Father, I ask that you bless her with this massage," said Lewis.

"I ask you to help her to relax. Let your spirit come on to bring her peace. May she feel refreshed and rejuvenated. In the name of Jesus. Amen," she said.

Lewis is a massage therapist at the Sister Rosalind Gefre Schools and Clinics of Massage in Sauk Rapids. Clients upon arriving at the clinic are given the option of checking "yes" on their health history forms to request prayer.

For Sister Gefre, a Sister of St. Joseph of Carondelet who founded the school, massage and following Jesus' example go hand in hand — literally.

"When Jesus healed people, he touched them," she said.

Since beginning her ministry of massage 34 years ago at the YMCA in Fargo, N.D., Sister Gefre has incorporated prayer into healing.

"Prayer heals," she said.

She said she has seen many people become healed of their illnesses through massage, and she includes herself. She had chronic chest pain and received a massage; that's when she was introduced to the healing power of massage.

Her ministry continued to expand. There are now five Sister Rosalind Gefre Schools in Minnesota and North Dakota.

"I never intended to start any schools," she said. "I believe this ministry was not started by me — God was behind it."

Guiding the schools is a common mission: "To promote the healing of the body, mind and spirit through touch, following Jesus' example."

Throughout her work as a massage therapist, Sister Gefre has made it a practice to pray with the clients, as requested. On some days, seven or eight clients request prayer, and on other days no one does.

She also finds it notable that many people to whom she gave massages have remarked about the power of prayer.

"I hear that a lot — 'You prayed with me and I feel better,'" she said.

Prayer is incorporated into every class at her schools, and the students take 12 hours of a spirituality class in which they learn to pray aloud and reflect on how they have changed.

Sister Gefre said that most of the students are Christian, and their beliefs tend to become incorporated into their work.

"Clients are appreciative of the prayer," she said. "That someone takes the time to pray for them touches them."

Archbishop says it will be possible to display Padre Pio's body

SAN GIOVANNI ROTONDO, Italy (CNS) — Almost 40 years after his death, the body of St. Padre Pio shows uneven signs of decay, but can be treated in a way that will make it possible to place the body on display for the veneration of the faithful, the local archbishop said.

Archbishop Domenico D'Ambrosio, papal delegate for the saint's shrine in San Giovanni Rotondo, presided over the exhumation of the body March 2.

The archbishop said the exhumation and subsequent procedures would guarantee the "prolonged preservation of the body of our saint to allow generations to come the possibility of venerating and safeguarding his relics."

The archbishop said the body of the saint, who died Sept. 26, 1968, was in "fair condition," and the saint's hands were well preserved and "looked like they had just had a manicure."

The archbishop also said the saint's feet were clearly visible; the Capuchins traditionally are buried barefoot.

The Capuchins of San Giovanni Rotondo, who were represented at the exhumation, said the skull and parts of the upper body showed serious signs of decay, which was blamed on humidity in the coffin due to the fact that it had been placed in a new burial chamber and the masonry had not yet dried when Padre Pio was interred.

Padre Pio's remains have been moved to a room set up in the adjacent Capuchin convent where he lived for many years.

Technicians will use chemicals to prepare the body for long-term preservation.

The body will be placed in a new glass coffin and is scheduled to be in place for public viewing beginning April 24.

FROM THE VATICAN

Number of priests increases, but not as fast as number of Catholics

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The latest church statistics show that the number of priests and seminarians in the world continues to increase, but not as fast as the general Catholic population.

The statistics from the end of 2006 also confirm a gradual geographical shift in vocations from Europe and the Americas to Africa and Asia.

The sampling of statistics was released Feb. 29 in connection with the presentation of the 2008 edition of the Vatican yearbook, known as the Annuario Pontificio, which catalogs the church's presence in each diocese.

The Vatican said the global Catholic population increased during 2006 by 1.4 percent, from 1.115 billion to 1.131 billion.

The number of priests in the world also rose, but by 0.21 percent.

At the end of 2006 there were 407,262 priests in the world, 851 more than at the beginning of the year.

The ratio of Catholics to priests has increased steadily in recent decades. In 2006, it was 2,777 Catholics for every priest, while in 1981 it was 1,932 Catholics per priest.

The Vatican said the number of seminarians increased by 0.9 percent in 2006.

At the end of the year, there were 115,480 seminarians: 37,150 in the Americas; 30,702 in Asia; 24,034 in Africa; 22,618 in Europe; and 976 in Oceania.

African and Asian seminarians made up 47 percent of the global total. Twenty-five years ago, they represented 28 percent of the total.

Papal preacher: Church risks obscuring word of God with excess words

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The church today risks obscuring the word of God with too many useless words of its own, said the preacher of the papal household.

Capuchin Father Raniero Cantalamessa, in a Lenten meditation to Pope Benedict XVI and top Vatican officials Feb. 29, said preachers ought to focus more on the essential Gospel message and less on their own embellishments.

The "chatter" of the profane world has little to do with the church's mission, Father Cantalamessa said.

"Too many human words, too many useless words, too many speeches, too many documents," he said.

"In the age of mass communication, the church too risks sinking into the straw of useless words, pronounced just for the sake of saying them, written just because there are magazines and newspapers to fill," he said.

Father Cantalamessa said preachers would do well to stick to the "simple and plain word of God" rather than filter it through "a thousand distinctions and clarifications and additions and explanations."

These explanations may even be correct ones, but they end up weakening the impact of the Gospel in people's hearts, he said.

He said preachers should also be careful not to allow their talks to be exploited for political or partisan purposes.

When the preacher has no realistic chance of bringing his listeners to the point where he can say, "Convert and believe," then it's probably better just to witness the Gospel in silence, he said.

When writing sermons or similar talks, Father Cantalamessa said, preachers should leave room for divine stimulation. Rather than praying afterward, as if to ask God to bless their words, they should pray beforehand for inspiration, he said.

Clinton won about 54 percent of the Ohio vote in nearly complete returns.

Vatican, Muslim representatives establish Catholic-Muslim Forum

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Representatives of the Vatican and of the 138 Muslim scholars who wrote to Pope Benedict XVI last October proposing a new dialogue have established the Catholic-Muslim Forum.

The forum will sponsor a seminar in Rome Nov. 4-6 with 24 scholars from each side, according to a statement released at the end of a March 4-5 planning meeting at the Vatican.

Pope Benedict will meet with the seminar participants in November.

Accepting the central topic suggested by the 138 in their letter to the pope and other Christian leaders, the seminar planners have said the theme will be "Love of God, Love of Neighbor."

The Nov. 4 session will focus on the theological and spiritual foundations of Christian and Muslim teachings about the obligation to love God and one's neighbor. The second day will focus on "human dignity and mutual respect" and the third day will be a conference open to the public.

Vatican participants included: Cardinal Jean-Louis Tauran, Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue president; Msgr. Khaled Akasheh, of the council's section for Muslim relations; Comboni Father Miguel Guixot, Pontifical Institute for Arabic and Islamic Studies president; and Jesuit Father Christian Troll, professor of Islam at Rome's Pontifical Gregorian University.

Parents of six add school endowment to their will

Kernersville, the Lassiters view their contribution as a way to give back to the school in appreciation for the quality education their children are receiving.

"By leaving some charitable gift to the school, you are ensuring the educational future of not only your own children who benefited from it, but of the children to come," said Catherine Lassiter.

The Lassiters, who were instrumental in the effort to establish the endowment at St. Leo the Great School, said generosity is not about how much you give.

"It doesn't have to be some gigantic gift. Any kind of gift, when multiplied by many people or parishioners, will make the school very strong," said Catherine Lassiter.

Reynolds Lassiter added, "The key point is the importance of starting the endowment and everybody contributing to it."

The St. Leo the Great School Endowment Fund was established with the intention of providing financial assistance for the general needs of the school.

"It's just one more avenue for making the school financially secure for the future," said Catherine Lassiter.

Since its institution in 2005, the endowment has grown to nearly $112,000. For now, the interest is being rolled back into the endowment, but eventually the income will be used for scholarships and to help with general operating costs of the school.

"We try to encourage more people to consider remembering the parishes, schools, agencies and Catholic organizations of the diocese in their estate planning. As members of the Catholic Heritage Society, the Lassiters are two of more than 850 people who plan to remember the church in their estate," said Jim Kelley, director of the diocesan development office and director of the Foundation for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte.

"It is a way of living out another aspect of stewardship that allows individuals to leave legacies to what they value in life," he said.

The foundation is a non profit organization established to provide endowments for the diocese and its schools, agencies and organizations.

An endowment is a permanent fund placed in the diocesan foundation that earns income over time. The original amount is not spent, but the income can be used in a manner stipulated in the donor's estate plan or in an endowment agreement.

Once an endowment is established, anyone may add to the fund. A committee of three to five members is set up for each endowment to determine how funds will be distributed.

"I believe that any organization that doesn't have an endowment won't exist 10 years from now," said Reynolds Lassiter.

ABOUT THE FOUNDATION

Established in 1994, the Foundation for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Charlotte provides endowments for the diocese and its parishes, schools, agencies and organizations.

Over the past 13 years, more than $3.7 million has been made available for distribution by 165 endowments to parishes, schools and agencies in the diocese.

Confirmation candidates create 'Quilts of Love'

CHARLOTTE — Youths preparing for their first confirmation took part in a "Quilts of Love" service hours project at St. Vincent de Paul Church in Charlotte.

The 13 seventh- and eighth-grade confirmation candidates crafted 24 quilts during the project, which was held on Wednesdays from Jan. 16 to Feb. 13.

Father Mark Lawlor, pastor, blessed the quilts during Mass Feb. 23. The quilts then were distributed by the youths and volunteers to parishioners in area nursing homes and to shut-ins and long-term hospital patients.

At first, not all of the youths were excited about the concept of sewing — especially the boys, according to Peggy Gibbons, project coordinator.

"Still ... at the first session of the project, some brave males showed up to see what they could produce with a little time and talent," she said.

Ila Martin, an experienced quilter and parishioner, led a team of adult instructors to guide the youths, who went from knowing little about sewing to producing handmade works of art.

"As the students began to become more familiar with the sewing machines and techniques, less time was spent asking for assistance and greater focus went to layout, sewing and finishing techniques," said Gibbons.

"The designs and creativity of the students made the room each Wednesday night such an enthusiastic environment that even the adults began to show up one hour early each week," she said. "Parents who dropped their children off the first week or two began to stick around just to be part of each session."

Pearl Ann Kracke, a longtime parishioner, crocheted eight lap blankets to be distributed along with the quilts. Parish groups and volunteers provided food during the quilting sessions, and supplies for the project were donated.

"When the notice in the bulletin asked for materials and supplies, the phone started ringing with donations from as far away as Asheville," she said.

Many youths asked to return next year as teaching assistants for the project.

Deacons recommit to ministry at annual Mass

said Deacon Louis Pais, director of the permanent diaconate for the diocese.

In his homily, Bishop Jugis said he looks forward to celebrating the recommitment Mass with the deacons and their wives each year.

"The bonds of friendship in ministry are strengthened by our being together with the Lord," he said.

In the Catholic Church, the diaconate is the first of three ranks in ordained ministry.

From about the fifth century until the Second Vatican Council in the 1960s, it was used in the Latin rite almost exclusively to describe the final stage in preparation for ordination to the priesthood.

The council decreed that the diaconate also could be restored as a permanent and separate rank in the Latin rite and that married men could be ordained to this rank.

Pope Paul VI restored the permanent diaconate in 1967.

As ordained ministers, permanent deacons may perform baptisms, witness marriages and assist in various liturgies of the church.

In the Diocese of Charlotte, all active deacons also are required to participate in continuing education and an annual retreat. Like the priests, who recommit themselves to priestly service at the chrism Mass during Holy Week each year, the permanent deacons gather for a similar recommitment Mass.

During Lent, the entire Catholic Church is called to "deep, interior conversion and change of heart, to turn away from sin and unhealthy attachments," said Bishop Jugis.

"The ministry of the deacon requires this humility and interior conversion, also. There is no room in his heart for selfishness, but only for the Lord," said the bishop.

"By exercising his ministry with love, patience and understanding, the deacon shows a heart that has been given over to the Lord," said Bishop Jugis.

Rite of candidacy

At the recommitment Mass, Bishop Jugis received nine men as candidates to the permanent diaconate during the rite of candidacy.

"The Holy Spirit has been working in you, and now in this ceremony the love of Christ moves you to express openly your desire to be bound in Holy Orders for the service of God and humanity," said Bishop Jugis to the candidates.

Eight of the men are married. A permanent deacon is the only ordained man allowed to be married.

However, if a deacon's wife passes away, he is not allowed to remarry. If a deacon is single, he is not allowed to marry after ordination.

Bishop Jugis reminded the men what would be expected of them as deacons, and he encouraged them to continue their journeys to the permanent diaconate.

"Continue your formation for the diaconate in a spirit of openness, humility and faithfulness to Christ and his church. Grow in a spirit of prayer," Bishop Jugis told the candidates.

"Since you will one day be ordained as deacons for the ministry of the Word, desire even now to spread the Gospel and bring all people to Christ," said the bishop.

Other rites candidates will receive during the approximately six-year formation process are the rite of lector and the rite of acolyte.

Deacon Pais said candidates must possess a spirit of openness and prayer, humility, faithfulness to the teachings of Jesus and a willingness to spread the Gospel through word and actions.

"That is what the concept of the diaconate is all about," he said.

Deacon Pais celebrated his 30 years as a permanent deacon last May. Aside from his family, he said his greatest joy is being able to serve the people of God in the Diocese of Charlotte.

"I hope to continue serving the church in whatever capacity God gives me, in order to grow deeper in his love and to conform my life more closely to Jesus Christ," he said.

HISTORY OF THE DEACONS

A deacon is an ordained minister in the Catholic Church and is one of the three forms of the sacrament of holy orders, the origins of which can be found in the Acts of the Apostles.

In the Acts, the Greek converts complained the widows of their community were being neglected in the daily distribution of food. The Apostles appointed "seven reputable and spirit-filled men to administer the distribution of goods to the needy" (Acts 6:3). Thus, the Acts of the Apostles cites the ordination of St. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas of Antioch to the order of diaconate.

The diaconate flourished for the first several centuries until tensions between the diaconate and the presbyterate caused the diaconate to become only the final stage in preparation for the priesthood. The restoration of the permanent diaconate came with the Second Vatican Council in the 1960s. Thus, since 1967, there exists both a transitional diaconate and a permanent diaconate within the Catholic Church.

Mixing it up

Joint bake sale raises funds for hungry

CLEMMONS — Two women's groups worked — or more accurately, baked — together to raise funds for the hungry.

Members of the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Guild and Columbiettes Bishop Greco auxiliary held the "Great American Bake Sale" at Holy Family Church in Clemmons Feb. 2-3.

The sale raised $1,240 for area food pantries.

St. Elizabeth Ann Seton was the foundress of the Sisters of Charity religious order in the United States and established the parochial school system in this country.

The guild was the first parish group formed at Holy Family Church in 1978 and, at that time, handled all of the parish necessities, including spiritual needs, social functions and even housekeeping.

Most of these functions are handled currently by a variety of parish commissions.

The Columbiettes are the ladies auxiliary of the Knights of Columbus. The Bishop Greco auxiliary was formed in 1992, making it the first Columbiette auxiliary in North Carolina. About 75 women belong to the group today.

While Columbiettes help the Knights with numerous events, they have their own meetings, organize their own money and come up with their own projects.

The Columbiettes have given money to various causes, including Catholic Social Services, a women's shelter and Habitat for Humanity Inc.

Old traditions, new meanings

COURTESY PHOTO

Ann Michel teaches how to decorate "pysanky" eggs during a meeting of the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Guild at Holy Family Church in Clemmons Feb. 21. Michel, a local artist, has held pysanky egg workshops in churches throughout the area.

Pysanky, which means to write, is a Ukrainian tradition of applying layers of design to eggs by alternating wax and dyes. Using "kistkas" — a pencil-like tool with an attached copper cone — artists write their first layer of symbols with hot wax. The eggs are then dropped into a vat of dye. The wax prevents that color from covering the design. Subsequent designs are applied and the dye process continues. A coat of varnish protects and helps preserve the finished egg.

According to custom, the decorated eggs are usually intended as a gift for another. Legend states that every egg written helps foster peace in the world and negates the influences of evil.

Knights honor youth with scholarship

KERNERSVILLE — Knights of Columbus Council 8509 at Holy Cross Church in Kernersville recently presented a scholarship to a young member of the parish.

The Staddon-Cain Scholarship Award was presented to Nicole Thomas during a fish fry fundraising dinner Feb. 15.

Tony Belline council chancellor, presented this year's $500 award.

The scholarship fund is to perpetuate the education of young individuals in the Catholic faith. Candidates are considered based on their academic achievements as well as community- and church-related accomplishments.

Nicole is home-schooled and also takes classes at Forsyth Tech Community College in Winston-Salem.

"She is a very energetic young woman who is involved in many parish events, willingly giving of her time to religious ministries," said Fred Hogan, a Knight.

Nicole also received the Knights' outstanding Catholic youth award for 2007.

The Staddon-Cain scholarship is named after John Staddon and Frank Cain, two men who married Catholic wives and supported the Catholic Church and its teachings.

The annual award was first presented by the Knights in 1987.

Vatican says baptism using wrong words not valid

regarding the validity of baptisms using that formula.

Asked whether a baptism performed with that formula — or a similar one referring to the "Creator, Liberator and Sustainer" — would be valid, the congregation answered "Negative."

Asked whether people who were initiated with a rite using these formulas would now need to be baptized "in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," the congregation answered "Affirmative."

The congregation said Pope Benedict XVI "approved these responses" and ordered their publication.

If either formula — recently initiated in North America to avoid referring to the Trinity with masculine names — was used, the person is not yet formally a Christian and any subsequent sacraments the person received also are invalid, said Cardinal Urbano Navarrete in a commentary commissioned by the doctrinal congregation.

"Persons who were baptized or will be baptized in the future with the formulas in question in reality are not baptized," the cardinal wrote.

If they are now adults and want to be baptized, they must receive the instruction prescribed for all preparing for baptism and they should receive baptism, confirmation and the Eucharist during the same Mass, he said.

The most serious practical consequences, he said, are likely to be seen in the area of marriage where no sacrament exists if both spouses had been baptized with an invalid formula.

Even if only one of the spouses had been baptized with an invalid formula, there still is no valid sacrament of matrimony unless before the wedding the couple had obtained the dispensation needed for a marriage between a Catholic and a non-Christian, the cardinal said.

Cardinal Navarrete also said that, obviously, confirmation and holy orders also are invalid when conferred on people baptized with an invalid formula.

In addition, he said, anyone who attempted to baptize someone using an invalid formula is subject to church penalties, which should be applied since it is "seriously illegitimate and unjust to deceive both the baptized and the community" by presenting the rite as a baptism.

In a separate commentary also commissioned by the doctrinal congregation, Msgr. Antonio Miralles said "expressions that invalidate the conferral of a true baptism cannot be tolerated by the church."

The monsignor, a consultant to the doctrinal congregation, said the church believes it has no authority "to change that which Christ himself instituted" when he told his disciples to go out and baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

The problem with using "creator" and "redeemer" is not that they do not identify God as male, but that they "subvert faith in the Trinity" because they do not make clear the relationship among the three distinct persons, he said.

For example, "God is eternally Father in relation to his only begotten Son, who is not eternally Son except in relation to the Father."

Msgr. Miralles said that the formula "creator, redeemer, sanctifier" is not Trinitarian because it blurs the distinctions among the three persons of the Trinity who all are involved together in the divine actions of creation, redemption and sanctification.

The monsignor also argued that the use of the recent formulas — more common among Protestants than among Catholics — could have a negative impact on ecumenism, because a common baptism is essential for Christian unity.

A baptism recognized as valid by all dialogue partners is what allows them to call each other Christians, he said.

"All of us Christians are called to remain solidly faithful to the unity," which calls for a common profession of "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all," he said.

U.S. officials: Vatican statement clarifies validity of baptisms

BY REGINA LINSKEY
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Doctrinal and ecumenical officials at the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops said the release of a Vatican statement addressing the validity of baptisms was to answer bishops' questions and to provide consistency in the church's practice.

"I think if you are over the age of 45 to 50 you have nothing to fear" regarding the validity of baptisms, said Father Tom Weinandy, a Capuchin Franciscan who is executive director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat of Doctrine.

Those in the younger generation shouldn't "have a huge amount of fear" either, he added.

According to the statement released by the Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith Feb. 29, a baptism administered "in the name of the Creator, and of the Redeemer and of the Sanctifier" or formulas that do not say "in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" is not a baptism at all. If the baptism is invalid, so are the other sacraments the person may have received, such as matrimony.

"If you are not validly baptized," and thus not validly married, "a person needs to get rebaptized and remarried," explained Father Weinandy.

However, unless a witness at the baptism knows that an incorrect formula was used, "it is assumed they used the right formula," he said. "The presumption is the obvious truth that the baptism is valid."

The Vatican's statement was released "because of the abuse (by priests and Protestant ministers at baptisms) and the questions that have come from it," said Father Weinandy.

The Vatican "wants to make sure the formula is the proper formula," he said Feb. 29. Instances in which a baptism has been considered invalid have been "very, very, very few and far between," he said.

Father Francis Tiso, associate director of the U.S. bishops' Secretariat of Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs, referred to a 1993 document issued by the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity that addressed a similar issue.

The "Directory for the Application of Principles and Norms on Ecumenism" says: "Baptism is conferred with water and with a formula which clearly indicates that baptism is done in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit."

"It is therefore of the utmost importance for all the disciples of Christ that baptism be administered in this manner by all and that the various churches and ecclesial communities arrive as closely as possible at an agreement about its significance and celebration," it notes.

Father Tiso said the Feb. 29 Vatican clarification simply says that a person has to be rebaptized if the original baptism was not administered in such a manner.

The only real change he can predict from the Vatican's most recent clarification is that some Christian leaders would be concerned over recognizing their own local congregations' decisions and autonomy over the formula they use at baptisms. Because many non-Catholic denominations do not have a hierarchical structure like the Catholic Church, many decisions on such matters are determined by local congregations.

But, he said, the Vatican's statement will "help ecumenical leaders make the case to local leaders to follow the biblical formulas" and that this decision will have a broader impact.

Father Tiso said he currently is working on a document with four of the Reformed churches, which should be finalized in mid-March. The document includes an affirmation for baptisms to be mutually accepted by the Catholic and Reformed churches that include the use of water and the biblical formula "Father, Son and Holy Spirit."

Paulist Father Ronald Roberson, whose work focuses on relations with the Orthodox churches said "there's no disagreement whatsoever with the Orthodox churches" on the subject of the formula and validity of baptisms.

DID YOU KNOW?

Baptism is one of the three sacraments of initiation (along with confirmation and the Eucharist). The rite of baptism varies — it can be conferred either by immersion in water or by the pouring of water in Catholic teaching and practice.

The "Directory for the Application of Principles and Norms on Ecumenism," a 1993 document by the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, said: "Baptism is conferred with water and with a formula which clearly indicates that baptism is done in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit."

Maintaining 'a proactive presence'

*Pope's visit to U.N.
'eagerly awaited,'
says Vatican nuncio*

BY JULIE ASHER
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Pope Benedict XVI's April 18 visit to the United Nations "is eagerly awaited because the pope is seen as a moral authority offering clear guidance on the foundational values of life and of human society," said the Vatican's U.N. ambassador.

"In this sense the pope is considered an authority able to interpret and rally political will to work for the good of the international community," said Archbishop Celestino Migliore, the ambassador, or nuncio.

The archbishop spoke to Catholic News Service at the headquarters of the Permanent Observer Mission of the Holy See in New York.

Pope Benedict will address the U.N. General Assembly the morning of April 18, after a brief flight from Washington, where he arrives April 15. He returns to Rome the evening of April 20.

Asked how U.N. member nations regard the Catholic Church, Archbishop Migliore said they respect the church's "contribution to keep alive, nurture and refresh the dimension of spirituality and transcendence, without which our society would fall apart."

Because of the church's "strong message of universal brotherhood, reconciliation and closeness to the people," countries look to the church "for dialogue and cooperation on development," he added.

U.N. agencies, funds and programs concerned with education, development, humanitarian assistance, peacekeeping and advocacy on human rights, he said, "work very closely with the local churches ... even in the farthest corners of the world."

He said it is appropriate that the Catholic Church, which has diplomatic relations with 177 countries, maintains "a proactive presence" at the United Nations "to help shape the debate and the decisions, especially on fundamental values like life and freedom, justice and peace, coexistence and the well-being of the world population."

Among issues to be tackled this year by the United Nations, the one the church is most concerned about is addressing the needs of the world's 1 billion people "left behind by global economic growth," Archbishop Migliore said. They are "the forgotten ones."

In outlining priorities for 2008, U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon has committed the United Nations to helping make the world "more prosperous and healthy" and has proposed that the U.N. make it the year of the "bottom billion," the archbishop said.

The United Nations also has "to stay the course in many old and new situations of conflict, of fragile peace," and where the "early symptoms of gross violations of human rights" are emerging, the archbishop said.

It takes "a strong political will" and "a sensitivity ... to fundamental human values" to make decisions and implement mechanisms that "effectively work for the common good, the practice of a culture of peace, and a firm commitment to the responsibility to protect," he said.

'An indispensable forum'

Currently 192 U.N. member states make up the General Assembly, the main deliberative U.N. body. Various organs of the United Nations make recommendations to member governments, but under the U.N. Charter only the Security Council has the power to make decisions member governments must carry out.

The council has five permanent seats, held by China, France, Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States, and 10 temporary seats that rotate among other countries every two years. Permanent members can veto resolutions.

Critics of the council say it seems unable to act decisively when confronted with a crisis.

Regarding the criticism, Archbishop Migliore said he gets "terribly frustrated and critical when I see that the U.N. cannot devise or put in place an effective mechanism to prevent, stop or reverse situations of gross violations of human rights." But he said his frustration is really aimed at mechanisms countries will not change so they can "preserve certain interests or maintain a balance of power" rather than respond "to the real demands of the peoples of the world."

The United Nations is "an indispensable forum," he added.

Among its accomplishments, the archbishop said, are treaties and conventions — including those on the rights of children, the disabled, and migrants and refugees — that are "vital, legally binding instruments in assuring respect for human dignity and rights."

He said its International Criminal Court and special tribunals have helped to "restore trust in justice and stop or deter impunity" in regions or countries "marked by wars and massacres."

He also noted U.N. humanitarian assistance to countries suffering man-made and natural calamities and efforts to fight HIV/AIDS.

And while frustrations exist in the area of disarmament, he said the United Nations has made progress destroying stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons and preventing weapons of mass destruction from falling into the hands of terrorists and others.

Peacekeeping operations are "the apple of the eye of the U.N.," he said.

They have not always succeeded — and "a few times may have failed miserably" — but U.N. peacekeeping efforts have kept tensions in many places "from becoming full-blown armed conflicts or stopped armed conflicts or massive violations of human rights and restored peace and the rule of law."

Unity over conflict

As a permanent observer to the United Nations, the Vatican cannot vote, but Archbishop Migliore said it closely follows and actively participates in negotiations on conventions, resolutions or decisions about peace and security; development; the environment; the rights of children, women and the elderly; human rights; information and culture; and peace-building.

"We plead for and try to advance innumerable humanitarian causes brought to our attention," he added.

However, he said his most "important daily activity takes place very early in the morning," when he celebrates Mass: "Daily meditation on the word of God sheds light on the questions of the day."

"At the initial rite of reconciliation, I bring before the Lord my sins and those of the U.N. family in its slow response that penalizes the poor, in its verbosity, in its smoke-screening and delaying tactics during certain debates that result in nonaction ..." Archbishop Migliore said.

"The miracle worked by Jesus does not stop at the transformation of bread into his body, but extends to the church and to the entire human family," he said. It is "a lesson of humility and tenacity ... because conflicts are always with us, but unity is created" by Christ, he added.

An analysis of faith professions inside the Oval Office

REVIEWED BY MARY BRESLIN
CATHOLIC NEWS SERVICE

In a charged environment where presidential primary hopefuls such as Mitt Romney, a Mormon, and Mike Huckabee, an ordained Baptist minister, acknowledge their religious beliefs while at the same time making it plain that for them church and state are sacred but separate entities, Randall Balmer's book, "God in the White House: A History"—an examination of U.S. presidents' responses and reactions to religion from 1960 to 2004—is a timely release.

To read this book, begin with the 50 pages that make up the appendix and read the seven speeches from Presidents John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan, Bill Clinton and George W. Bush.

The challenge will be to sort through the spin of a good speechwriter and search for a sense of heartfelt sincerity on the part of the men who delivered the words. The section is pivotal, providing authentic historical context and stimulating the reader's interest at the same time.

Referring to himself as "an evangelical Christian," Balmer is a prolific writer and far from a novice on the topic; he is a professor of American religious history at New York's Columbia University.
